I now say to this House that all of the valuable coal lands about which we have had so much controversy, especially the Katalla field—the most valuable, and in which the Cunningham claims are located—have been sold by the United States and the equitable title conveyed to the purchaser.

Alfred H. Brooks, Chief of the Alaska Division of the Geological Survey, stated before the Committee on the Public Lands that there were but 40 square miles in each field—in the Matanuska and Katalla fields. More than that area has now been located in the Katalla field, while the Matanuska field has been located so far that it is controlled thereby.

Since the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation began last January at least 100, or possibly 150, coal claims have been proved up on, the proofs approved, and the receipts issued conveying the equitable title in the Katalla field alone. The Government has nothing left to lease in either of these valuable fields.

Mr. Speaker, I object to the whole of section 2 of this bill. The first provision in it gives the Secretary of the Interior the right to grant licenses by favor. The second sentence authorizes him to grant a license to prospect 3,200 acres and the right to lease 2,560 acres. These areas are too great and are too easily granted by favor to whomsoever the Secretary wishes. The section also permits the issuance of a prospecting permit for three years, upon the payment of 25 cents per acre for the first year, 50 cents per acre for the second year, and $1 per acre for the third year, while it does not compel this favored licensee of the Secretary to perform any labor whatever. Upon the payment of these small nominal fees he may reserve the lands without doing a stroke of work for three years. This matter was called to the attention of the committee, and I am now permitted to assume that they now approve this defect. It would place it in the power of the favored licensee of the Secretary, be he an Alaska syndicate agent or that of any other interest, to withhold this land from mining for three years under the license.

The bill then provides that this favored licensee may take a lease from the Government, paying a rental of 25 cents per acre for the first year, 50 cents for the second year, and not less than $1 and not more than $4 per acre for each succeeding year. He may reserve the lands by paying this rental for years thereafter and until the Secretary shall bring a lawsuit to compel him to perform the covenants of the lease.

If any interest—not charging that the Coal Trust would do anything of the kind, of course—should desire to reserve these lands from actual development, it could be done in this way at nominal rates. Under this bill the Government surrenders the control of its coal lands to the favored licensee of the Secretary.

Section 2 provides that "all leases shall be granted for such period as the lessee shall designate, but in no event for more than 30 years." This clause gives the power to the lessee and robs the Government of the control over its own property. I quote it to show that the whole purpose of this bill is to put the coal lands in Alaska in the hands of the favored licensee of the Secretary and to tie the hands of the Government in their management and disposal.

The real joker in this bill, however, is contained in those clauses fixing the rates of royalty. They read as follows:

> All lessees shall pay a royalty on each ton, of 2,000 pounds, of coal mined, as follows: From the passage of this act until the end of the calendar year 1920, not less than 3 cents nor more than 6 cents per ton; for the succeeding 10 years, not less than 5 cents nor more than 8 cents per ton; for the succeeding 10 years, not less than 5 cents nor more than 10 cents per ton; and thereafter as Congress may provide.

It will be noticed that there is no power referred to which shall fix the exact royalty to be paid. Suppose the Guggenheims take a lease, shall they pay 3 cents or 6 cents per ton? Here, again, the Secretary is able to favor his friends. I do not say that he will, but under this clause he may demand 6 cents per ton from me, while he may grant a lease to a favored licensee at 3 cents.

This may not seem at first glance to be very important, but I call your attention to this fact: In the optional contract made by the Cunningham claimants to Daniel Guggenheim on July 20, 1907, and thereafter accepted by the said Guggenheim, it is provided that the Cunningham claimants will sell to Guggenheim coal for his railroad use at $1.75 per ton. Mr. Stephen Birch, the managing director of the Alaska syndicate, testified that the coal could be mined for that price. The contract further provides that for all the run-of-mine coal extracted by the Cunningham claimants for 25 years Guggenheim would pay $2.25 per ton. Call this a profit or royalty, whichever you will, it shows clearly that the Cunninghams were to get 50 cents per ton for the coal over the cost price.

The bill in question provides that the Government shall not charge more than 6 cents per ton, and the Secretary may lease it at 3 cents per ton. Let us call it 5 cents per ton on a fair compromise.

Mr. Andrew Kennedy, the Government expert who examined the Cunningham claims, testified that there were 90,000,000 tons of coal in the Cunningham group, for which Guggenheim agreed to pay the Cunninghams 50 cents per ton profit or royalty. That would amount to $45,000,000 under that actual contract. Under the bill before the House the Secretary may lease it to a favored licensee for a royalty of 3 cents per ton, or $2,700,000.

Here is an actual difference of $42,300,000. In short, this bill proposes to lease these very lands, possibly to the Alaska syndicate, or to its representatives, at $42,300,000 less than the syndicate actually agreed to pay the Cunninghams for it.

It is not surprising that great interest is taken in this bill. But, it is replied, we do not want to demand a high royalty, because the consumer of the coal must eventually pay the price, and that leads to an inquiry: What is there in this bill which will enable the Government of the United States to give the consumer of the coal relief against extortionate prices and monopoly? In my judgment, nothing.

True, section 6 provides "that he shall not monopolize in whole or in part the trade in coal. That he will at all times sell the coal extracted from the leased premises at just, fair, and reasonable rates," etc.

But there is no forfeiture clause. There is no penalty which can be inflicted upon him if he shall not obey this kindly suggestion to be good. The old law of supply and demand will be appealed to, and the consumer in Washington, Oregon, or California will pay a price equal to that which other coal can be bought for in the market. The consumer will get nothing, while the lessee and the transportation companies will get the balance of the royalty over the 3 cents that Guggenheim agreed to pay the Cunninghams.

I can not help but call the attention of the House to that clause in section 4, which provides that in the issuance of licenses and leases by the Secretary, "preference shall be given to the qualified applicant who shall show prior possession, with a view of acquiring title to coal lands." This is an insurance clause in favor of every fraudulent claim in Alaska. It gives to every fraudulent claimant a preference right over an honest applicant. With this clause in the bill every thief of coal lands in Alaska may get his patent from the Government if he can, and a license and a lease under the bill if he is caught in his thievery. This section gives a premium to the dishonest coal claimant and condemns the bill thereby.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill upon principle. Alaska has been in a state of reservation and has had its most valuable resources reserved and leased since the first great Russian lease in 1799.

It was leased to the Russian American Co. until 1867, when we purchased it. In 1870 the United States again leased its only known resource for 40 years, during the last 20 years of which the Government made losses on that leasing of more than $2,500,000. I am opposed to the national landlord leasing scheme for Alaska.

It is proposed by the bill now under discussion to turn 75 per cent of the royalty obtained from these leases over to the Alaska fund for use in building roads in Alaska; but since there is nothing to lease, the fund will get very little from that source.

This bill is in the interest of the speculator and coal baron. The laboring man in Alaska who wants to prospect for coal will not be able to manage 3,200 acres of land, even if he could get a favored license from the Secretary upon payment of the fees. Such men will be excluded from developing Alaska. If the bill shall pass, coal speculators will have charge of the exploitation of Alaska coal lands and the real prospector and pathfinder in Alaska will be driven into new regions.

The bill before the House is in direct opposition to the recommendations of the President contained in his last message to the Congress. The President specifically recommended a coal-leasing plan for Alaska, as follows:

> Second, that the coal deposits of the Government be leased after advertisement inviting competitive bids for terms not exceeding 50 years, with a minimum rental and royalties upon the coal mined, to be readjusted every 10 or 12 years, and with conditions as to maintenance which will secure proper mining, and as to assignment which will prevent combinations to monopolize control of the coal in any one district or market. I do not think that coal measures under 2,500 acres of surface would be too large an amount to lease to any one lessee.

In my statement, presented to the committee which prepared this bill, I made the following suggestions for amendment, in case the committee determined to report a coal-leasing bill:

> If Congress concludes that it will pass a leasing bill, then amend the bill in accordance with President Taft's message.
> While I am opposed to a leasing system on principle, it is my judgment that the President's recommendations are the best made and will come nearest doing justice. Let the bill provide for—
> 1. Minimum royalty rates.
> 2. But not maximum rates.
> 3. Then let the lease be offered to competitive bidding.

4. And sold to the highest and best bidder.
5. The lease to provide for readjusted rates every 10 years, so that the Government may secure the benefit of the increase in prices.
6. Extend the interstate-commerce laws to Alaska.
7. Control rates of transportation to ports of the United States and to foreign ports.
8. Reserve the right in the patent to control monopoly and excessive selling prices of coal mined in Alaska.
9. Control the rates of storage on coal mined in Alaska.
10. Adopt an official standard of classification of coals.
11. Charge a graduated royalty based on the character and value of the coal, assuming as the minimum for the highest grades the price agreed upon by Guggenheim-Cunningham contract of July 7, 1906, viz, 50 cents per ton.
12. Pay all money received from rental and royalty into an "Alaska coal fund" and appropriate it to the development of Alaska, as follows: One-fifth to the building of wagon roads, one-fifth to the support of common schools, two-fifths to the building and maintenance of a university or college at some suitable place in the Territory, and the other one-fifth to the establishment and maintenance of a home for aged, disabled, and dependent prospectors, and the care of aged, sick, disabled, or indigent persons in the Territory.

I was asked by the committee to state my view upon what ought to be done in respect to coal lands in Alaska. I replied that they ought to report for passage the bill H. R. 30293, introduced by me on January 5, 1911, with an amendment.

The bill is as follows:

A bill to reserve to the United States the right and power to fix, control, and regulate the rates, prices, and profits to be charged upon coal mined in Alaska, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States reserves the right and power to fix, control, and regulate the rates, prices, and profits which any person, corporation, mine owner, or coal dealer, and any and all other persons or corporations, shall charge or demand upon the sale, exchange, dealing in, storage, or transportation of coal mined in Alaska; and that the United States reserves the right to regulate, control, suppress, and punish monopolies, conspiracies, and combinations in buying, selling, dealing in, storing, transporting, or otherwise handling such coal; the United States may authorize any State created out of any part of Alaska to exercise the rights and powers herein reserved for all such lands as lie within the boundaries of such State; that every patent issued by the United States for coal lands in Alaska, whether for lands located or entered prior to the passage and approval of this act or subsequent thereto, shall expressly recite the terms and conditions contained in this section.

SEC. 2. That upon the passage and approval of this act every Executive or other withdrawal or reservation of coal lands in Alaska, for any purpose whatever, shall be void and of no effect.

The proposed amendment was the insertion of the following language:

That the right to control the rate of transportation shall extend to carriage by sea from any port in Alaska to any port in the United States or in any foreign country.

That bill, as thus amended, taken in connection with the Alaska coal act of May 28, 1908, would give the United States control of the rates at which the consumer got the coal. It was my judgment, and is now, that the United States has authority to control the coal until it gets to the consumer, although patent may issue to the purchaser of the land.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the United States assuming to act as a national landlord. I am opposed to the people of Alaska being degraded to the status of tenants upon the estate of the coal-baron lessee. The Territory of Alaska would have no right to tax this immense wealth, the tenant would have no home, and would be a mere renter upon the landlord's estate. Even if this bill were fair, which it is not, I am opposed to any system which takes from the people the lands which they ought to have for the purpose of the development of the Territory.

Certainly, Congress will not admit that it is powerless to make and enforce good, wholesome, and righteous laws for the disposal of coal lands in Alaska.

What we need in Alaska is enforcement, and not enactment. We have good laws, but they are not enforced. For more than two years there has been law, and power, and appropriation, and Alaska coal cases at issue, and evidence, and a Secretary of the Interior whose duty it was to decide those cases under his oath of office—but not a decision.

The Constitution declares that the President "shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed." What Alaska needs is "execution," not enactment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, is the time exhausted on the other side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are five minutes remaining.

Mr. MADISON. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is manifestly impossible, Mr. Speaker, to discuss this bill in two minutes or in the entire time permitted under suspension of the rules.

The objection which the people of this country have had to the manner of disposal of the coal lands can not be as to the character of the law, because a law was enacted under the influence of Mr. Roosevelt, assisted by certain Members of this House, which was generally regarded as a wise law and satisfactory for all purposes as to preventing monopoly. What the people of this country do object to and the cause of the demand to-day for a leasing system of coal lands in Alaska, is the attempt which has been made to evade the law and to establish a monopoly of the coal lands in Alaska. The people are little concerned whether the lands are disposed of by patents of a fee-simple title or whether they are disposed of under a lease, unless there are such restrictions in either case or under either system which will prevent these deposits of coal—which the people of the Northwest especially must rely upon—from being controlled by a few people or by a single corporation. The present situation, Mr. Speaker, in regard to the coal lands of Alaska arises out of a denial that the Secretary of the Interior has been fair in dealing with this matter. It grows out of the assertion that the Secretary of the Interior during the interval between his term of office as Commissioner of the General Land Office and his term as Secretary of the Interior was attorney for the principal claimants for coal lands in Alaska, and that ought to be sufficient to defeat the bill. Instead of taking authority away from him, it leaves the Secretary of the Interior absolute discretion to say who shall lease and shall not lease the coal lands of Alaska.

Mr. MADISON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to take up the time of the House at this time, and I am only going to speak for a moment or two. If this bill had been brought in under the ordinary rules of the House and had been subject to amendment, we could by a very few amendments have perfected it and passed it in this House.

I disagree with many of the gentlemen who have spoken against this bill in regard to the amount charged for this coal. The higher you raise the price the more will the people who use the coal have to pay for it. If you raise the royalty up to 50 cents or $1 a ton, you are charging that royalty against the people who are going to use the coal.

Mr. MANN. They have lots of money out there in the far West and they can afford it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORSE. I do not believe it. I believe that the royalties provided in this bill are high enough. I do not believe they should be high. I believe that the Government should supervise the sale of the coal from the beginning away down to the last limit—to the ultimate consumer.

Mr. JAMES. Then that argument, carried to its last analysis, means that we ought to give the coal fields away.

Mr. MORSE. No. There is not so much objection to giving the coal fields away if you can give them to the people of the country.

Mr. JAMES. To what people?

Mr. MORSE. If you are going to give the coal fields of the country to two or three, there is an objection. If you are going to give them to the ultimate consumers, the men who burn the coal, then the objection is not so serious.

Mr. JAMES. Is it the experience of the gentleman that where you give to an individual something like a body of coal lands that he is generous enough to allot them out to the people who buy the coal?

Mr. MORSE. No; and that is the objection I find to this bill. You will find in section 6 the most serious difficulty in the whole bill. It says that this coal shall be sold to the people and delivered, and then it says "under like conditions," or "under similar terms and conditions." There is one of the great difficulties of the bill. If one man goes there and buys 100,000 or 500,000 tons of coal, and another man does not want as much as that, he naturally will not be able to meet the terms and conditions accorded to the large purchaser, and he may not be able to buy.

I agree in general with what is proposed to be accomplished by this bill, but it does not accomplish what it attempts to do on its face. The trouble with the bill is that the supervision does not go far enough. That is the trouble with the bill. I believe in leasing. I believe that is the proper method. I do not believe there is any use in charging too much for it, but it has been the middle man who heretofore has gotten the advantage of the ultimate consumer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I very much regret that, owing to the fact that I answered a good many questions at the beginning of the debate, I have no time left to give to the members of the committee who desire to speak in defense of the bill. The bill represents a great deal of earnest work and earnest endeavor to settle the coal situation in Alaska, to provide leasing legislation that will bring good returns to the people, and which will retain under the control of the people the sale and the disposition of the products of the coal lands.

Somebody has suggested that it is giving away the coal fields. Gentlemen, if this bill is defeated, the $10 per acre price remains and the Matanuska and Katalla fields would be sold for about $560,000. If the bill passes, under the average royalty of 5 cents and the estimated tonnage of those fields by the Geological Survey of 6,000,000,000 tons, the Government will receive $30,000,000 under this bill. Mr. Chairman, this bill makes the difference between $560,000 and from $30,000,000 to $60,000,000 in those two fields. And yet some gentlemen have suggested that we are proposing to give away these coal fields.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How does the gentleman——

Mr. MONDELL. It is provided that the Government shall have the right to take this coal wherever it is found for the use of the Army and the Navy of the United States, and to pay such a price for it as the Government deems to be fair.

Mr. MADISON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MONDELL. I have only five minutes.

Mr. MADISON. I yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to.

Mr. MADISON. Is it not true that every foot of coal land in Alaska is now withdrawn from entry?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Alaska estimated in his statement before the committee that there were 60,000 square miles of coal-bearing lands in Alaska—that is, nearly 40,000,000 acres—and all of the entries made up to this time cover only an area of 32,000 acres; and if they were, all of them, held to be legal and all of them went to patent it would be but an insignificant fraction of the enormous fields of that great area. We have attempted in good faith to provide for the disposition of these coal lands. We have placed no discretion whatever in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, except as we must, to adjust between rival, or, rather, overlapping applicants. We have plainly stated in the bill what are the rights of American citizens there, and those rights must be respected by the Secretary, and they must be granted.

It is true that we have placed what some people believe to be a low royalty, and yet it is a higher royalty than prevails generally anywhere in America, and it is a royalty which, in the aggregate, if the estimates of these two fields are correct, would bring to the Government, at an average of 5 cents a ton, $30,000,000, or at the maximum $60,000,000; and every one of those leases can be canceled upon a showing that the lessee is attempting to monopolize the trade in coal in whole or in part; that he is charging an unfair or an unreasonable price; that he is attempting in anyway to discriminate between persons or places. There never was a law brought into this House that so safeguarded the rights and interests of the American people as this bill. I regret that we could not bring it in with an opportunity for amendment. The committee would greatly prefer that it should be open to amendment, but the only opportunity offered us was to bring it in in this way, and I want to say to the membership of the House that I have no pride of opinion in this bill, although I drafted it originally, and gave a good deal of thought and time and attention to it; that our committee does not insist that the House shall take this bill, but we present it as an honest, conscientious, earnest effort at true conservation, an effort to make it possible to develop those great coal fields for the use of the people of the Pacific coast, for the use of the Army and the Navy and the people of the United States; to make it possible to obtain from these fields large incomes for the development of Alaska, and to retain those fields for all time to come under the control of the Government of the United States under conditions that will maintain fair prices and will prevent monopoly. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MADISON] yield me a moment to explain that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is wrong in stating that 5 cents a ton on coal is a higher royalty than is paid elsewhere in America? The Indians of Oklahoma are receiving a royalty of 8 cents a ton and $900 for each lease in advance and $300 per annum thereafter, and their leases are limited to 960 acres.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays to save time.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 32, nays 151, answered "present" 10, not voting 191, as follows:

So (two-thirds having failed to vote therefor) the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was lost.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. BORLAND.

Mr. HAYES with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. DRAPER with Mr. WEBB.

Mr. MOXLEY with Mr. BARNHART.

For the balance of the day:

Mr. NEEDHAM with Mr. HULL of Tennessee.

Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. HENRY of Texas.

Mr. PRATT with Mr. BURLESON.

From February 21 to February 28, inclusive:

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma with Mr. FERRIS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore noted the presence of Mr. CANNON, Mr. DICKSON of Mississippi, Mr. JAMIESON, and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, and they voted as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Upon this yea-and-nay vote the roll was called and then the names of those failing to respond were again called in alphabetical order. Less than a quorum having answered, the Chair is authorized by clause 3 of Rule XV to cause Members in the Hall who did not vote to be noted as "present." Under clause 1 of the same rule a Member whose name has thus been noted under clause 3 may then vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 24, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War, submitting a recommendation of credits to the accounts of Lieut. Col. D. E. McCarthy and Capt. F. A. Grant (H. Doc. No. 1406), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not intend to object, but I wish to call attention at this time to an omission. I do not know that it would appear in the Journal anyway, but yesterday I gave notice, as the RECORD shows, that I would conclude my remarks this morning immediately after the morning business. I perceive that the notice is not on the calendar, and before the reading of the Journal is dispensed with, I merely call attention to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will take the responsibility for its not appearing on the calendar. Is there objection to dispensing with the further reading of the Journal? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 608. An act for the relief of Charles T. Gallagher and Samuel H. Proctor;

S. 7640. An act for the relief of James M. Sweat;

S. 7804. An act for the relief of David Jay Jennings;

S. 10817. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

Mr. PILES presented the credentials of MILES POINDEXTER, chosen by the Legislature of the State of Washington a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1911, which were read and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented resolutions adopted by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions relative to reciprocal interchange of commodities between the United States and Canada.

Resolved, That the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, believing that a reciprocal interchange of commodities between the United States and Canada, based on equitable and fair terms, would prove beneficial to the ultimate consumer and to the various manufacturing, farming, commercial, and other interests of each of the two countries, hereby cordially approves any efforts made to bring about such results.

Resolved, That certified copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Massachusetts.

In house of representatives, adopted February 15, 1911.
In senate, adopted, in concurrence, February 16, 1911.
A true copy.
Attest:

WM. M. OLIN,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 1.

A joint resolution relating to the preservation of big game in the State of Wyoming, and memorializing the Congress of the United States to make an adequate appropriation to aid the State of Wyoming in providing winter food for and otherwise protecting the big game which range in the National Park and in the Jackson Hole region of this State alternately.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring):

Whereas the principal remnant of the big game of the United States, comprised of moose, elk, and deer, range alternately during the winters in the National Park and game reserve and the Jackson Hole section of the State of Wyoming, south of the National Park; and

Whereas during the winters they suffer greatly and perish from famine in large numbers, which could be in a great measure prevented by adequate and systematic provision for feeding and protecting them during storms and blizzards; and

Whereas the State of Wyoming has been and is making appropriations of large sums of money and using every available means within its power to preserve said big game; and

Whereas the sufficient and thoroughly adequate protection of said big game is too expensive and burdensome to be borne alone by the State of Wyoming: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, That the Government of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to cooperate with the State of Wyoming in feeding, protecting, and otherwise preserving the big game which winters in great numbers within the confines of the State of Wyoming; and the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized and requested to make an adequate appropriation of money, to be used in aiding and cooperating with the State of Wyoming in the laudable and desirable effort to feed, protect, and preserve from extinction the principal remnant of the big game of the United States, which range during the winters principally within the territory of the State of Wyoming; be it further

Resolved, That engrossed copies of this memorial and request be sent to the President of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to the Secretary of the Interior, asking their aid in bringing the object of this memorial and request before Congress, and in securing from same an adequate appropriation of public moneys for the noble, humane, and national purpose herein set forth; and be it further

Resolved, That engrossed copies of this memorial and request be sent to the Senators from Wyoming in the Congress of the United States, viz, Hons. CLARENCE D. CLARK and FRANCIS E. WARREN, and our Representative in said Congress, Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL, asking them to use their best efforts to secure favorable action upon the request embodied herein.

Approved February 17, 1911.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I present resolutions adopted by the Carbon County Wool Growers' Association of Wyoming, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions adopted by Carbon County Wool Growers' Association against the passage of the bill (H. R. 32216) to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada.

Whereas a treaty has been negotiated by the Departments of State of these United States and of the Dominion of Canada for the purpose of promoting reciprocal trade relations between the two countries, and a bill has been introduced and passed in the House of Representatives of the United States confirming such treaty; and

Whereas by the terms of the proposed treaty the import duty on live stock, consisting of sheep, cattle, horses, and mules, imported into the United States from Canada will be entirely removed, and the import duty on agricultural products imported into the United States from Canada will also be removed, while the duty on manufactured products of the United States exported to Canada will not be removed by the Canadian Government; and

Whereas the duties upon meats, the dressed products of live stock, imported from Canada into the United States, will not be removed; and

Whereas there had heretofore been created by the Congress of the United States a tariff commission to investigate the various articles imported into the United States for the specific purpose of ascertaining the amount of duty that should be placed upon such importations by the Government of these United States in order to equitably protect the United States producers of such articles, and in accordance with the principles of protection for American industries; and

Whereas such tariff commission or board has not as yet reported to the Congress of the United States upon any of the articles referred to and covered by the proposed treaty, and to be admitted without duty into the United States by the terms of such treaty, so that the Congress of the United States and the people thereof are unable at this time to know whether or not such lowering or removal of duties will be detrimental to the producers in the United States; and

Whereas the removal of the duty from live stock to be imported into the United States and the retention of the duty upon meat products is detrimental to the farmers of the entire country and to the stock growers of Wyoming, while being favorable to the packing industries of the United States; and

Whereas the adoption of the bill ratifying and confirming said proposed treaty would mean the giving up of the Republican doctrine of protection and the adoption of the Democratic theory of free trade, and would prove to be the opening wedge for the adoption of such free-trade theory; and

Whereas the Republican doctrine of reciprocity has always called for the admission to this country of the products of other countries not competing with those produced here, and the admission, free of duty, by such foreign Government of our manufactured and other products of which we have a surplus, causing an equal and equitable exchange of products of the two countries, with a resulting promotion of the balance of trade in favor of this country: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the members of the Carbon County Wool Growers' Association are absolutely opposed to the passage of the House bill ratifying and confirming the proposed reciprocity treaty between the United States of America and Dominion of Canada, upon the grounds that the same, if adopted, would be adverse to the interests of the American farmer and the western stock grower; would constitute a reversal of the Republican doctrine of protection in favor of the Democratic theory of free trade; would be an overthrow of the Republican doctrine of due investigation by the Tariff Board before revision of duties upon any article imported into the United States; would be the adoption of a principle that has heretofore been tried by this country through a reciprocity treaty with Canada in the year 1855, and found to be detrimental to the interests of the American producers; and be it further

Resolved, That we do hereby petition our Representatives in Congress, Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN, Hon. C. D. CLARK, and Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL, to use every effort in their power to prevent the adoption and confirming of this reciprocity treaty in its present form.

W. W. DALEY, Secretary.

Dated at Rawlins, Wyo., this 21st day of February, A. D. 1911.

Mr. BURNHAM presented sundry telegrams in the nature of memorials from S. H. Flanders, of East Andover; D. M. Hadley, of Dunbarton; Charles McDaniel, of Enfield; Edgar J. Ham, of Rochester; Frank M. Bailey, of Claremont; Oliver C. Dimond, of Concord; C. H. Dutton, of Hancock; Alfred W. Clough, of Portsmouth; U. L. George, of Georges Mills; C. W. Phillips, deputy Pomona (N. H.) State Grange, of East Candia; George A. Leavitt, master of Grange No. 295, of Laconia; Charles A. Brown, master Suncook Valley Pomona Grange, of Pembroke; William C. Hill, master Friendship Grange, No. 110, of Northfield; Wantastiquet Grange, of Hinsdale; and of Colebrook Grange, No. 223, of Colebrook, all in the State of New Hampshire, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. OLIVER presented a petition of the temperance committee of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BORAH. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 6.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Idaho (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized as follows:

Whereas under the present rules formulated by the national forestry officials governing and controlling the use of the national forests with reference to removing therefrom dead timber, it is very inconvenient and hard for the settlers who desire to use this dead timber to obtain the same, because the procedure necessary to go through is very lengthy, undesirable, and costly to users thereof; and

Whereas said dry timber, by lying in the national forests, exposes the growing timber to the danger of fire and thereby is a menace to the national forest and should be removed: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States is hereby requested to abolish all rules of the Forest Service governing the removal of dead timber by the settlers, so as to make it as convenient as possible to remove the same from the national forest for use by the settlers, and thereby favor not only the settlers, but promote the welfare and protection of the national forest of the United States.

This memorial passed the house of representatives on the 6th day of February, 1911.

CHARLES D. STOREY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This memorial passed the senate on the 15th day of February, 1911.

L. H. SWEETSER,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the within house joint memorial No. 6 originated in the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Idaho during the eleventh session.

JAMES H. WALLIS,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

STATE OF IDAHO,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Wilfred L. Gifford, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of house joint memorial No. 6, by Hall and Pincock, relating to the abolishing all rules of the Forest Service governing the removal of dead timber by the settlers (passed the house Feb. 6, 1911; passed the senate Feb. 15, 1911), which was filed in this office the 17th day of February, A. D. 1911, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State.

Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 17th day of February, A. D. 1911, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-fifth.

Mr. HEYBURN. I present two memorials of the Legislature of Idaho, No. 8 and No. 14, to take the usual course. I would suggest that where resolutions of State legislatures have been presented in duplicate, which I suspect may have been done, that they be printed only once in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That will follow. The memorials were presented yesterday by the Senator's colleague and printed in the RECORD and properly referred. The duplicates will also be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRIGGS presented petitions of Washington Camp No. 97, of Bridgeton; Washington Camp No. 147, of Passaic, Patriotic Order Sons of America; of Local Union No. 1785, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Fort Lee; and of sundry citizens of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented the petition of Albert E. Holmes, of Newark, N. J., and the petition of Walter E. Terry, of Newark, N. J., praying for the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of Cape May Grange, Hamilton Grange, Kingwood Grange, Hopewell Grange, Thoroughfare Grange, Vincentown Grange, Allentown Grange, Burlington Grange, Titusville Grange, Salem Grange, Patrons of Husbandry; and Henry Maguire, of Kearny; William Conover, of Manalapan; Robert Dilatushy, of Robbinsville; R. He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 62, American Federation of Musicians, of Trenton, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting enlisted men from entering the field of competition with civilian musicians, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Branch No. 7, Glass Bottle Blowers' Association, of Millville, Conn., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the present pure-food law relative to the manufacture of hand-blown bottles, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. BULKELEY presented a memorial of Local Grange No. 107, Patrons of Husbandry, of Litchfield, Conn., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of Hollenbeck Grange, No. 125, of Canaan; of Chester Grange, No. 158, of Chester; of Mattabasett Grange, No. 42, of Middletown, and of Plainville Grange, of Plainville, Patrons of Husbandry, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the passage of a full and complete parcels-post bill, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. JONES. I present two telegrams, one for the reciprocity agreement and one against it, which I ask to have read.

There being no objection, the telegrams were read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., February 20, 1911.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

After thoroughly considering reciprocity measure pending in Senate trustees of Seattle Chamber of Commerce, in special meeting to-day, adopted by unanimous vote following: We join lumber, banking, and other interests of Northwest in protesting against passage of Canadian reciprocity bill for provisions affecting lumber, coal, fruit, wheat, and other raw materials. Passage of bill in present condition would be serious blow to development of this part of country. If measure is likely to pass against protests people of Pacific Northwest, we demand insertion of adequate provision for removal of duty on logs and for discriminating duties on transportation in foreign vessels to extent of at least meeting reduced cost of transportation by such vessels over American vessels. While lumber and coal can be transported between American ports only in American bottoms, tonnage of world is open to Canadian shippers.

SEATTLE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

SEATTLE, WASH., February 22–23, 1911.

To Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned earnestly urge you to support the reciprocity agreement and to oppose any amendment thereof that will endanger its adoption. We heartily approve of the wise and patriotic action of the President in negotiating this agreement, believing with him that only good to the peoples of both countries will follow its adoption. We maintain that the Pacific Northwest has not a single interest that will suffer from the agreement. From our investigation and observation we believe that the action of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce on this matter is not representative of the sentiments of the citizens of the city of Seattle or the State of Washington, nor do we believe that such action even represents the sentiments of a majority of the members of that body.

Mr. PILES presented memorials of Sunnyside Grange, No. 129, of Castlerock, and Chambers Prairie Grange, No. 141, of Olympia, Patrons of Husbandry; and of sundry citizens of Centralia, all in the State of Washington, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I present a telegram and ask that it may be read for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

LANSING, MICH., February 13, 1911.

Hon. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

The popular and independent magazines and periodicals are the people's free and fearless instruments of discussion and information. In importance of their work they are only second to the public schools. You are respectfully requested to vote against the bill increasing second-class postage, which is aimed at these publications.

CHASE S. OSBORN, Governor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan presented the following telegrams, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and read, as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MICH., February 18, 1911.

WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Eighty thousand Lady Maccabees from various parts of the United States ask you to vote against Senate bill 31539 as unjustly discriminating against every fraternal publication.

FRANCES E. BURNS, Great Commander.

TRAVERSE CITY, MICH., February 18, 1911.

Senator WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Whereas the magazines of our land are among the greatest forces for enlightenment of our people and for correction of evils and righting of wrongs—

Resolved by the Traverse City Board of Trade, That we urge our Members of Congress to work and vote for the defeat of any provision raising postal rates on periodicals and magazines as proposed in the Post Office appropriation bill now before Congress.

BOARD OF TRADE,
H. MONTAGUE, Secretary.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a telegram in the nature of a memorial transmitting resolutions adopted by the Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

BISMARCK, N. DAK., February 23, 1911.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

I have the honor to submit for your consideration the following concurrent resolution which the house and senate of the twelfth session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota have passed, a concurrent resolution, introduced by a committee of three members of the house of representatives and two members of the senate of the Twelfth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota:

"Whereas the reciprocity agreement now pending before the National Congress is of the most vital importance to the welfare of the people of the State of North Dakota; and

"Whereas the Hon. James J. Hill, president of the board of directors of the Great Northern Railway Co., made a certain speech in the city of Chicago on the 15th day of February, 1911, in which the speaker is quoted in the press as saying: 'The farmers of the Northwest are two to one in favor of said reciprocity agreement;' and

"Whereas the said speech has been widely circulated throughout the United States; and

"Whereas said speech does not express the sentiment of the farmers of the Northwest; and

"Whereas if Mr. Hill made said statement, as alleged, it is not in accordance with the facts and sentiment of North Dakota farmers and other interests in said State; and

"Whereas the Twelfth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota is fully convinced that if said reciprocity agreement is entered into and becomes a law or a treaty between the United States and Canada, that it will be a great detriment to the agricultural interests as well as other interests of the State of North Dakota, and will have a disastrous effect upon the farm products and farm values of the State of North Dakota; Now therefore be it

"Resolved by the senate of the State of North Dakota (and the house of representatives concurring), That the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives representing the State of North Dakota in the National Congress be, and they are hereby, requested by the Twelfth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota to use all honorable means within their power to prevent the passage of said reciprocity treaty and its enactment into law;

"Resolved further, That copies of this resolution, duly signed by representative officers of both houses in the Twelfth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, be sent to the President of the United States and to each of said Senators and Representatives in the National Congress, that they may have the sentiment of the North Dakota people, properly expressed by the legislative body of this State, before them for their consideration; it is

"Further resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby authorized to transmit the foregoing resolution by telegram to William H. Taft, President of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of North Dakota."

Respectfully, yours,

P. D. NORTON, Secretary of State.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions adopted by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the resolutions were read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Resolved, That the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, believing that a reciprocal interchange of commodities between the United States and Canada, based on equitable and fair terms, would prove beneficial to the ultimate consumer and to the various manufacturing, farming, commercial, and other interests of each of the two countries, hereby cordially approves any efforts made to bring about such results.

Resolved, That certified copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Massachusetts.

In house of representatives, adopted February 15, 1911.
In senate, adopted in concurrence February 16, 1911.
A true copy.
Attest:

WM. M. OLIN,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I send the following telegram to the desk and ask Mr. Rose to read it in his very best voice, and I should like all Senators to hear it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Assistant Secretary will read the telegram in his very best voice.

The telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Pensions, as follows:

BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. I rise, Mr. President, to a question of the consideration of the order of the business of the Senate.

The committees have been at work upon necessary measures up to this morning, and in some cases will be so occupied tomorrow, and I think it is proper to bring before the minds of Senators the condition that will meet us next week.

The pension appropriation bill has not been considered by the Senate, the Post Office appropriation bill has not been considered by the Senate, nor have the agricultural, the naval, the Military Academy, the diplomatic and consular, the fortifications, the great sundry civil, and the general deficiency appropriation bills. The time in which all of these bills can be considered by the Senate and passed—and some of them involve not only important matters, but important controversies—will be but the six days of the coming week. I say six days, but that includes Saturday up until 12 o'clock on the 4th of March. There are besides other important and pressing matters for consideration.

I think Senators should be setting their houses in order for what we shall be compelled to submit ourselves to next week—prolonged sessions of this body to a very late period in the evening, or with a daily recess at 6 o'clock until 8 o'clock, and night sessions. I take this occasion to say these things, so that Senators in making their arrangements about other duties and other employments may not be surprised if, after and including Monday, we shall be obliged to have these continued or night sessions and to meet probably at 11 o'clock. It will be very burdensome, very onerous, and very exhausting work; it will call upon the physical energies of every Member of the body and involve the necessity of pretty nearly constant attendance in order that a quorum may be here to do business.

I have thought it proper to state these things now in order that Senators may be prepared for what will be, as a matter of sheer necessity, imposed upon them during the flying days and nights of next week.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I present a privileged matter—the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. I understand that it is privileged to present this report, but that the report has no privilege so far as its consideration is concerned; and yet, in view of what the Senator from Maine has just said in the presence of the Senate as to the public business, in which we all concur, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 31856) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 11, 20, 30, 31, 37, 38, 39, 46, 50, 59, 65, 69, 75, 78, 79, 80, 83, 84, 85, 86, 101, 104, 107, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 123, 129, 134, 137, 140, 142, 143, 147, 150, 152, 159, 164, 165, 171, 172, 175, 176, 181, 187, 188, 190, 191, 196, 199, 200, 202, 203, 204, 205, 209, 213, 220, 222, 230, 231, 232, 235, 238, 239, and 240.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DICK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 21163) for the relief of Frank Chroneberry (Rept. No. 1235); and

A bill (H. R. 22550) for the relief of Isaac Thompson (Rept. No. 1236).

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20136) for the relief of Elmer P. Kerr, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1237) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8730) for the relief of William Mullally, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1238) thereon.

Mr. DICK. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3245) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Thomas H. Thorp, to ask that the bill be indefinitely postponed, as the subject matter is covered in the bill just reported by me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BURNHAM, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 5037) for the relief of G. A. Embry, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1239) thereon.

Mr. DU PONT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 9201) granting an increase of pension to Annie G. Hawkins, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1240) thereon.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report an amendment relative to the Chinese Boxer indemnity moneys, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which I ask may be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I submit with the amendment a memorandum, which need not be printed but which I ask may be referred to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and, with the memorandum, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 17th instant, relative to the payment of approved claims for damages to and loss of private property belonging to citizens of the United States, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands, etc., intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported it with amendments and moved that it be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported an amendment relative to the burial of officers and men of the Revenue-Cutter Service dying in the service of the United States after having been honorably discharged from the service, etc., intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

SUBPORT OF ENTRY AT BIRMINGHAM, ALA.

Mr. FRYE. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 29708) to constitute Birmingham, in the State of Alabama, a subport of entry. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that Birmingham, Ala., shall be constituted a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Mobile, and extends to it the privileges of section 7 of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, MINNESOTA.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 32341) to authorize the St. Paul Railway Promotion Co., a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near Ninninger, Minn. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED RIVER BRIDGE, LOUISIANA.

Mr. MARTIN. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 10849) to authorize the city of Shreveport to construct a bridge across Red River, and I submit a report (No. 1234) thereon.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I do not desire to object to this bill, but I give notice that I will object to the consideration of any other bill during the morning hour.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, line 6, after the words "Red River," to insert the words "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Shreveport, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Louisiana, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a traffic bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at Shreveport, in the State of Louisiana, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of a bridge over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

G. A. EMBREY.

Mr. BURNHAM. From the Committee on Claims I report back favorably the bill (S. 5037) for the relief of G. A. Embrey, and I submit a report (No. 1239) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BROWN. I insist upon the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

COMPILATION OF TREATIES.

Mr. SMOOT. On the 17th instant the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] presented to the Senate a compilation of the reciprocity treaties between the United States and foreign countries, and it was referred to the Committee on Printing for action. I report back the compilation and move that it be printed as a public document (S. Doc. No. 831).

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks that certain newspaper clippings be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Sun, Wednesday, Nov. 23, 1910.]

UNION COSTS UNITED STATES $778,000 A YEAR—PLATE PRINTERS KEEP POWER PRESSES OUT OF THE ENGRAVING BUREAU—HAND PRESSES STILL USED, ALTHOUGH MEN AT POWER PRESSES EARN $9 A DAY AND OTHERS MAKE ONLY $6.

WASHINGTON, November 22.

Unionism exacts an annual tribute of $778,000 from one bureau alone of the United States Government. Each year this large sum is contributed from the Federal Treasury to the union plate printers employed in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

This $778,000 represents the amount that would be saved annually by the Federal Government if power presses were introduced into the bureau in place of the old hand-roller presses now used in turning out bonds, notes, and checks. An act of Congress passed in 1898 at the instance of union labor has prevented the introduction of this economy.

Not only has this act cost the Federal Government many hundreds of thousands of dollars each year in excess wages, but it has necessitated the throwing of power presses, for which the Government itself had paid more than $15,000, into the junk heap. The immediate introduction of power machinery to do the work now performed on hand presses would reduce the force of printers in the bureau by 450 and the printers' assistants by 350.

The Plate Printers' Union for 20 years has successfully blocked efforts to have the Government notes, bonds, and checks printed by the steam or power process. For 10 years prior to 1908 this union had sufficient power in Congress to prevent the printing of internal-revenue stamps by power presses, and the introduction of this reform in the interest of economy was finally accomplished only through resort to a joker in the sundry civil bill passed in 1907. The bill had been signed by the President before the union realized that one of its provisions authorized the printing of internal-revenue stamps by power presses.

The union is supposed to be more strongly intrenched in Congress now than it ever has been. It maintains a legislative agent and an assessment of $3 a month is levied on members for the raising of a fund to protect their interests. The union is credited now with having a fund of this character amounting to about $40,000. The plate printers in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing constitute a local branch of a national organization which belongs to the American Federation of Labor, and they have had the support of the federation in their fight against the introduction of modern machinery into the bureau.

The local plate printers have been adroit in the methods they have adopted to intrench themselves in Congress. They have sent speakers out to aid Members of the House of Representatives in Congress, and on several occasions have presented to influential Members of both the House and the Senate beautifully engrossed resolutions certifying that said Member or Senator was a friend of union labor.

Such resolutions have been presented to Speaker CANNON, Representative JAMES A. TAWNEY, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, and Representative WALTER I. SMITH, of the same committee. James A. Hemenway, of Indiana, when he was in the United States Senate received a similar set of resolutions and used them in his campaign to be returned to the Senate. It is understood that Members of Congress availed themselves of such resolutions to promote their candidacy in the recent elections.

The legislative record alone tells the story of how union labor has for years fought against the introduction of economic reforms in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. In view of the present administration's desire for economy and the talk of Congress itself along this line, the record is exceedingly interesting. As regards Congress it is illuminating.

As far back as 1886 Congress authorized the installation of new and improved plate-printing presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The sundry civil act of that year contains the following clause:

"Provided, That any part of this sum may be used for purchasing and operating new and improved plate-printing presses."

The same provision was incorporated in the sundry civil bill passed in 1887.

With the appearance of this legislation on the statute books, organized labor began an active campaign which resulted in the incorporation of this clause in the sundry civil act of 1888:

"Provided, That there shall not be an increase of the number of steam plate-printing machines in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing."

This was the first check the unions obtained against the use of steam presses in the bureau. They were, however, by no means satisfied and continued an active campaign for the repeal of the laws permitting the introduction of the power presses. Another year's effort brought about a further yielding on the part of Congress, and in the sundry civil act of 1889, after appropriating $466,000 for the payment of royalty on the steam plate-printing machines already installed in the bureau, there appeared this clause:

"Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes of larger denomination than those that may be canceled or retired: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the repair or reconstruction of steam-plate printing presses: Provided further, That there shall not be an increase of steam-plate printing machines in the Engraving and Printing Bureau."

The director of the bureau, under the authority conferred upon him by the acts of 1886 and 1887, had installed 25 power presses in the bureau. The above provision in the sundry civil act of 1889 practically restricted the use of the machines to the printing of internal-revenue stamps.

In 1898 there was a revival of the talk about turning out the Government notes and bonds by power-press methods. The plate printers again brought their influence to bear upon Congress, with the result that the sundry civil act of 1898 contained this clause:

"Provided further, That hereafter all bonds, notes, and checks shall be printed from hand-roller presses."

This provision effectively blocked and continues to block any effort to economize in the turning out of this class of Government printing. Seven power presses which had been bought by the Director for use in printing notes, bonds, and checks, at a cost of about $15,000, were sold as junk for about $350.

Not content with the above prohibition, the plate printers directed their attack on the statutory authorization which allowed the director of the bureau to print internal-revenue stamps by the power method. The director had been turning out stamps from the power presses from 1889 until the following provision in the sundry civil act, approved March 3, 1899, legislated the presses out of the bureau:

"Provided further, That the faces of all tobacco stamps for use on packages of 2 pounds and upward, and all beer, whisky, cigars, snuff, oleomargarine, and special liquor tax stamps shall hereafter be printed from engraved plates upon hand-roller plate-printing presses."

With the incorporation of this provision in the sundry civil act of 1899 the union victory for the retention of the hand-press method was complete.

Revenue stamps, as well as notes, bonds, and checks, were by statute now to be printed exclusively by the hand method. That condition of affairs continued unbroken until 1907, when a joker was slipped into the sundry civil bill. This joker was placed in the bill by the House Committee on Appropriations, and did not become known to the union printers or to anyone outside of a few members of the committee until after the bill had received the President's signature. The joker was entirely blind as to its purpose and read as follows:

"And the second provision under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1899, is hereby repealed."

The proviso repealed was the one which declared that the faces of all internal-revenue stamps should be printed on the hand-roller presses. The bill containing this joker was signed by President Roosevelt on March 4, 1907.

The repeal of this provision permitted the introduction of power presses for the printing of internal-revenue stamps and a contract was immediately made by the director of the bureau for 20 of these presses. The bureau is now operating 25 of the presses in turning out internal-revenue stamps, all of this work being done by that method.

This has, of course, resulted in a big saving to the Government, and at the same time has worked no hardship on the plate printers, who for so many years combated the reform. The plate printer at the power press makes more money than did the plate printer who turned out internal-revenue stamps under the old method. The increased demand for the stamps and the gradual introduction of the machines have taken care of the men without having thrown any out of employment.

Of course there are not as many men employed now in turning out internal-revenue stamps from the electric machines as would have been employed if the old hand-press method had been retained, but all those who were on the pay roll of the bureau when the change was made have been cared for. It is the fact that the introduction of the machines has reduced the possibilities for the employment for plate printers that the union objects to.

It is likely that in the coming session of Congress an effort will be made to extend the steam-press method in the printing of notes, checks, and bonds, and thus end the unnecessary drain of $700,000 a year on the Federal Treasury.

The point that the plate printers have raised against the introduction of the power presses for printing United States notes, checks, and bonds is that this method will turn out an inferior product, lacking the beautiful, artistic features of notes printed by the hand process. They have added that the power-press notes and bonds also will be more easily counterfeited. This is the stock argument that the unions have advanced in Congress whenever the subject has come up there. It was the argument that they raised against the introduction of steam presses for the printing of internal-revenue stamps. The steam presses are to-day, however, turning out internal-revenue stamps perfectly satisfactory to the Government and equal in every way, it is said, to those that were formerly printed by hand.

As far back as 1889 this subject of the relative merits of the hand and power press methods was thoroughly investigated by Congress. In 1889 the Bureau of Engraving and Printing started to print the backs of some silver certificates and of United States notes on steam presses.

The attack by the union on this method led to an investigation, and the Senate Committee on Finance, after listening to testimony which filled a good-sized volume, brought in a report sustaining the steam process. The committee cited the opinion of C. S. Fairchild, then Secretary of the Treasury, that the notes and greenbacks printed by power presses were satisfactory. They also quoted James W. Hyatt, then Treasurer of the United States, who said:

"The character of the printing on both the backs and faces of all the notes and certificates received from the Bureau of Engraving was perfectly satisfactory to this office and, so far as I am informed, to the banking community and the general public. No difference in quality is observable between the backs said to be printed by hand and those said to be printed by steam. All of them appear to be of excellent quality, the color being good, and the printing sharp and distinct."

Treasurer Hyatt added that he had been unable to discover anything in the engraving and printing of these notes which makes it easy to counterfeit them.

The committee also quoted several bankers in support of the greenbacks that had been turned out partly by the steam process. One of the bankers quoted was George F. Baker, president of the First National Bank of New York, who said:

"The silver certificates of the series of 1886 seemed to me an improvement over all other issues of notes since the original legal-tender greenbacks, and I see nothing in them to facilitate counterfeiting more than in other series."

Since then there have been conflicting views expressed by Congress, but Government experts now declare that the successful experience in turning out internal-revenue stamps on power machinery could be duplicated in the printing of notes, bonds, and checks if the change were authorized by Congress. In viewing specimens the Government experts will not undertake to say now which is the product of the power and which comes from the hand presses. All of Canada's paper money is printed by the steam process by the American Bank Note Co.

As was done in the case of the introduction of power presses for the printing of internal-revenue stamps, the change in regard to notes, bonds, and checks could be brought about, it is said, without working any hardship on the union men now employed in the bureau. The Government's business at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is increasing at the rate of 15 per cent a year, and by gradually introducing the steam presses it is estimated that it would be only a comparatively short time when the present drain would be checked without any printers being thrown out of work. If only the backs of United States currency and national-bank currency were printed on power presses to begin with it would result in a saving of $396,000 a year.

It is estimated that it would cost $420,000 to install power presses sufficient to print United States notes, bonds, and checks. This amount is only a little more than half of what the United States now contributes yearly to the members of the union in excess wages.

The plate printers employed in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing make good money. They are paid by the sheets turned out. The internal-revenue stamp printers at power machines average $9 a day. They work 8 hours a day, have 30 days' leave a year with pay, all national holidays, and half Saturdays in July, August, and September.

The man on the hand press, on the other hand, averages only about $6 a day.

But the strong union objection to the introduction of power presses for the printing of notes, bonds, and checks is the same that was advanced against the introduction of internal-revenue power presses—that the possibilities for the employment of union plate printers will be curtailed. To maintain this field uncurtailed the Federal Government apparently is expected to sacrifice $778,000 a year.

[From The Independent, Nov. 24, 1910.]

THE TREASURY'S TRIBUTE OF A MILLION A YEAR TO ORGANIZED LABOR.

If the United States Government were as free as a private establishment to institute reforms in its various departments, to hire and discharge at will, to introduce labor-saving machinery, to adopt improved methods, and, in a word, to avail itself of the economies which private business concerns adopt with such readiness, millions of dollars a year could be saved over the present cost of administration. Not only, however, is the Government not a private employer, with its main concern a balance sheet showing profit or loss, but Government service is hedged in with traditions and practices limiting to an almost incredible extent the initiative of the higher officials who are responsible for the operations of the departments.

The civil-service laws have thrown over most Government employees the wide blanket of protection against loss of position through any cause but death or illness. Political influence, often ingeniously maintained intact whatever changes may take place in White House or Congress, stands ready to resist innovations which threaten beneficiaries with loss of position or demotion. The theory that the Government is morally bound to keep on its pay roll clerks whom age has incapacitated, instead of filling their places with younger and more capable persons, is practically recognized by the Government itself, as probably it is approved by public opinion. The absence of a civil service retirement system, due partly to the belief of many employees that some time the Government will adopt a "straight" (noncontributory) civil-pension system, tends to continue conditions of inefficiency and sloth which would not be tolerated a week in any well-managed private establishment. Organized labor, too, while keeping and kept on good terms with Uncle Sam by means of diplomatic concessions, is ever suspicious of plans aiming to improve existing methods in mechanical establishments like the navy yards, the Government Printing Office, and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and is alert to oppose them.

Despite all these handicaps to progress, the administrative departments of the Government are doing their work better, more economically and more rapidly every day. It is not credible that an administration should make its draft upon the best legal and business talent of the country practically once in four years without securing managers and superintendents—for such Cabinet officers are—of up-to-date mind and practice. Long ago, perhaps with the abolition of the spoils system, the ancient practice was reversed, and social duties became secondary to work—continuous, grueling, brain-racking, body-destroying work. From Cabinet officer to chief clerk, no man in responsible position with the United States Government has an easy position. Every step forward is beset with perplexities and hampered by discouraging traditions. Progress is made only by main force, and often with a complete sacrifice of personal popularity; often only after a fight of which the public knows little or nothing, yet which makes the victor wonder whether or not the game was worth the candle.

This possibly illuminating and perhaps needless introduction is suggested by the perplexity in which the United States Treasury Department finds itself in the midst of the most successful attempt to improve antiquated methods that has been made in that institution for many decades. Secretary Franklin MacVeagh, one of the two business men of the Taft Cabinet, and the corps of able young men with which he has surrounded himself, already have worked wonders in simplifying, systematizing, and making less expensive the complicated processes of the Treasury. An estimated saving of almost $1,900,000 per annum is expected from improved business methods already authorized. The proposition to change the designs and reduce the size of United States and national bank notes would save the Government an estimated $900,000 a year more, and greatly increase the mechanical efficiency of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. But the plans in this direction, making possible a third estimated saving of $900,000 a year, threaten to stop there, through the silent but none the less effective operation of the traditions referred to in the opening of this article. The facts are a matter of public record, but the public, outside the labor unions, knows nothing of the actual conditions underlying this peculiar situation, and these of themselves make a story which is a little short of sensational.

Ever since the institution of the Government the paper currency of the United States has been printed upon hand presses, except for a few months about 14 years ago. This process was necessary in the early days, before the invention of power presses that would do the work equally well, but in modern printing plants, outside the Government service, these have long been discarded for work of identical character and the rapid power press used.

Not only does the Government continue the use of a process whose retention costs $900,000 a year more than need be paid, but Congress has more or less deliberately, if unwillingly and under duress, lent itself to the scheme to perpetuate the antiquated practice. Not only has every effort to introduce improved devices been resisted by labor organizations within and without the Government employ, but the issue has been taken into politics.

The legal authority by which the use of the old hand presses is continued is of an exceedingly indirect, if not ambiguous, character. It originated, in fact, in an obscure proviso tucked away in a sundry civil bill of more than 20 years ago, and exists now in a brief proviso of the law making sundry civil appropriations, dated July 1, 1898, as follows:

"Provided further, That hereafter all bonds, notes, and checks shall be printed from hand-roller presses."

As long ago as 1886 the Government first attempted to bring the Bureau of Engraving and Printing up to date by the use of power presses. The sundry civil act of that year was the first to permit the installation of new and improved plate-printing presses, which it did in the following language applicable to the appropriation for the use of the bureau:

"Provided, That any part of this sum may be used for purchasing and operating new and improved plate-printing presses."

Some presses were bought and installed, and the same provision was repeated in the sundry civil act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, but by that time organized labor had begun an active campaign against the proposed economy, not unlike that which the old hand shoemakers, before they had begun to take the larger view, waged against the introduction of machinery in shoe factories. A frightened and complaisant Congress came to the rescue, and the sundry civil bill of October 2, 1888—this was preceding the presidential election—nullified the permissive legislation as far as it could by providing that "there shall not be an increase of the number of steam plate-printing machines in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing."

This prohibition, of course, effectually checked the efforts of Uncle Sam to have his paper money printed quicker and more economically; but organized labor, not content, then started a movement to repeal the law of 1887–88 permitting the introduction of power presses and to restrict the use of the machines already in operation. The sundry civil act for the fiscal year of 1889–90 limited the payment of royalty on the presses to 1 cent per thousand impressions and also directed that no part of the appropriation should be expended for printing United States notes of larger denominations than those that might be canceled or retired. The law again prohibited the purchase of more machines, and contained, in addition, a fatal clause refusing money for the repair or reconstruction of the power presses already installed.

Under the authority originally granted and despite the opposition described, the director had succeeded in buying and operating 25 power presses. As the labor organizations closed in on him with law after law, he finally discontinued the use of the machines for printing money and operated them in the printing of internal revenue stamps. The unions finally legislated the power presses out of the bureau altogether by a law approved March 3, 1889, providing that the faces of all tobacco stamps for use upon packages of 2 pounds and upward, and all beer, whisky, cigar, snuff, oleomargarine, and special liquor tax stamps should thereafter be printed from engraved plates "upon hand roller plate printing presses."

Meantime, changes have occurred in Congress and men have come in who either stand on their own feet at home or believe in giving the Government a square deal, or both, for the sundry civil act of March 1, 1907, contained a "joker" which outwitted the enemies of the power presses and allowed at least a limited opportunity for their use. This joker was placed in the bill before it left the committee room of the House and was not noticed nor was its purpose suspected until the bill had been signed by the President. The joker read as follows:

"And the second proviso under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act, approved March 3, 1889, is hereby repealed."

This was the proviso whereby organized labor had succeeded in prohibiting the use of power presses for printing internal-revenue stamps. The director immediately bought 20 power presses, and 25 are now operated in that work. But the prohibition of the act of July 1, 1898, still stands, and it would be illegal for the Government to print notes, bonds, or checks upon anything but hand-roller presses, notwithstanding that more than $900,000 a year could be saved if power presses were used. In the face of approaching elections Congress always has been timid, and this year has not been one to encourage congressional audacity, except upon certain "popular" issues supposedly closer to the people in the districts at home.

Another tidy item is that of checks and drafts, of which the Government printed about 10,000,000 last year for its own use, all from engraved plates and by the hand-roller process. This work could be done equally well by power presses from a rubber "offset," at an estimated saving of $37,000 a year. By the old process the cost of checks, per thousand, bound, is $8.29. By the improved process it would be $2.93. Warrants now cost $9.94 a thousand and could be printed equally well for $2.34 a thousand. The hand printers turn out 800 sheets a day, and 45,000 a day could be printed by the offset process.

At the close of the first session of the Sixty-first Congress, in an unwonted burst of courage, the Senate Committee on Appropriations decided to repeal the appropriation against the power printing of notes, checks, and bonds. Another "joker," repealing the provision of June 4, 1897, was inserted in an obscure corner of the sundry civil bill. At the last moment, however, the committee weakened, for reasons which may be guessed, and the provision was stricken out.

Under such circumstances as these the Government has been powerless to institute the great economies involved in a change of methods at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, amounting to between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000 a year. The plate printers are strongly organized and have a large fund of their own, with which they maintain an alert lobby, and in a contest with the Government they would expect the backing of the American Federation of Labor. They would appear to show as little foresight as the old hand shoemakers exhibited when they first opposed the introduction of machinery. In that case the growth of the business was such as not only to command the services of all trained men, at increased wages, but of thousands more.

Exactly the same condition is presented in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, where the work accumulates so rapidly that additions to the force are being made all the time. Indeed, the business of the bureau increases at the rate of 20 per cent a year. It is estimated that in five years, at the utmost, under normal conditions, should the new processes be instituted, all the present employees would be working again. As a matter of fact, the period of possible idleness for some would not be more than two or three years, for the bureau is taking on more and more new work every year. It has just been compelled to decline to accept a lot of engraved work in connection with the institution of the new postal savings bank system because of lack of facilities.

The American Bank Note Co. has introduced the power presses and is printing large quantities of bonds for counties, municipalities, and corporations, and bonds, paper money, etc., for foreign governments. Spain, China, Japan, Mexico, and Argentina successfully use the power press for their paper currency. Bureau officials say they will defy an expert to detect the difference between a hand-printed and a power-printed note.

The Treasury Department, in trying to bring about the improvements and economies noted, would not be neglectful of the personal interests of employees. Power press plate printers are paid higher wages than hand press workers, consequently the change presents some immediate advantages. Again, it is estimated that between 15 and 20 per cent of the hand press operators suffer from rupture and other consequences of physical strain from pulling the heavy levers used in their work. The Treasury Department, under Secretary MacVeagh, has systematically adopted the policy of reinstatement in cases of discharge necessitated by the adoption of improved methods. Of 200 persons dropped by law July 1, 1910, in various branches of the department, all but about a dozen had been provided for in other bureaus and offices within two months. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, there were 636 resignations, 351 removals, and 73 deaths in the Treasury Department. Of the persons resigning or dropped, 287 were reinstated; 605 new appointments were made. During the present fiscal year the number of reinstatements has been much larger. In the case of the plate printers reinstatement would be the policy pursued exclusively, of course. The personal inconvenience to be caused by the change would be only temporary at most, while the gain to the Government and the reorganized service would be permanent.

It would seem that here is presented an ideal opportunity for the labor organizations, instead of opposing progress and the Government, to cooperate with the progressive administrators of the Treasury Department to the lasting benefit of the wageworkers and of the service which employs them.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

[From the Boston Transcript, Thursday, Feb. 16, 1911.]

WASHINGTON, February 15.

Better pay, easier work, and less menace to health are being resisted by the hand plate printers of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, with the support of the American Federation of Labor, and with all the energy at the command of the labor unions. This might appear to be a one-sided statement of the proposition were it not that it is strictly in accordance with the facts, as they are understood by all the officials of the Treasury Department having to do with the printing of notes. Senators and Representatives are being urged by mail to refuse their vote in behalf of the Smoot bill, which would permit the installation of power presses in the bureau, and the plate printers, or some of them, are conducting a campaign among the business men of Washington, which precipitated a small war at the meeting of the chamber of commerce last night.

After months of study and the most careful attention to every detail involved in the proposed change, the Treasury Department decided that if the old law could be repealed and power presses substituted for hand presses for the printing of paper currency, from $750,000 to $1,000,000 could be saved every year in the appropriation for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Joseph E. Ralph, director of the bureau, has been consulted during every stage of the department's investigation, and, although he is and always has been a union-labor man and a practical mechanic, he is as enthusiastically in favor of the change as Assistant Secretary Andrew himself, who is chiefly responsible for the proposition.

EMPLOYEES WILL BE RETAINED.

Just why President Gompers and other labor leaders should oppose the changes proposed by the Government in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is one of the mysteries of the labor movement. Power plate printers are paid $9 a day, while hand-press printers receive only $6. It is much easier to run a power printing machine than to jerk a hand press. The power work also eliminates the danger of rupture to the operator, an extremely important consideration when it is known that from 15 to 20 per cent of the hand-press operators have sustained severe bodily injuries through the strains incident to their work.

Not only will the power plate printers have easier work and better pay, but the Government has practically guaranteed that none of the operators now employed shall lose their positions. The Smoot bill, now before the Senate, provides that only 20 per cent of the work shall be affected each year, until the change from hand to power presses has been made complete. With deaths, removals, and transfers continually occurring, along with the natural increase of business, it is estimated that within four years the complete substitution could be made and not a person be thrown out of employment. The Government, however, has gone this estimate one better and allowed five years for the substitution, thus positively guaranteeing, it would seem, ample provision for the continued employment of all operators now in the service.

GOMPERS LEADS ATTACKS.

President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, has attacked the proposed change in his characteristic style and called upon organized labor throughout the country to exert its influence upon Congress to prevent any change in the law. In a circular sent to organized labor January 31, 1911, Mr. Gompers takes it upon himself to argue against the proposed change solely upon the ground that as it is the duty of the Government to protect the interests of the people against fraud and to throw around paper money every safeguard against the "unlawful issuing" of counterfeit money, the existing law should not be changed. He declares that the purpose of the present law is to maintain the highest standard of excellence in the printing of paper currency. Without exactly making the charge, the Gompers circular implies that the power presses will turn out inferior work and that it may more easily be counterfeited than handwork. The circular makes no mention of the actual and undisputed benefits to the operative, which would come to him through the substitution of power presses.

The Government very quickly challenged Mr. Gompers upon the question of excellence. By direction of the department, Director Ralph requested that the plate printers turn out for him a few sample notes on one of the power presses which already are in use in the bureau for printing internal-revenue stamps. The plate printers flatly refused. Thereupon a peremptory order for the printing of some 40 sample notes was sent to the bureau and the work was done. A few days later Senator SMOOT gave a hearing on the bill, the notes printed by the power press were submitted along with others printed on the hand presses and the labor leaders of the bureau, under whose supervision the work was done, declined to attempt the task of telling the two issues apart. As to counterfeiting, the danger in counterfeiting is in the plates rather than the printing. As a matter of fact, impressions from the power presses would average more uniform than from the hand presses. Some of the opponents of the change have tried to prove their points by comparing American with Canadian notes, but this test is manifestly unfair.

EMPLOYEES NOT QUITE FAIR.

The Treasury Department would feel less earnest over its desire to economize and otherwise improve the administration of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing if it could feel that it was being fairly met by the employees. Secretary MacVeagh entertained a dozen representatives of the Plate Printers' Union at his residence in Sixteenth Street not long ago and patiently went over the whole subject with them, but apparently to no purpose. Senator SMOOT and Director Ralph requested permission to address the Plate Printers' Union upon their proposition not long ago, but the request was refused notwithstanding that the director invariably gives a hearing to any of his printers who feels himself aggrieved.

The matter was taken into the Washington Chamber of Commerce and the committee prepared a noncommittal resolution covering the whole question. This was decided upon yesterday morning. During the day the committee apparently had been approached by representatives of the labor unions, and as they are all local business men, they evidently had been a little frightened, for at the evening session only two members of the committee, which had been unanimous in the morning, stood by the resolution, which was designed to avoid interference of the chamber in an affair which was purely one between the Government and its employees. A resolution condemning the change was substituted, and, as a consequence, Capt. James F. Oyster, president of the chamber and one of the ablest of Washingtonians, left the chair and scored the committee. They were "weak-kneed," he said, through fear of the effect upon their business; and of the member whose defection had brought about the change in sentiment, Capt. Oyster stated that he had allowed his private interests to interfere with his duty as a servant of the chamber.

The contest is being actively waged, and in view of its belief that it proposes nothing detrimental to organized labor as such or to the interests of the employees, the Treasury Department is disposed to push the issue to the limit. The department officials feel that they have taken into consideration the interests of the operators equally with those of the Government, and that they had been much more considerate than any private concern would be when even a smaller economy than that contemplated in this matter was involved. It is needless to say that the Senators and Representatives who have been asked to block the clause in the Smoot bill authorizing the use of power presses have been given no information by organized labor as to the real merits of the proposition.

The employees are by no means a unit in antagonizing the department. Many of them take the same view of the cases as does Director Ralph, but they dare not openly take a stand against the union leaders.

MACVEAGH'S POSITION STATED.

Following is the letter sent to the Washington Chamber of Commerce by Secretary MacVeagh and read last evening:

JAMES F. OYSTER, Esq.,
President Chamber of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: It has been brought to my attention that the chamber of commerce has been asked to express an opinion upon the introduction of power presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and I should like to express through you the attitude of this department toward legislation which is pending to make this reform possible.

I should very much hesitate to advocate the change if it were likely to work hardship to the employees of the bureau or to deprive them of positions which they have long held. But the proposed change provides that the substitution of power presses for hand shall be made in such installments that in any one year no more than one-fifth of the work shall be affected. As a matter of fact, on account of the increasing work of the bureau, and the frequent vacancies which occur through promotion and transfer, the change could be made within four years, and the extra year has been suggested in order to make this certain beyond peradventure. If we add to this fact a comparison of the wages which hand printers receive now with the wages which they will receive if power presses are introduced, it appears that the employees will receive a substantial increase in remuneration through the introduction of the proposed system. At the same time the work will be less arduous and less harmful physically. The claim that the bureau employees would suffer in consequence of the change is, in my opinion, exactly the reverse of the truth.

I want also to add that if I were not convinced that the technical standard of engraving and printing would not be lowered by the introduction of these presses, the plan would not have my indorsement. The recent experiment made in the bureau, of printing notes by power upon presses that were quite unprepared for the work, indicated that even the most expert employees of the bureau could not distinguish the money thus printed by power from other similar sheets printed by hand. The impression, if it exists in anyone's mind, that printing by power would make our paper money and bonds of lower technical standard and more easily counterfeited, has demonstrably no foundation in fact.

I should esteem it a favor if you would be good enough to communicate this information to the gentlemen of the chamber of commerce at their meeting.

Respectfully, yours, FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary.

DIRECTOR RALPH THREATENED.

Following is a copy of a letter received recently by Director Ralph:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., February 8, 1911.

"Mr. RALPH: The big, swelled-headed bluffer. Your days are numbered; so take warning; the whole bureau has a disgust for you. A man who would do injustice to his fellow men and female employees for self-interest is not as good as a dog; and you better look out you don't get your block knocked off some dark night, for you have some bitter enemies; it is also knowing that you are crooked, and you may land behind the bars before we are done with you.

"Respectfully,"

[Skull and cross-bones.]

Senator SMOOT also is in receipt of threatening correspondence of the same character.

TREATY WITH RUSSIA.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 368), which was read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the treaty of 1832 between the United States and Russia should be abrogated because of the discrimination by Russia between American citizens in the administration of the treaty.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 28626. An act to amend the internal-revenue laws relating to distilled spirits, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 32436. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GRANT OF LANDS TO SEATTLE, WASH.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5432) to authorize the city of Seattle, Wash., to purchase certain lands for the protection of the source of its water supply; which were, on page 1, line 3, to strike out all after "in," down to and including "east," in line 4; on page 1, lines 11 and 12, to strike out "heretofor" and insert "heretofore;" and on page 2, to strike out all of line 1 down to and including line 13, page 3, and insert:

SEC. 2. That upon the deposit, within one year of the passage of this act, by the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington, with the Secretary of the Interior, of a sum estimated by him as sufficient to pay the cost of the survey herein provided for, the said Secretary shall cause to be executed a survey, defining the limits of the drainage basin of Cedar River within the area withdrawn by section 1 of this act and pay for the same out of the appropriation for public-land surveys, and a sum sufficient to pay the cost of such survey shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the appropriation for public-land surveys, out of the sum so deposited by the city of Seattle, and the remainder of the sum so deposited, if any, shall be repaid to such city, and upon the completion of such survey and its approval by the Secretary of the Interior the lands withdrawn by section 1 of this act not within the drainage basin of Cedar River shall be restored to their present status.

SEC. 3. That upon the deposit with the Secretary of the Interior within one year of the passage of this act by the city of Seattle, State of Washington, of a sum estimated by the Secretary of the Interior to be sufficient to cover the cost of the examination and appraisal herein provided for, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall each designate one qualified appraiser, and the two appraisers thus designated shall designate a third appraiser, who shall be a resident of King County, Wash., not a Federal officer or employee, who shall be familiar with the stumpage value of timber in the locality to be appraised, and the board of appraisers thus constituted shall proceed to an examination and appraisal of the present commercial stumpage value of the timber on the public lands within the drainage basin of Cedar River in the area withdrawn by section 1 of this act, the cost of such examination and appraisal to be paid out of the appropriation for public-land surveys. Upon the completion of such examination and appraisal and its approval by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture a sum sufficient to pay the cost thereof shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the appropriation for public-land surveys, out of the sum deposited therefor by the city of Seattle, and the remainder of such sum, if any, shall be repaid to said city.

SEC. 4. That within one year after the approval of the survey and appraisal provided for in this act, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to patent to the city of Seattle all of the public lands within the drainage basin of Cedar River in the area withdrawn under section 1 of this act, upon the payment by the said city of Seattle of the sum estimated by the board of appraisers provided for in section 2 of this act as being the present commercial stumpage value of the timber on the public lands within such area: Provided, That if the sum of such estimate shall be less than the sum of $1.25 per acre for all of the lands to be patented the city of Seattle shall pay the sum of $1.25 per acre for said lands: And provided further, That there is hereby reserved to the United States all mineral deposits in said lands and the right to dispose thereof and to use such lands for such purpose.

Mr. PILES. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

REVISION OF LAWS—JUDICIARY TITLE.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask that the judiciary title bill which has just been received from the House of Representatives be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 7031) to codify and revise the laws relating to the judiciary, and the action of the House requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill and amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. HEYBURN, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas conferees on the part of the Senate.

HELEN S. HOGAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives (H. Con. Res. 62), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate be, and hereby are, directed to erase their signatures to the bill (H. R. 25081) for the relief of Helen S. Hogan, and that the said bill be reenrolled with the words "Act of February 26" changed to "Act of February 25."

REGENT OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to request the Senate to return to the House of Representatives "Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 145) providing for the filling of a vacancy which will occur on March 1, 1911, in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress."

Mr. BACON. I did not catch the purport of the resolution. What is it?

Mr. LODGE. There was a mistake made, I will say to the Senator from Georgia. The proposed regent was put down as a citizen of Virginia. The law requires that he shall be a citizen of the District.

Mr. BACON. A citizen of the District.

Mr. LODGE. Under the law, as the Senator knows, there have to be two members of the board from the city of Washington.

Mr. BACON. I am myself responsible for the mistake. I am glad it is to be corrected.

Mr. LODGE. They would like to have it returned to the House, and they will correct it there and send it back to us.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the House of Representatives will be complied with.

EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY AND WORKMAN'S COMPENSATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] members of the commission on the part of the Senate, appointed for the purpose of making a thorough investigation of the subject of employer's liability and workman's compensation, as provided for in joint resolution of the House of Representatives, entitled "Joint resolution for appointment of commission to investigate the matter of employer's liability and workman's compensation," approved June 25, 1910, in the place of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], excused, and the late Senator from Colorado, Mr. Hughes.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there other morning business? If not, morning business is closed. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE].

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will yield to the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana yields.

Mr. SCOTT. I want to say that at the very earliest moment next week, and on every day thereafter from Monday on, I shall try to get up the so-called Sulloway pension bill. While we have been edified by the discussion we have had in the past week and the galleries have been highly entertained, a great number of old soldiers have died within that time. I have a letter this morning from the postmaster in a little village saying that since we brought the bill over four soldiers getting mail at his office have died.

Mr. President, while we are talking here these old soldiers are dropping off rapidly; and I do hope that it will be the pleasure of the Senate will allow me to round out my 12 years, which will terminate next week, by passing this bill for my old comrades.

Mr. BAILEY. Fifty-five million dollars is a little too much to pay for that.

Mr. SCOTT. It was not too much when these men were needed to defend this country and make it possible for the Senator from Texas to be here to-day——

Mr. BAILEY. O Mr. President——

Mr. SCOTT (continuing). Representing a part of the entire United States. I do hope that the plea of poverty will not prevail, when we see the money that is being wasted on the Panama Canal. Let us not begrudge these old veterans thirty millions. It is thirty millions. There is no use of putting it higher. Thirty millions is high enough.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from West Virginia forgets, when he charges the country with illiberality toward these old soldiers, that we are already paying $153,000,000 the next fiscal year. During the last fiscal year we appropriated $161,000,000. That is a sum larger than any government in the history of the world ever paid for pensions in a single year, and that, too, 44 years after the war closed.

Now, to add this thirty millions, as the Senator says—and more than fifty millions, as the department estimates—would make a pension bill above $200,000,000. I should love to see the Senator from West Virginia round out his career in the Senate gracefully, and though I personally like him, I am glad to see his career terminate, since a Democrat succeeds him. I should be willing to pay him almost any compliment except one that would put such a tax on the Public Treasury; and he is not apt to pass this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER and others. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was very glad to yield to the Senator from West Virginia, I am in entire sympathy with him, but I can not further yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. From the Committee on Naval Affairs——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can not recognize the Senator from New Hampshire for that purpose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is true.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is to make a report. The Senator from Indiana has not commenced his speech. I thought he could yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana had been recognized, and the Chair can not permit him to yield for that purpose.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should very much like to conclude my remarks. I was delayed yesterday.

Mr. BURROWS. It will take but a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana declines to yield. The Chair——

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan will wait until the Senator who has the floor yields.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should prefer to conclude my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must beg the Senator from Michigan not to attempt to proceed when the Senator from Indiana has refused to yield.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BURROWS. A question of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan is not in order in attempting to proceed when the Senator from Indiana refuses to yield.

Mr. BURROWS. A question of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair misunderstood the Senator from Michigan. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. Can we not have laid before the Senate the resolution to which the Senator is to address himself?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did that the other day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It must be done each day.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask that the resolution be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If anybody has any doubt about what I am going to address the Senate on, I will make it entirely clear.

Let us see what the parliamentary situation is. This matter has been before the Senate now for a good while, and this is the first time that anybody has asked that anything be specifically laid before the Senate. The report of the committee was on the table before the resolution was offered. Most of the speeches were made on it.

Mr. President, I think I shall proceed.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask that the resolution be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I object. I had it laid before the Senate the other day, and I shall call it up at the proper time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state what is the request of the Senator from Michigan, because the Senator from Indiana yielded to him for that purpose. The request is that the Chair lay before the Senate a resolution, which the Secretary will state by title.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 315, offered by Mr. BEVERIDGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I object until I conclude my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. On yesterday, to take just one moment——

Mr. HEYBURN. I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho will state it.

Mr. HEYBURN. No question is pending before the Senate to which any Member may speak.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. This is getting——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. LODGE. On the point of order, if I may——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the Senator from Massachusetts on the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand, this matter has been lying on the table——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Subject to call.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands. The resolution has not been referred to any committee.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is now upon the table.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If I may proceed, I will call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this is the first time that any such disposition——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho has raised a point of order, which will be disposed of. The Chair thinks the Senator from Indiana can proceed, he having the floor.

Mr. HEYBURN. My impression was that before proceeding a motion to take the matter from the table for consideration must be the basis of procedure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator's impression is incorrect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not. The Chair thinks a Senator can proceed to talk in the air or of the air without anything before the Senate, if he has the floor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator——

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I will insist on finishing the statement on the point of order. The Senator's patience will probably endure.

Mr. President, I do not intend, of course, to make a proposition that has not, in my judgment, some basis under the rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly not.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have not heretofore understood that a matter on the table could be made the subject of discussion until it was taken up for that purpose. That seems to me so obviously a parliamentary rule that it caused me to make the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. It ought to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it would be the ordinary proceeding, but it has been objected to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana has the floor.

[Mr. BEVERIDGE resumed and concluded the speech begun by him on Tuesday last and continued on yesterday. The entire speech is printed below.]

Tuesday, February 21, 1911.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, what is the exact question which we are called upon to decide? As the time for a vote draws near it is vital that this question shall be clearly before the mind of every Senator. I say this because during a debate more prolongued, if not more heated, than any similar debate in the history of the Senate, it is possible that this question may have been obscured. I make no complaint of that. Perhaps it is but natural that this should be so. Spirited controversy often generates heat rather than light. It often tends to the fervor of advocacy rather than to the calmness of judgment.

But, Mr. President, we are judges, not advocates. The attempt to affect our feelings by thunderous denunciation or pathetic appeal will pass almost as soon as the echoes of the voices that produced it. But our judgment remains; the record remains; the law remains; our decision endures not only as to this case, but as to all future cases.

As judges then, Mr. President, let us rise above the obscuring clouds of excuse and confusion and fix our eyes clearly upon the issue we must decide.

I. THE ISSUE.

THE ISSUE NOT THE PERSONAL FORTUNES OF SITTING MEMBER.

What is that issue, Mr. President? Is it the personal fortunes, feelings, or career of the sitting Member? No, Mr. President. If it were only that sympathy would work its spell unaided. If the personal fortunes, feelings, or career of the sitting Member were the only issue mere kindliness would cause us to look with forgiveness, and, if possible, with favor, upon anything that affected his personal concerns provided it did not involve and was not produced by corruption or bribery.

For, Mr. President, deep in the hearts of all of us is the spirit of good will toward one another, unless crime or intentional wrong-doing prevents. Sometimes we think we forget it for a moment, but it always is there. Sometimes the conflict of debate, opinion, and purpose makes us deceive ourselves into feeling that we have for one another a dislike or even an animosity. But those feelings are not permanent.

Let but the hand of misfortune or sickness touch one of our number, and depths of sympathy in our hearts which we little suspected are broken up and there wells forth from our souls streams of compassion and anxious regard toward our stricken colleague. Let death call one of our number, and his gracious qualities stand forth before our vision unmarred by any unkind thought.

So, Mr. President, if ony the personal ambitions of the sitting Member were involved, unconnected with corrupt practices in their behalf, there is not a Senator here who would wish them ill, much less do anything to hinder them. Certainly, under such conditions, I would not, Mr. President. I do not subscribe to the philosophy of the great French cynic, Rochefoucauld, that every human being rejoices when he hears something against even his dearest friend. I rejoice in the success and progress of every man who has earned it honestly.

So, Mr. President, if in this Chamber there was a single man who so far as the personal concerns of the sitting Member are involved would wish them ill or try to do them ill, provided sheer public honesty were not involved, these appeals to our sympathy based on personal habits, place of abode, or home relationship might be pertinent.

But this, Mr. President, is no such case. Here is no such issue. This is not a criminal court. This is the Senate of the United States sitting as the most exalted tribunal known to human history or to mankind to-day to determine the gravest issue that possibly can arise under free institutions.

THE VALIDITY OF THIS ELECTION THE ONLY ISSUE.

What is that issue, Mr. President? It is the validity of an election held under a government whose very existence depends upon the purity of its elections. It is the integrity of the election, not of the Member. In the Payne case it was truly declared:

> The integrity of the election not of the Member is the question under this clause of the Constitution.

That is the issue. What election, Mr. President? An election to the Senate of the United States. What does that mean? What is the Senate of the United States? What powers, duties, and dignities devolve upon a Member of this body? The most varied and far-reaching with which any officer under any free government is clothed in any country in the world to-day or in history. As I shall show in a moment, Mr. President, a Senator of the United States exercises wider influence, more divergent powers than any public functionary on earth except only the ruler of an unlimited monarchy.

We pass on every law. We are legislators, and legislators, too, who of all the parliamentary bodies in this world, still have free and unshackled speech. More than that, we ratify every convention with foreign nations. The influence of every vote cast here on every treaty runs out over all the waters of the world into every cabinet of every land. That is not all. We partake of the executive functions. Only by the advice and consent of Members of this body are appointments to office made under the laws and Constitution of the United States.

Nor is this all. We also are members of a court, Mr. President, the highest court known to man. We alone can try the impeachment of the judges of the Nation. This is the only tribunal that can unseat a President; for if the House deems his conduct worthy of impeachment, the Senate of the United States determines the fate of the Chief Magistrate of the Republic.

But all are familiar with the powers of a Senator of the United States. I enumerate them only that we may understand the magnitude of the election, the validity of which is the only issue before us. Legislator, part executive, high diplomat, arbiter sitting on the bench in the trial of the Nation's judges, and of the President of the Republic himself, the fathers placed in the hands of a United States Senator more power than in any other official of this Government, or of any government on earth except the arbitrary power wielded by an autocrat.

AMERICAN INSTITUTIONS—AMERICAN CHARACTER ON TRIAL.

Therefore, Mr. President, the fathers expected that the election to a place in this body would be defended jealously, determinedly, fiercely by the people and by the Senate itself. Every consideration that should guard the purity of the appointment of a judge, the election of a Member of the House, the selection of a diplomat who deals with other nations for us, the choice of a President of the United States, all combine to circle this Chamber round with a wall of sacred fire through which no impure influence should penetrate.

So, Mr. President, the sitting Member is not on trial here. It has been said that the Senate is on trial. I do not think so. But American institutions are on trial. In the validity of an election sleeps the question which searches out the heart of our institutions and which as we answer it well may mark a period in the ongoing or decline of the Nation. Indeed, Mr. President, in the end the character of the American people is on trial, as I shall demonstrate.

Now, Mr. President, if we then have the issue itself before us, with all those things that might cloud and confuse it dismissed; and if the magnitude of that issue is clear to us, in what spirit should we approach it?

It will be helpful, Mr. President, to examine the experience of other countries. Patrick Henry said: "I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience." This is not a trial of a petty criminal in a police court, soon to be forgotten and of little consequence. No, this business has to do with the destiny of a people. In so fateful a matter should we willfully close our eyes and seal our ears to the struggles that other peoples have had with this dragon of corruption?

It is said that most human affairs are "locked up from mortal eye in shady leaves of destiny." But we have no excuse for such easy ignorance. This secret is not "locked up from mortal eye," for we have flaming lessons from the history of the past and from the experience of the world in our own times.

So, Mr. President, that I may lay clearly before the Senate and country the spirit with which we should approach this grave matter, I shall cite the experience of two nations on this particular thing, one contemporaneous and one ancient. I select these from the multitude of examples because they afford so perfect a contrast to one another and such plain instruction to us and to our Republic of whose honor we are guardians and of whose life we are defenders.

II. THE LAW.

BRIBERY TREASON AT COMMON LAW.

I refer, of course, Mr. President, first to England, the mother country. By the English common law bribery was treated as treason, especially in the case of judges. Lord Chief Justice Thorpe was beheaded for accepting bribes. The Earl of Middlesex was fined £50,000, a quarter of a million dollars, amounting in value, as money is now counted, to more than a million dollars, deposed from office, disgraced.

Of course all of us recall the terrible fate of perhaps the greatest intellect since Aristotle (excepting possibly Shakespeare), Bacon, that mighty mind in law and philosophy, that

"Secretary to Nature" as Walton called him, Lord Bacon, who for accepting bribes while a justice of the courts of England, was fined £40,000, imprisoned, removed from office, incapacitated from holding any place of trust or profit under the Crown.

That was the way the common law of England, which is the basis of our law, looked on the crime of bribery. And in elections, as Coke said in his Institutes, it was regarded as an offense so heinous that "one act of bribery poisons the whole fountain."

It is worth while, Mr. President, before we come to the consideration of the testimony in this case to consider the growth of the law of bribery in England, how the English Parliament and English judges regarded and administered the law applicable to it, so that we may have the light that that gives us in determining the gravity of the offense, the amount and nature of testimony required, and especially the law of agency.

THE "PRACTICAL POLITICS" OF GEORGE III.

Bribery in England began to be scandalously noticeable under the Stuarts, and it grew until its highest reign of corruption was under George III, from whom our forefathers successfully rebelled. According to the defenders of this election, George Washington and his "ragged Continentals" never should have rebelled. For was not George III the exemplar and, by his deeds, the apologist for this election? That monarch was a superb, "practical politician." He would be greatly admired by a class of American politicians if he were living to-day and active in American politics.

Indeed, George III would be the ablest of "party managers" if he were in American public life at the present time. George III used offices to influence votes in Parliament; he distributed cash in order to secure the election of members of Parliament; he resorted to every device of political manipulation so much admired in the United States in our own times; he was highly skilled in the technique of "influence," thoroughly practiced in the arts of "practical politics."

This gave rise, Mr. President, to the "orders of Parliament" upon the subject of bribery; and, to hurry over this historical review, the present Corrupt Practices Act of the United Kingdom grew out of that. From the statute of 1854 as amended in 1866 and still further in 1884, and as it exists in its Draconian severity and perfection at the present day, the Corrupt Practices Act of the United Kingdom is the result of that shameless corruption which reached its putrid climax under George III.

A SINGLE ACT OF BRIBERY INVALIDATES ELECTION.

Now, Mr. President, to show that I am not wrong in my statement of the common law as to bribery in elections, I read from Shepherd on the Law of Elections, as follows:

> Bribery by a candidate, though in one instance only, and though a majority of unbribed votes remain in his favor, will avoid the particular election and disqualify him from being reelected to fill such vacancy.

Cushing, who is the American authority on this subject, says as to the common law of bribery, which I want to make clear before I take up the statute:

> In England, before the enactment of any of the statutes on the subject, bribery was not only a high misdemeanor at common law, punishable by indictment or information, but when practiced at elections of members of Parliament was also a breach of parliamentary privilege and punishable accordingly; and it is an offense of so heinous a character, and so utterly subversive of the freedom of election, that when proved to have been practiced, though in one instance only and though a majority of unbribed voters remain, the election will be absolutely void.
> This severity is justified on the ground that, in a country where bribery is so common as to form the subject of investigation in a large proportion of election cases, it is absolutely essential to the preservation of the freedom of elections.

And Cushing goes on as to the effect of that law in this country:

> Whether the same effect would be held to follow in this country may admit of some question, or perhaps depend upon the degree of guilt attached in the several States to the offense of bribery. This offense, though much less common here than in England, is nevertheless considered as so subversive of the freedom of election and so disgraceful to the parties concerned that it is made an express ground of disqualification in the constitutions of several of the States. In all such States, therefore, whatever may be the case in others, there can be no doubt that an election tainted with bribery ought to be held void, without reference to the number of votes thereby affected.

It was declared, Mr. President, in the famous Litchfield case, Mr. Justice Willes giving the opinion, as follows:

> With respect to bribery, the law is perfectly clear. Bribery at common law, equally as by act of Parliament, avoided any election at which it occurred. If there were general bribery, no matter from what fund or by what person, and although the sitting member and his agents had nothing to do with it, it would defeat an election, on the ground that it was not a proceeding pure and free, as an election ought to be, but that it was corrupted and vitiated by an influence which, coming from no matter what quarter, had defeated it and shown it to be abortive * * *.
> If it were shown that the agent of the member bribed even without the authority, and contrary to the express orders, of the member, his seat was forfeited—not by way of punishment to the member, but in order to avoid the danger that would exist if persons subordinate to the candidate during an election were led away, by their desire to benefit their superior, into illegal acts the precise extent of which it was difficult to prove, BUT A SINGLE ONE OF WHICH, if proved, it was the policy of the law to hold, would have the effect of avoiding the proceeding.

I observe here, Mr. President, that the agent to whom Mr. Justice Willes refers and to whom other English decisions refer, that I shall read in a moment, is not only the "election agent" provided by the statute, as we have been informed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], whose all-embracing erudition is the envy and wonder of us all; but, as I shall demonstrate in a moment, "the agent" referred to in those decisions also contemplates anyone who has a color for acting in behalf of the candidate. All of us will be amazed to learn that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] could have made such a mistake, by any posibility. For we all know that he is peculiarly accurate in law and history.

Such, Mr. President, was the common law with reference to bribery in elections—the common law which is the foundation of our own jurisprudence—and it was from this common law on bribery that the present Corrupt Practices Act of the United Kingdom grew.

Mr. President, what did the present Corrupt Practices Act do? It fixed the penalties, which the common law did not; it made definitions precise. By gradual amendment it was extended to cover the smallest details of elections—"treating," payment of car fare, the using of influence, the promise of office, as well as the payment of money.

ENGLISH DECISIONS ON BRIBERY IN ELECTIONS.

How have the English judges continuously interpreted that statute? What has been the spirit with which Great Britain has met this peril of bribery? I am reading these decisions not in the hope of inducing the Senate at the present moment to apply the English rule and the sound rule to this case; I thoroughly understand that the Senate will not do that at this particular time. It will after a while—but not just now. However, when I get to the testimony I shall show that this case needs no sterner rule than the complacent and unsound rule pronounced by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in two or three Senate bribery cases.

I repeat, I do not expect the Senate just at this time to adopt the true and sound rule that one act of bribery in behalf of a successful senatorial candidate makes invalid his election to a seat in this body. That is the only justifiable rule, a rule absolutely necessary to the purity of senatorial elections and to the integrity of the Senate. That rule will be adopted by the Senate before many years have passed. But the Senate is not yet in a frame of mind to take this correct position. But perhaps public opinion will supply another frame of mind before long.

So I cite these decisions to show the policy of a great people in dealing with this public cancer, which has ended the life of more than one great nation and which the English people have succeeded in excising from their vitals. These decisions show us the spirit with which the English people approach this grave question. And what we need in determining this and all such cases in the right spirit.

These decisions, as Senators will observe, are especially applicable to one essential part of this case—that of agency—though their greatest significance is in showing how a great people imperiled by this menace has dealt with it. The question that is going finally to come before us is whether we shall deal with bribery and corruption with the conscience and courage with which England mastered it or whether we shall deal with it with the same reckless indifference with which another great Republic dealt with the same offense.

Shall we free ourselves from this body of death and survive, as England has done, or chain ourselves still more firmly to it and let it drag us to our national grave as the Roman Republic did?

In the Blackburn case (O'M. & H., p. 198) Mr. Justice Willes said in stating the case:

> It was proved that on the 12th of October—that is, about a month before the election—a circular was issued by an association in the town called the Conservative Association, addressed to "every manager, overlooker, and tradesman, and any other person having influence," in the town of Blackburn, requesting them to "secure in the municipal elections, as well as the parliamentary, the success" of the respondents; and it went on to say, "we venture to urge upon you most strongly the necessity of vigorous personal effort to secure the return" * * * of the respondents. This circular was afterwards adopted by the respondents, and the association which had issued it was adopted by them in place of a committee for the management of the election.

Mr. Justice Willes, in his judgment, said:

> This circular must be taken as being the act of the respondents just as much as if each of them had written a letter to this effect to every "manager, overlooker, and tradesman, and any other person having influence," in the town. It is a power of attorney to the extent to which it goes to every individual in any of those classes to do that which the circular requests him to do. It must be looked to, I think, as the foundation of authority and agency, such as existed in the election.

It appears to me that its effect was to make an agent of every person having authority down to the last grade; that of overlookers over the hands, and to request, and therefore authorize, each such to influence the hands who were under him for the purpose of inducing them to vote for the candidates upon whose behalf this document was issued, and any overlooker, and consequently anybody in that or any higher grade, who bona fide took up the Tory side and who acted upon the circular and did canvass for the respondents became their agent, and his acts did bind them.

And it is enacted and settled as the law by the corrupt-practices prevention act of 1854, section 36, which, to my mind, does no more than lay down in very distinct terms that which has been always the understood law of Parliament, or, rather, the common law of the land, with respect to the election of members of Parliament; that is to say, that no matter how well the member may have conducted himself in the election, no matter how clear his character may be from any imputation of corrupt practices in the matter, yet if an authorized agent of his, a person who has been set in motion by him to conduct the election, or canvass voters on his behalf, is in the course of his agency guilty of corrupt practices, an election obtained under such circumstances can not be maintained.

As it has been expressed from early time, no person can win and wear a prize upon whose behalf the contest has not been legitimately and fairly carried on, or, as it was expressed upon the occasion to which I refer, non coronabitur qui non legitime certaverit, which is only so much in Latin showing the antiquity of the principle which I have already expressed in English. * * *

The amount of injury done by the agent, if the injury has been done of the character which I have described, is immaterial. If an agent bribe one voter with 2s. 6d., and that voter votes for the candidate, election void. If an agent bribe one voter with 2s. 6d., and the voter taking the 2s. 6d. with purpose, express or implied, of voting accordingly, should break his promise and vote for the other side, election still void.

Although the result of the bribe was nothing as to the poll, the result was in point of law that an illegality of so gross a character and so difficult to trace would have been committed that no election would be safe, no community would be sure but that elections were gained by the exercise of corrupt practices, unless for the sake of all the election in which an agent has been guilty of such a malpractice were held void as against the principal of that agent.

It is not by way of punishment to the principal that the election is held void; it is not because the majority has been swayed or even affected by the malpractice that the election is held void, but it is because malpractices designated as corrupt by the common law and by the legislature in the corrupt-practices act are so odious and so dangerous that it is thought better to hold void an election where either such practices HAVE GENERALLY PREVAILED, WHETHER TRACEABLE TO A MEMBER OR HIS AGENTS OR NOT, or where a single instance of such corrupt practice has been distinctly traced to the member or to an agent of the member.

I next read from the opinion in the Norwich case (2 O'M. & H., p. 39), so called. In this case, which was decided in 1874, Mr. Justice Keating delivered the opinion, and he deals with the "hardship" which this interpretation, this Draconian interpretation, of the law of England by which she has guarded the purity of her elections and therefore her life works upon the candidate. He says:

It seems hard at first sight that a single act of bribery should avoid an election; but when an act of bribery is committed the whole election of the party bribing is tainted. It is no longer an election; it is utterly void. On this point I would refer to the learned judgment of my brother Willes in the Blackburn case. This result may be undoubtedly a cruel consequence of the law of agency as applicable to elections: it is, however, a law that arises from the necessity of the case, and is well put by the learned Scotch judge, Lord Barcaple, in the Greenock case.

* * * * * * *

If it were proved that a candidate or his agent hired men to attend the nomination, and to hold up their hands upon the occasion, my impression decidedly is that it would be illegal and would avoid the election.

In the Shrewsbury case (2 O'M. & H., p. 36) Baron Channell, in his judgment, said as to avoiding an election on account of a single and insignificant act of bribery:

If an act of bribery is clearly made out and agency is clearly proved, I am disposed to agree with the dictum of my brother Willes, * * * and to think that a judge is not at liberty to weigh the importance of that act, or to take into consideration the effect it may have had upon the election, but he is bound to apply the express provisions of the act of Parliament, without going into the question of the comparative significance of the act of bribery which has been proved to have been committed.

In the Greenock case (2 O'M. & H., p. 247) Lord Barcaple, in his judgment, said as to the principle to be applied in dealing with questions of agency in election inquiries:

I think there are three principles applicable to three kinds of matters. There is first of all the strictest of all principles, that which is applicable to a criminal charge, and there you are responsible for nothing but your own individual guilt. That is a thing consistent with ordinary common sense. There is then the principle that is applicable to actions of a civil kind raised against a party on the ground of a wrong done, and in which it is proved that the wrong was done by the defender's agent—that is to say, a person employed by the defender while he was doing the thing he was employed to do; but there comes in the principle that he was employed to do the particular work and that he was not employed to do the wrong.

Then there is the third class of cases with which we are at present engaged, where, in these election petitions, it being proved that a candidate is having his election carried on by a committee or certain canvassers, those canvassers do something which, if the candidate is responsible for it, will invalidate the election.

And it is held that he is responsible for it in the sense of making the validity of the election depend upon it. I do not see how these petitions would be of the least use otherwise, because I suppose that there are very few candidates, indeed, who undertake the practice of corruption by their own hand. I presume there are equally few candidates, or very nearly so, who ever say to their agents that they are to proceed corruptly in the matter.

In the Aylesbury case (Saeger, p. 79) Mr. Justice Field said:

Any person whom a candidate puts in his place to do a portion of the task that he has to do, namely, to procure his election as a member of Parliament, is a person for whose acts he would be liable.

I now read from the celebrated and recent Great Yarmouth case (Saeger, p. 81), decided in 1906. The facts were that a man who had interested himself in the election obtained the use of a vehicle and took voters to the polls and in some cases gave them money.

The candidate, on hearing of the petition, repudiated this person; and it was said that he was not on the list of "workers" and had not, therefore, received express instructions, as other "workers" had, not to do anything illegal.

Mr. Justice Channell, in determining this case, used the following language:

There are principles, and the substance of the principle is that if a man is employed at an election to get you votes; or, if without being employed, he is authorized to get you votes; or if, although neither employed nor authorized, he does to your knowledge get you votes, and you accept it and adopt it, then, in either of these cases, he becomes a person for whose acts you are responsible in this sense: That if his acts had been of an illegal character you can not retain the benefit which those illegal acts have helped to procure for you—helped to procure for you, I say, because it is not necessary, of course, that the bribery should extend to the full amount of the cases necessary to put you in a majority.

No case in this country will be found to deny these decisions on the law of agency in elections. I repeat that this most recent interpretation of the English statute and of an election under it shows how unexpectedly erroneous our profoundly learned friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] was when he said that the term "agent" under English law applied only to the "election agent" "appointed in writing." Whoever looked up the law for the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] should have been more thorough.

The argument against the English rule that it was pretty hard on the candidate was instantly answered by all of the judges that the office did not exist for the candidate; the office belongs to the people. The office is not created to satisfy the ambitions of the candidate; the office is created as an instrument of the people who made it.

MOMENTOUS RESULTS OF THE ENGLISH LAW.

Mr. President, what have been the results of this drastic treatment of bribery and corruption by English law and English courts? First of all, from a greater debauchery of elections than the world knew since the time of the fall of the Roman Republic, England has developed into a period of remarkable purity of elections. And that has had large public consequences.

Does anybody doubt that, but for an unbribed House of Commons the last budget would have been passed with all the powers of wealth and privilege fighting the imposition of a land tax upon great estates which are idle and have been since the time of William the Conqueror and pay no part of the burdens of the British people's government? With all those forces fighting that budget, do you suppose, Mr. President, a House of Commons ever would have passed it filled with bribe-bought members?

It is not a question, you see, of settling some man's personal fate. It is a question of caring for the welfare of the people. Does anybody doubt that Gladstone never would have advanced one inch with his great lands reforms in Ireland if he had been confronted by such a corrupt Parliament as George the Third and Lord North purchased to serve their foul purposes? Does anybody doubt that manhood suffrage in the United Kingdom never would have been adopted but for this stringent method of handling the election cases that guards the purity of Parliament?

Senators say, at our luncheon table, how unfortunate it will be for this Senator or that. Had we not better ask, How unfortunate for millions of people it will be if we look lightly on a crime against free institutions so heinous that it involves the perpetuity of our government.

Mr. President, we talk about the justice of our Revolution. Our Declaration of Independence is our Magna Charta we declare. Yet what caused our Revolution? It was the unjust and oppressive acts of the British Parliament, was it not? What Parliament? The purchased Parliament whose election George the Third of England secured by the bribery of the British electorate.

Does anybody believe that, if the purity of elections to the British Parliament that exists to-day had existed at the time of our Revolution, a single one of those unjust acts would have been enacted, which caused our fathers successfully to raise the standard of revolt?

I know Senators will say, What is the use of going back to the Revolution? What do we care about the land laws of Ireland? What matter to us is manhood suffrage in the United Kingdom? What concern is it of ours that the great principles of justice have been put in the recent budget?

WHAT PURE ELECTIONS MEANS TO US.

This is the concern it is to us—that by reason of the purity of the British Parliament, secured by England's laws and their drastic application, an end has been put to those practices which caused us to sever ourselves from the mother country. It means this to us, that the same cause that produced a malign result there will produce the same result here—and that the remedies that cleansed English elections will purify American elections.

It means this to us, that the same great forces which always have, do now, and always will, in a country where free elections occur, manifest themselves through bribery will prevent the passage of those measures upon which the welfare of struggling millions depend. That is what it means to us.

I intend, Mr. President, with all my power to set forth to the Senate, and in so far as I may to the country, the mighty question which we are to determine. It is not merely the seating or unseating of a Senator at all. No, we are dealing with an offense which runs through history and which, according to the way in which various people have dealt with it in the past, have strengthened them or killed them.

Contrast the England of to-day, Mr. President, with Rome. Every student in the world has noted the startling similarities in many developments rapidly ripening in the American Republic with those that occurred in Rome when that Republic began its decline—love of luxury, scandalously vast wealth ill-gotten, corrupt efforts for office and power, the use of these in behalf of "the interests" of that day. Chief of these, Mr. President, was the subject of bribery.

BRIBERY AND THE REPUBLIC OF ROME.

In Rome bribery was the first definite symptom of a fatal disease. Patriotic statesmen clearly saw that it would end the liberties of the Roman people, and the people themselves instinctively felt that they must throttle this evil if they were to continue to exist as a free people. As early as 180 years before Christ, the Lex Cornelia punished bribery of voters with exile.

But severe as this penalty was the abuses continued and increased, and the last century of the Republic began with bribery, the most dangerous foe which the Roman Republic faced. The Acilia Calurnia added heavy fines for bribery, whether successful or not, and forever deprived the citizen attempting it from holding any office.

The reason these two penalties were expected to stop this form of corruption was that money and the holding of office had become the twin gods before whose foul shrine of selfishness every ambitious Roman worshiped. To be rich and to hold office were the two great purposes of every ambitious Roman. "How much money have you?" and "What high office do you hold?" were the questions the answers to which fixed the status of the Roman citizen as to success or failure.

But in spite of the shrewd estimate of Roman character on which the Acilia Calurnia was founded, the capitalists or "financiers" as Ferrero calls them and the politicians of that day trampled it beneath their sordid and reckless feet, and were able to prevent its execution because of the growing indifference of the Roman people themselves to the fate of their institutions and their descendants. "Sufficient unto the day are the benefits thereof" had become the unspoken rule which guided the great body of that once mighty people.

In that immortal period which produced Cicero and Cæsar, Crassus and Cato, there was a slight recrudescence of that ancient virtue, whose best expression was "To be a Roman citizen is nobler than to be a king."

But, after all, it was a feeble flame of righteousness—a very feeble flame considering Crassus, the master financier of his day and subsequent Roman history. Yet it resulted in the Lex Tulia of Cicero's consulate, B. C. 64, which extended the Acilia Calurnia to any candidate who should hire followers or entertain the people with shows or refreshments. Every student knows the reason for this. Wealthy and ambitious men, who wanted their tools in important offices or who wanted to be in office themselves, gave the people lavish public entertainment.

The Roman citizen now had been debauched so far that he was ready to cast his suffrage for anybody who would do him any favor or even entertain or divert him. Bribery in all its forms, gross and subtle, had utterly corrupted Roman character. The powers of pollution understood this well and laughed at the Lex Tulia and all other corrupt practices acts because they knew they could disregard them.

Is there no parallel between this absence of Roman civic virtue and the low ideal which is urged upon us in this case more than 2,000 years later? Consider the contrast between Roman history, law, and administration, and English history, law, and administration. For in almost every respect English and Roman history furnish the student the best materials for comparison and contrast, not only in the duration and extent of their power, but also in the character, or, as Emerson calls it, "the bottom" of the character of the two peoples.

AMERICAN CHARACTER ON TRIAL.

So, Mr. President, instead of taking up this great problem as England has taken it up and saved herself, the Roman judges, the Roman senate, and finally the Roman people let it go by. "Never mind, the Republic will endure," said they. "Don't bore me with talk about the Republic" was a common sentiment of the people of Rome. "No matter if the law is violated, let us stand up for the man in office if he has the cash," was the final expression of the debased Roman electorate.

No wonder Rome fell. And be sure we shall perish, too, if we pass this evil by as a thing for a sneering cynicism or a diseased sentimentality.

And so fundamentally the great question is, How shall we Americans approach this evil in our own land? Our institutions are on trial and, deeper than that, the character of the American people is on trial. If it is not so, then history has no meaning.

I know, and it is not a good sign, that we are so busy that we are impatient of the lessons of other peoples. We can be impatient a little bit too much. We can be too hurried. The time must never arrive in this Republic—and if it does the doom of the Nation already has been sounded—when the purity of our elections is not to us a greater concern than the success of a politician or mawkish sympathy for the imperiled ambitions of a candidate or the success of the wrongful plans of great interests.

Mr. President, if England is so strict to-day as to the election of 1 member out of nearly 700 of the British Parliament, how should we approach a case which involves the validity of the election to a seat in the Senate of the United States, where there are only 92 Members? If England is so stern as to the purity of the election of 1 member out of nearly 700 that make up the British Parliament holding office only until Parliament is dissolved and sent back to his constituents, what do you say should be the spirit in which we should approach the election to a seat in this body, which not only has but 92 Members but whose term of office is for six long years—Members who vote on all bills, yes, and who pass upon all treaties, approve or negative all appointments, try the judges of the Nation, and even the Chief Magistrate of the Republic himself?

THIS IS NOT A PRIVATE LAWSUIT.

What madness is upon us, Mr. President, that we consider this as a private controversy in a court with a private party complainant and a private party defendant; a mere private lawsuit affecting no one but the private parties to it; a private lawsuit where appeals are made, such as lawyers make to juries in police courts?

For this is how this great issue, freighted with the destiny of the Republic, has been treated. And yet, instead of being a private lawsuit, it is the weightiest public matter that possibly can arise under and affecting "this government of the people, by the people, for the people."

Mr. President, in referring to the English laws and these historical illustrations, one purpose has been to bring us down to a consideration of our own law as applied to this vital and fateful question which, as the guardians of the purity of elections to the United States Senate, we must decide. By what power, Mr. President, do we deal with this matter?

[At this point Mr. BEVERIDGE yielded for the presentation of the unfinished business.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. When we find the source of the power by which we are acting we will observe the immediate pertinence of the history I have been reciting. We derive this power from that clause in our Constitution which makes us the judges of the returns, qualifications, and election of Members. Where did that come from?

Mr. Norwood—and anybody who has read the debate of Senator Norwood, a southern Senator, can not but have the profoundest respect for him as a student and a great lawyer, measuring up to the height of Thurman of Ohio and Morton of Indiana—Mr.

Norwood, in his minority report, in the Powell Clayton case, said:

The provision in the Constitution is a transcript of the parliamentary law of the English House of Commons, as it existed when, and long before, the Constitution was adopted.

We took it from the law of the British Parliament, and therefore how it was understood by the mother people throws a flood of light on how we should understand it now.

Now, Mr. President, beginning with the Caldwell case, continuing through the Payne case, down through the Clark case to the case before us now, the committee have stated, sometimes definitely and sometimes loosely, that it is not sufficient that one vote be bribed unless the sitting member knew about it, and had something to do with it; but that enough votes must be bribed to destroy an honest majority.

RESULTS OF SENATE COMMITTEE BRIBERY RULE.

For the purposes of this particular case I do not propose to controvert that position, because this case can be decided—and when I come to the evidence I will show you that there is no escape from deciding it—against the validity of this election, even under those unsound committee pronouncements. But I want to put myself on record as to my view of this erroneous committee rule and some of the consequences if we make it the law of the Senate in such cases.

Suppose, for example, that a Senator had a majority of 50 in a State legislature. Suppose 49 of them were bribed by his friends and he knew nothing about it. Under these committee pronouncements his election would be valid; his seat would be free of stain. To my mind, that is monstrous. Yet it is what these so-called "precedents" declare.

And mark this, the defenders of the election before us are not content even with these "precedents" as given by the committee heretofore. No, Mr. President, the defenders of this election now insist that not only must enough votes be corrupted to destroy the majority cast for the person who profits by them, but that these votes must also be deducted from all votes present and cast in the general assembly. To this climax of extravagance do Senators resort to uphold this foul election.

I repeat, to such extremes are the defenders of this election driven in order to maintain it. I say extremes because never before was such a plea advanced in even this body in an election case. Also, it is in direct violation of the express words of the statute. Also, there is another thing I may have to call attention to as to this new and novel theory by which the defenders of this election now are attempting to justify it.

WHY WERE THE VOTES BOUGHT?

Of course, the question at once arises, "Why were votes bought if those who bought them did not think they were needed? Was money uselessly expended? Was the peril of the penitentiary needlessly incurred?" The fact that the vote is bought shows that the person who purchased it thought that the vote was needed. Men do not commit a crime for nothing.

Take another supposition. Suppose only one vote was bought and that the vote of a powerful leader. None of his followers were bought, let us suppose; but he was, and it was proved that he was bought. Those who were accustomed to follow his lead, to look up to him, to take his counsel, voted as he voted. Yet under these committee "precedents" that election thus procured would absolutely be safe. Is that right? Is it even wise?

Let me make it still clearer: Suppose the great body of those who honestly followed this leader and who voted as he voted were to find out that that leader had been bribed, would they have followed him? It is revolting to reason to say that they would have followed him; and yet the position heretofore and now taken by the committee is that the election would be absolutely valid if this one voter were purchased, although his influence over others caused the whole majority that the successful candidate got.

If that is true, Mr. President, the validity of an election depends on being found out, and I guess that is the case anyhow. What say we "in this awfully stupendous manner, at which Reason stands aghast and Faith herself is half confounded"?

Well, whatever we say now, be sure that finally we must say that the true theory and the sound theory is that a single act of bribery in behalf of a successful candidate to a seat in the United States Senate destroys the legality of that senatorial election.

That is the English rule concerning the popular election of a member of Parliament, consisting of nearly 700 members—an election beyond all estimate inferior in dignity and importance to an election to a seat in the United States Senate. That is the English rule as to such a popular election, where the voting is secret, and therefore infinitely harder on the candidate than an election to a seat in the United States Senate, where the voting is viva voce.

Yet it has been by this rule that England has purged herself of corrupt practices in her elections and secured a pure and a free Parliament. By such a rule we Americans can cure ourselves of corrupt practices in senatorial elections and insure a Senate above suspicion of evil influences.

Such a rule—the bribery of one member of a legislature in behalf of a successful candidate in a senatorial election destroys the validity of that election—would end the nauseating talk that, although large numbers of legislators were bought by overenthusiastic friends to vote for a United States Senator, yet he is blameless and his election valid.

Such a rule would put an end to such purchases by such overenthusiastic friends, practicing corruption without their favorite's knowledge, if such a case ever did or could exist. For the "enthusiastic friend" would hesitate a long time to part with his money and run the risk of the penitentiary for his adored candidate if he knew that his crime would avail nothing in behalf of that adored candidate.

Such a rule would absolutely prevent malign financial interests from making merchandise of the votes of the members of legislatures in a senatorial election in order to put a friend of those interests in the United States Senate.

For, as all of us have observed, while "special interests" are willing to spend any amount of money and take any risk that will accomplish their ends, they are not willing to spend a cent or to take any risk when it will not do them any good.

THE TRUE STANDARD OF PURITY FOR THE SENATE.

The Senate of the United States ought to raise a new standard of purity for elections to its membership; and on that standard should be emblazoned Coke's immortal axiom:

One act of bribery poisons the whole fountain.

This would be a new standard for us, but, as I have shown, it would be but an application to elections to this body of the ancient common law of our ancestors. It only would be putting in practice here for our salvation that which England has practiced for decades for her salvation.

I want, personally, to go on record now that this is a rule to which finally and soon the United States Senate must come. It is not necessary to a decision of this case, for this election is invalid even under the complacent and accommodating precedents announced by the Committee on Privileges and Elections heretofore. But it is necessary to make it the law of the Senate. Be sure of this, Senators, that sooner or later you must make it the law of the Senate. And I think that time is rapidly approaching.

But, Mr. President, let us say that for the purposes of this case we must show that enough votes were purchased, or improperly influenced, so that it destroyed an honest majority.

Well, Mr. President, there has been a good deal of discussion upon how we are going to compute that. I shall take that up when I get through with the testimony, I hope to the satisfaction of everybody who honors me with his attention. We have heard lots of mathematics in this controversy—curious, weird mathematics.

When I was in college I studied far past logaritlims; but since then I have not heard as much mathematics as I have heard here—novel, ingenious, not to say bizarre computations, equations, what not. I have thought that if the shade of Sir Isaac Newton could revisit the glimpses of the moon, it would come clad, not in ghostly habiliments of white, but in garments of jealous green, because a superior mathematical mind to his had appeared upon the earth. [Laughter.]

HOW BRIBERY PROVED.

But even as to the effect on this election of these so-called committee "precedents" and of other matters that I shall lay before the Senate, there is no doubt, unless you destroy the statements that the committee have made themselves; there is no doubt unless you absolutely destroy the statute under which this election was held.

Now, Mr. President, it is my purpose in a moment to go into the testimony, but before I do that I want to call the attention of the Senate to the degree of proof required in bribery, and to the nature of the testimony necessary in cases of corrupt practices.

There has been much talk about the law. We have had apostrophes to the law. Very well! Let us have some law on this vital point. What proof is necessary to establish bribery? Let us first take merely the authorities of the committee of the Senate.

Consider the statement of the minority of the committee in the Payne case. From this statement nobody dissented. Everybody conceded that it was the law; and I hope if anybody does not agree to this he will rise now, or before the vote is taken, and show wherein it is a wrong statement of the law as applied to bribery. Here is what Senator Hoar and Senator FRYE said, and, I repeat, as to this there was no dissent; and I will ask any person whether he dissents now:

How can a question of bribery ever be raised, or ever be investigated, if the arguments against this investigation prevail? You do not suppose that the men who bribe, or the men who are bribed, will volunteer to furnish evidence against themselves? You do not expect that impartial and unimpeachable witnesses will be present at the transaction?

Does any Senator think that is not the law?

Let me read from the Encyclopedia of Evidence, which I suppose is about as authoritative a textbook as there is:

Evidence in bribery cases is necessarily meager and limited because such transactions are usually entered into secretly with no one present except the parties to them. Circumstantial evidence is therefore admissible and sometimes sufficient.

All the circumstances of the proceeding alleged to have been influenced by bribery are admissible as links in the chain of circumstantial evidence.

But the evidence in the case before us is not meager—it is bountiful. The evidence here is not circumstantial only; it is positive and direct also. Never was a case of bribery where the evidence was so abundant and conclusive.

And consider the following in light of the subcommittee's remarkable rulings in the present case on the offers to prove the confessions of Link, Beckemeyer, and other evidence which the subcommittee ruled out. I continue to read from the Encyclopedia of Evidence:

Extrajudicial confessions alone, uncorroborated by other evidence as to the main facts, are inadequate to establish a corpus delicti. But where a confession is substantiated by proof of circumstances which, although they may have an innocent construction, are nevertheless calculated to suggest the commission of the crime, for the explanation of which the confession furnished the key, it should be allowed to go to the jury.

THE NEW YORK BRIBERY CASE.

Mr. President, perhaps as fair a statement of the law of bribery and the evidence necessary to establish it as ever was made was delivered in one of the New York bribery cases, People v. Kerr, which, I think, had to do—the Senators from New York can inform us—with the passing of an ordinance or something of immense value there in New York. Anyhow aldermen were bribed.

It should be remembered that the charge to the jury by Mr. Justice Daniels, which I now shall read was in a criminal case in a criminal court. It was not a statement of the law or of a rule that should govern "The greatest legislative body in the world," as it has been called, in determining the validity of an election to it.

Yet you shall see how broad Mr. Daniels puts the law. Laws! Stand by the law! Yes; but who was it who said, "Thou shalt not make a scarecrow of the law?" Since law has been appealed to I shall not presume to state it, but I let the great jurists of this and other countries state it on every branch of this case.

The indictment seems to have been found some time since, and, as it has been presented by the grand jury, it charges this defendant with the crime of bribery under the statutes of this State. The statutes upon this subject have undergone changes at different intervals until they have reached their present comprehensive condition. There seems to have been a feeling actuating legislative action that this was, to a certain extent, at least, a growing evil in the community—

Is it possible that a judge on the bench in a criminal court instructing a jury would go into such unstatesmanlike utterances as that, or as it has been termed here of much more conservative statements, loose statements of law? This justice is not making a stump speech mind you. He is stating the law of bribery, and to a jury in a criminal trial. Men were on trial in this case for their liberty—

a growing evil in the community in the State.

How shocking, Mr. President, to hear a judge talk so! We have easier rules in the United States Senate, it appears. But let us stick to the charge of Justice Daniels. He continues:

and that it is necessary, for the purpose of checking and properly restraining it, to impose the restraints of punishment, under legislation concerning whose intent and comprehension there could be no substantial doubt. In pursuance of this conviction the laws have been changed.

The learned justice goes on:

If bribery is to affect the official conduct of individuals occupying positions of authority, you will see at once, upon your own reflection, that, as far as it extends, the fair administration of the laws will be subverted—they must be subverted—in consequence of the exercise of influences of this character, and when the offenses are brought to the attention of courts and juries, and are to be disregarded, or are to be allowed to pass without punishment, then direct encouragement will be afforded to the increase and spread of this offense until its pernicious influence may endanger the very existence of the institutions of the State.

Is it possible that any American court so pronounced? If so, what is to become of "conservatism?" But, to quote still further:

It is not, of course, gentlemen, intended by this suggestion that you shall take it for granted that an offense has been made out by the evidence in this case, but it is to enjoin upon your minds that degree of care, caution, and solicitude which is necessary for the purpose of examining, and coming to a rational and true conclusion, concerning the charge made in this indictment. The case is to be made out by proof, the same as all other cases. It is not necessary that it should be by direct and positive evidence of witnesses—

As is the case in the business we have got to decide—

but it is sufficient in the judgment of the law that the species of evidence may combine with circumstances of such force and weight, when they are united and considered together, as to leave no rational doubt whatever in the mind as to the truth of the charge contained in the indictment. The administration of the criminal law is essentially dependent, in a large degree, necessarily, on the existence and force of circumstances for the purpose of making out criminal charges. This results from the fact that crimes ordinarily seek concealment.

I shall ask Senators to remember this when we come to examine this testimony. It seems to be the view of some that bribery is committed in the open. It seems to astound some that bribers do not shout it from the house tops or speak it in the streets of Askelon. It seems to be the view of some that scoundrels would not be guilty of bribery—oh, no—and that when they are caught and confess they are not to be believed because they were scoundrels enough to accept a bribe.

What is the alternative? That nobody will be bribed in this country except saints and the righteous. Are we to believe nobody when circumstances and their own confessions chain them unless they have superb characters and perfect habits?

BRIBERY A SNAKE IN THE LEAVES.

That was not the opinion of Justice Daniels. He thought, as the textbooks I have read stated, that bribery was one of the most difficult of crimes to prove. It is like a snake running under the leaves. So it has been the policy of the law, in considering the testimony concerning bribery, to recognize the fact of its elusive character, of its secrecy, of its concealment, and that circumstances are excellent proof, and confessions, when corroborated, absolute proof.

In a moment I shall demonstrate that not only the direct confessions in this case but every corroborating circumstance is present which the authorities say are enough, and more than enough, to prove bribery. How do Senators expect bribery to be proved, anyhow? We are asked not to believe the confessions made, because they are made by bad men. Of course they are bad men or they would not have taken bribes. We are asked not to believe corroborating circumstances because that is circumstantial evidence. How then are you going to prove it?

And this, too, is urged, not in a criminal case—not before you, Mr. President, as the judge of a criminal court. Oh, no; but this actually is urged in this most powerful of all bodies under the sun when we are guarding the purity of elections, for which our fathers fought and died, and upon which the perpetuity of our institutions depends.

Now, what else did Mr. Justice Daniels say:

They are not committed, ordinarily, openly, and before the public, or before the public eye, but occasions are sought for the commission of crime when safety or security from observation, or from prosecution and punishment, to a certain degree, may be within the hope and the expectation of the culprit.

If there is anyone who disagrees with this statement of law as made by Mr. Justice Daniels in charging the jury on bribery in the New York bribery case, or with the statement of the law from the Encyclopedia of Evidence, or from the statement of the law in the Payne case which was not dissented from, I would be glad if we could settle that matter now.

If no Senator now dissents, I shall take it for granted that this is a true statement of the law, and, if necessary, I should have given many other authorities, but I do not want to burden either the Senate or the RECORD.

Yet, Mr. President, I repeat there is more proof here of every kind described as being sufficient by the textbook writers and decisions than ever happens in a case tried before a court.

Now, Mr. President, how shall we look at this matter? We have been told—I am sorry the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is not here——

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. PAYNTER. The Senator from Texas is now detained from the Chamber.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is all right. I am merely going to quote from him, and I approve what he says in this one particular.

Mr. PAYNTER. I merely want to state, if the Senator will permit me, that the Senator from Texas is absent from the Chamber by reason of the hearings before the Finance Committee, which is considering the reciprocity agreement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is all right.

THE RIGID RULE—BUT RIGHT.

I am going to quote from the Senator from Texas, and I quote it with earnest approval. It is a correct statement of the law. The Senator from Texas said, December 18, 1905:

I do not concede—

I do not want to read too much, but if I have left out any, I hope some one will call my attention to it—

I do not concede to any court the right to decide who is entitled to a seat in this body.

Why, of course not. The validity of a seat in this body is beyond the power of any earthly influence except ourselves. No court can reach it. The legislature which conducts the election can not withdraw it. We alone have the power.

The Constitution commits that to us in the first instance and in the last instance. We are to judge of their election and qualifications when they come, and under our power of expulsion we are to judge how long they may remain.

That refers, of course, to cases proper for expulsion. The Senator from Texas continues as follows:

The rule is different here from that which prevails in the courts. There, as a safeguard for the liberty of the citizen, he must have his guilt established beyond a reasonable doubt; here the rule ought to be that he must free himself from all appearance of wrongdoing beyond reasonable doubt.

So, Mr. President, we are enlightened not only by the authorities read, but by the admirable opinion——

Mr. OVERMAN. From what speech was the Senator reading?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was reading from the speech of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand, but in what case?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think he was discussing at that time the case of Mr. Burton. I see that reference is made to the then Senator from Kansas, Mr. Burton, by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] just before the Senator from Texas spoke.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not clearly hear the quotation which the Senator from Indiana read from the speech of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will read it again.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator can answer me, perhaps. Did the Senator from Texas say in effect that when a Senator was accused of wrongdoing——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will not interpret what he said. I will read it to the Senator, and will let the Senator interpret it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I would be glad if the Senator would read it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Did the Senator hear my authorities on bribery and the difficulty of its proof—the sufficiency of proof?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. I should simply like to hear that again.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am sorry the Senator did not hear the authorities, the textbooks upon that subject, and the decisions of the courts. The Senator from Texas said:

The rule is different here from that which prevails in the courts. There, as a safeguard for the liberty of the citizens, he must have his guilt established beyond a reasonable doubt; here the rule ought to be that he must free himself from all appearance of wrongdoing beyond reasonable doubt.

Is that clear?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Indiana permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I was absent from the Chamber engaged with the Finance Committee, of which I am a member, in a hearing on the reciprocity bill when the Senator from Indiana read an extract from a brief and extemporaneous speech which I made in the Senate once and which I have no disposition to modify. But I want it to appear in connection with the Senator's remarks that what I said did not relate to an election of a Senator, but it related purely to the conduct of a Senator while a Member of the Senate and for which he had been indicted. On that state of facts, of course, I think I stated the law and the propriety.

But that is not the question here. Upon this record there is no question of Senator LORIMER's personal conduct.

THE RULE MUCH STRONGER IN CASE BEFORE US.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not of his personal misconduct while a member of the Senate that would involve an expulsion, which would require two-thirds vote. The case before us is a more serious thing—the validity of the title which the sitting Member holds and which the evidence shows is befouled by bribery. I think the Senator from Texas stated the rule correctly there—not only as it applies——

Mr. BAILEY. As is the habit of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not only as it applies to that case, but as it applies to all cases. He made a distinction, from the statement as I read it, between the rule as it exists before courts and the rule that applies to cases here.

Mr. BAILEY. But the Senator——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And I think the Senator can well go further and apply the rule to this case; at least I shall.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator overlooks the fact that the question there was whether the indicted Senator should remain in the Senate until the courts had disposed of the indictment against him, or the Senate should take it up and dispose of it there. I insisted that it was incumbent upon the Senate to dispose of it at once, and in doing so I very properly, I think, stated that the rule that should govern the Senate in deciding upon the expulsion of a Member was different from the rule which ought to govern the court in his conviction; that in the criminal courts the rule of proof beyond a reasonable doubt prevailed and ought to prevail, but that the same rule does not obtain in the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. True; but it was a question of expulsion there.

Mr. BAILEY. The question was purely one of expulsion there. That is not involved here. This is a question——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In view of the statement that he just made, differentiating the rule as it is before the courts in a criminal case and a question so personal as to justify expulsion here, would not he say that it applied with even greater force where the case was not one that called for expulsion, but went to the validity of an election? If an election is vitiated by corruption, that is a more serious matter than most things that justify expulsion.

Mr. BAILEY. Undoubtedly. If the Senator from Illinois were charged with having participated in the bribery through which it is alleged that his election was procured, I would invoke the same rule against him. But the cases are totally different. In the other case there was no doubt about his having personally done what was charged against him, if it were done at all. In this case there is no pretense from the beginning to the end of this record that Mr. LORIMER personally participated in or encouraged or sanctioned any of the misconduct which is alleged, and therefore the rule has no application. What a Senator does he ought to account for under the strictest rule; but he ought not to be held to the same strict account for what others have done.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am unfortunate in not making my question clear. It is this: The Senator says that his statement referred to a case which would justify an expulsion——

Mr. BAILEY. For the misconduct of the Member.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; for the misconduct of the Member.

Mr. BAILEY. If there is any misconduct——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Pardon me until I state my question.

Mr. BAILEY. Alleged against Senator LORIMER here——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let me state my question.

Mr. BAILEY. Then the rule can be invoked——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let me state my question. The Senator will let me do that.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Take the misconduct of a Senator—the Senator himself used the word "expulsion"—which would justify expulsion. Now, if what the Senator said as to the difference of the rule in a criminal court and the rule applying here in the personal misconduct of a Member which would justify expulsion is correct, my question is, Would it not apply with double force where it was not a question of misconduct merely, but a question which went to the validity of an election?

Mr. BAILEY. Not at all.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Why? Where is the distinction?

Mr. BAILEY. The distinction is as plain as the day.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand the difference between the two cases cited——

Mr. BAILEY. In the one case the charge was against the personal conduct of the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand that, but——

Mr. BAILEY. And I say here and I say everywhere that every Senator ought to be able to show that he has not been guilty of conduct which would justify his expulsion, conduct which had resulted in his indictment by the grand jury——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And which would therefore justify his expulsion.

Mr. BAILEY. It might or might not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It might or might not. That is true.

Mr. BAILEY. The grand jury heard but one side. The grand jury has indicted thousands of people who could not be convicted and who ought not to have been convicted, and consequently the indictment alone did not imply a state of facts which would justify the expulsion of the Senator. And when the Senator is arraigned at the bar of the court he is entitled to the protection of that rule which requires the proof of his guilt to be made beyond a reasonable doubt.

But that rule could not be invoked here, and if the Senator will take the trouble to read the rather long address which I delivered to the Senate several days ago, covering a part of two days, he will not find an intimation in all that speech that the Senator from Illinois must be proved to have participated beyond a reasonable doubt, not even that the case itself must be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

I go so far, Mr. President, as to say that if the preponderance of evidence was against the right of a Member to his seat the Senate would be justified in acting upon that preponderance. With the Senator's permission I will state the case as it occurred, and upon which I made this statement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am perfectly willing, but I think we all remember that case.

Mr. BAILEY. The committees were announced, and the Senator in question was not assigned to any committee. I rose to a question affecting the privileges of the Senate, and even if I did not state it that way that is exactly what was involved. I declared that it was not competent for the Senate to organize itself and appoint its committees and ignore any man who sat here as a Senator from any State. The answer was made that the Senator in question was under an indictment. I replied that that was all the more reason, for the sake of the Senator's constituents, for the sake of the country, and for the sake of the Senate itself, that the matter should be disposed of and the Senator relieved from this discrimination or the Senate relieved from his presence. It was in that connection that I declared the rule under which the Senate proceeds is a different rule from that under which the court proceeds.

I beg pardon of the Senator for having interrupted the continuity of his thought. As I said, I was engaged about the business of the Senate elsewhere, but I wanted this to appear in its proper place. I apologize to the Senator for interrupting him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is all right. Mr. President, as the Senators who were here will remember, I read this statement from the Senator from Texas after I had read the law as given in the most creditable textbooks and also as stated by Justice Daniels in the famous Kerr case in New York as to what constitutes bribery and the sufficiency of the testimony thereof.

Mr. President, the Senator makes the distinction between a case justifying expulsion and a case involving the validity of an election. The result of both is the same. In either case it affects the seat, but in the first case it is purely personal; in the second case it may be impersonal, because it goes to the validity of the election.

Therefore, I will read again the statement from the Senator, but will leave it to the Senate whether, if he stated the rule accurately, in a case of personal misconduct justifying an expulsion, the same statement does not apply with infinitely more force where we are trying the validity of an election.

The rule is different here from that which prevails in the courts. There, as a safeguard for the liberty of the citizen, he must have his guilt established beyond a reasonable doubt; here the rule ought to be that he must free himself from all appearance of wrongdoing beyond reasonable doubt.

III. THE EVIDENCE.

BRIBERY CONFESSED.

Mr. President, I now come to the evidence. Waiving aside, for the purposes of this case, the decisions I have read from the English courts, dismissing from our minds all that those great authorities, both in courts of England and in Parliament itself afford us, except only the light they give to us as to how we should approach this matter, the spirit in which we should administer it, let us apply the evidence to committee precedents or committee utterances heretofore.

That evidence shows, as the Senator from Tennessee, a member of the subcommittee that took the testimony, declares, that at least seven of these votes were corrupt. As to four of them the committee's report itself says:

Four members of the general assembly which elected Mr. LORIMER testified to receiving money as a consideration for their votes. The members who thus confessed their own infamy were Charles A. White, Michael Link, H. J. C. Beckemeyer, and Daniel W. Holstlaw.

I will not call attention to the divergencies between the committee's report and the speeches of the members of the committee when they came to speak upon the question—not now at least. The committee's report itself says that at least four members confess to being bribed.

But, Mr. President, let us examine the evidence, not taking advantage of this admission of the committee. To my mind the evidence is as clear on reading the cold record as it was to the Senator from Tennessee, a member of the subcommittee who heard the witnesses, who himself examined some of them with his customary skill and directness.

I have not been able to understand how any Senator possibly could conclude that no bribery had been proved here. I do not quarrel with anybody who does so conclude; but I simply can not understand it. I do understand the influence of ingenious argument and pathetic appeal and the effects of a mellow voice, expressing touching sentiments. But I remember what is said in the Merchant of Venice:

> The world is still deceived with ornament.
> In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt
> But, being seasoned with a gracious voice,
> Obscures the show of evil?

So let us, as judges, reluctant to discharge a disagreeable duty and yet bound to do it for all that, examine this testimony.

I shall begin, Mr. President, with the Illinois Senate. The bribe taker to whom I shall refer is Senator Holstlaw. Holstlaw swears that his fellow senator, Broderick, the Chicago saloon keeper, told him when he asked him how he was going to vote, that there was $2,500 in it for him if he voted for the sitting Member. Again I repeat that, if I misstate any of this testimony or forget any of it, I trust some Senator will correct me at the time.

Holstlaw testified:

He said to me, "LORIMER is going to be elected to-morrow," and he said, "There is $2,500 for you if you want to vote that way." Now, that is what I have said here.

Later on I shall read the statement that he signed, which was prepared for him by his own lawyers, recommended to him by the sheriff, which he declares he signed because it was true and because he owed a duty to make it.

Mr. President, in this statement, which I think I might as well, perhaps, read now—the statement is about two transactions, one in reference to the election bribery and the other in reference to the furniture deal:

Q. Who talked to you on that subject, and what was said?

A. Senator Broderick, of Chicago. He said to me: "Mr. LORIMER is going to be elected to-morrow"—that is as well as I remember the date, and he said, "There is $2,500 for you if you want to vote that way," and the next morning I voted for him.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Broderick that you would vote for Mr. LORIMER?

"I RECEIVED $2,500."

A. I do not know whether I did or not, but I think I did.

He afterwards said that he did this before—

Q. Did you afterwards receive any money from Mr. Broderick, and if you did, when and where was that?—A. I received $2,500 in his office at one time, and I do not know whether I received the other at the same time or not, but I rather think it was at another time I received about $700; I think it was about that.

Q. What was the $2,500 for?—A. It was for voting for LORIMER.

Q. And what was the $700 for?—A. Well, he never said, and I did not ask him. He said there was that much coming to me and handed it to me; that is all that was said about it.

Q. Do you know of any other matter connected with legislative bribery during the last session of the legislature that you now recall?—A. I do not.

This statement is made voluntarily, because I feel it is right to make it and I do not feel that I can live an honest life without making a full disclosure of the truth respecting these matters to the public authority.

He testifies, Mr. President, that nothing was said to him about testifying as to his voting for the sitting Member as an inducement to sign this statement; but he does say that the indictment against him would be quashed if he (Holstlaw) "told the truth;" that he signed the statement because it was the truth. He further says nothing induced him to sign this paper which was not true; that the paper was true.

So much for that, Mr. President. Then on the 16th of June—and here is a very queer circumstance if all this is a vast "conspiracy" against the sitting Member—Holstlaw goes to Chicago. He says he goes there in answer to a letter which he received from Broderick calling him there. He comes in at the Illinois Central Station. He goes one mile and a half from that station over the bridge to Broderick's saloon, which is on the West Side. He had never been at Broderick's saloon before; he did not frequent saloons. There, he testifies, Broderick gave him $2,500 in currency.

If Holstlaw's testimony is not true, poor Broderick is deserving of our sympathy more than any man any of us ever heard of. If Holstlaw's testimony is not true, Broderick is the victim of a tangle of circumstances which nothing but a devilish and malign fate ever could surround a man with.

What did Holstlaw do after he got this $2,500? Well, Mr. President, he was a banker, and so immediately he went to the bank and deposited this $2,500 to the account of his home bank. His home was a little town in southern Illinois, over 250 miles from Chicago. Has anybody denied that he deposited that money? Not until the other day.

THE $2,500 BRIBE IMMEDIATELY DEPOSITED IN BANK.

Does the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] believe that Mr. Holstlaw did not deposit that $2,500? If he did deposit it, where did he get it? He said he got it from Broderick. Certainly he would not make the trip of more than 250 miles from his home town carrying currency amounting to $2,500 in his pocket in order to deposit it in a bank in Chicago, when he could as well have made the deposit by exchange.

So not only, Mr. President, do we have the confession of Holstlaw under oath to having received a bribe, but we trace the exact amount of the first installment of the bribe money into the place he deposited it. The law of evidence in bribery requires no higher proof than that—the confession of having received the corrupt money and the exact amount of the corrupt money personally deposited to the account of his bank the same day he got it.

It has been said that there is no proof of this. What proof of it is there? First, Holstlaw himself swears he deposited it; second, Newton, the chief clerk of the bank, swears he personally received it from Holstlaw. But that is not all. The bank's deposit slip itself was produced, the one which has here been denounced as a forgery. To that element of the case I shall come in a moment.

It was stated, Mr. President, that the so-called "prosecution" should have called for the books of the bank. Well, why did not the committee itself call for the books of the bank? Why did not the attorney for the sitting Member call for the books of the bank?

Because they believed this deposit had been made. Holstlaw had testified that it had been made; the chief clerk of the bank, who had no motive for committing perjury, testified that it had been made; the deposit slip showed that it had been made; and of course the subcommittee believed that it had been made and so did the attorney for the sitting Member. Otherwise the books of the bank would have been called for; and they were not called for only because the subcommittee and the sitting Member's own attorney believed that the $2,500 deposit had been made and we know it was made.

"FORGERY" OF DEPOSIT SLIP.

Does not every Senator here know that that deposit had been made? Well, if it was made, then why was it necessary for the Senator from Texas the other day to call the bank's deposit slip a "forgery?" Evidently, Mr. President, the tracing of this $2,500 in Holstlaw's hands on the day he said he had received it and on the day it is admitted he was at Broderick's saloon, where he said he got it—the tracing of that to the bank where he said he deposited it—was believed by those who are upholding this election to be a fatal weakness to their defense.

Otherwise, certainly the charge of forgery of the bank's deposit slip would not have been made. The deposit slip was denounced as a forgery upon the ground that the reply brief of counsel for the Chicago Tribune had said that it was signed in Holstlaw's name.

Because a lawyer made a mistake in a brief is that sufficient ground to charge that a deposit slip issued by a reputable and creditable bank is a "forgery?" Unthinkable, and yet it was done. Why? The charge of "forgery" would not have been made if it was not thought necessary to deny the deposit of this $2,500.

What was the motive of the "forgery" of this deposit slip, Mr. President, if any existed? And who committed this alleged "forgery?" A man without a motive, the chief clerk of the bank, swears that he himself received the money; the man who deposited it swears that he deposited it there. What good, then, would the "forgery" do? Desperate must be the case that requires an attack like that.

It was stated by the Senator from Texas—though he has not reproduced it in his printed remarks in the RECORD, and I think it is to the credit of the Senator that he struck that out—that Gov. Deneen was a stockholder in the bank. This, mind you, in connection with the charge of "forgery." What has that to do with it?

Is the fact that Gov. Deneen held stock in that bank ground for charging the "forgery" of the bank's deposit slip? If not, why mention him in that connection? Yet I read in the Chicago public print which defends the sitting Senator that that statement was made; and, of course, we know it was made, because we all heard it.

So I suppose there will be no more question about the "forgery" of the deposit slip. There was no motive for forgery. Nobody has shown who committed forgery. On the contrary, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] produced an affidavit of the chief clerk of the bank, who swore he received the money himself and that he had made out the deposit slip. So we know who made out the deposit slip.

THE BOOKS OF THE BANK.

But, Mr. President, it has been said that the books of the bank should have been produced. Since one affidavit has been put in I thought it was advisable to get another affidavit upon that point. It is the affidavit of this same Jarvis O. Newton, who received this deposit. He says, under oath:

That he now is and for many years continuously last past has been, and on June 16, 1909, was the chief clerk of the State Bank of Chicago; that he is the same Jarvis O. Newton who has heretofore made an affidavit, to which affidavit was attached a certain deposit slip dated June 16, 1909, showing a deposit of $2,500 of "Holstlaw Bank, of Iuka, Ill.;" that upon the face of said deposit slip appears by rubber stamp the words and figures, "Note, June 16, 1909, teller;" that said stamp simply indicates that the note teller acted as a receiving teller of said $2,500; that it was said note teller, acting as such receiving teller, who caused said sum to be placed to the credit of the Holstlaw Bank upon the ledger account of said Holstlaw Bank in the State Bank of Chicago after this affiant had received said sum of $2,500 from D. W. Holstlaw on said June 16, 1909, AND HAD MADE OUT THE DEPOSIT SLIP IN QUESTION, and had delivered said sum of $2,500, together with said deposit slip, to said note teller acting as such receiving teller as aforesaid; that said—

Now, here is the question about the books—

That said $2,500 deposit was placed to the credit of said Holstlaw Bank, of Iuka, Ill., on the books of the State Bank of Chicago on June 16, 1909, as a regular deposit, and appears upon the ledger account of said Holstlaw Bank in said State Bank of Chicago as an item of deposit made on June 16, 1909; that said entry was regularly made in due course of business of said bank. Further affiant saith not.

So, Mr. President, that matter is cleared up. Holstlaw swears that he got the money and deposited it in the bank; Newton, the chief clerk of the bank, swears that he himself received it from Holstlaw in bills of large denomination; the bank's deposit slip, which has been challenged here as a "forgery," is clearly genuine; and, finally, the affidavit of an officer of the bank that the entry regularly appears on the books of the bank. Of course, the subcommittee did not ask for the books. The subcommittee believed Holstlaw deposited that money there. I will ask the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] if he did not believe he did.

Mr. PAYNTER. I will say, Mr. President, in response to the Senator's question, which seems to be directed at me, that, assuming Holstlaw did deposit that money, there is absolutely no evidence that he got it from John Broderick. If the Senator should call at my office to-day and go down town an hour afterwards and deposit money, it would be no evidence of the fact that he got it from me.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; that is not the question I am asking. What I asked the Senator was, whether the subcommittee did not believe that the deposit was made by Holstlaw on that day?

Mr. PAYNTER. The Senator has asked me what seven men believed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, what the Senator believes, and if it is disagreeable to the Senator, I will withdraw the question.

Mr. PAYNTER. I do not recall that I have heard in private conversation a single member of the committee express an opinion upon that particular matter.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If it is not agreeable to the Senator, I will withdraw the question.

Mr. PAYNTER. I discussed the question entirely from the point of view that if Holstlaw did deposit the money there, it was no evidence that he got it from John Broderick.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That I will try to take up; but the fact is that of course the subcommittee believed that money had been deposited there, believed the deposit slip was genuine, believed the testimony of the chief clerk, believed the testimony of Holstlaw that he made the deposit; or else the subcommittee, composed of eminent lawyers, would of course have asked for the books of the bank. And so did the attorney for the sitting Member also believe that that deposit was made, or otherwise he would have asked the committee to compel the bank to produce the books and papers.

WHERE BUT FROM BRODERICK DID HOLSTLAW GET THE $2,500?

Where did Holstlaw get that money if he did not get it from Broderick? Did he come more than 250 miles in summer, over the hot prairies of Illinois, carrying $2,500 in bills of large denomination in his pocket in order to deposit it in a Chicago bank? Most extraordinary state of intellect that would do that. If he wanted to deposit that money from his home, why did not he do as all banks do in the conduct of their business, do it in the ordinary course of exchange? Where did he get it? He tells where he got it.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. PAYNTER. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but he is asking me a question.

According to this record he got $1,500 from some furniture company as a bribe.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. When?

Mr. PAYNTER. Some time during the session of the legislature, as appears from this record. He swore he committed perjury in reference to that matter. There is no controversy upon that question.

Now, if he was so thrifty as all that in the great city of Chicago, with perhaps many enterprises upon his hands, because he confessed he was as corrupt as a man could be, I would not undertake to say from whom he might have got $2,500 and deposited it there. But I do say that a man who confesses that he had been guilty of bribery in connection with another transaction, who confesses that he made this statement to involve LORIMER in this matter to get rid of that——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, he does not make that statement.

Mr. PAYNTER. Is not worthy of belief; and independent of any other testimony, I would not convict anybody upon his testimony.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator must not get away from the issue.

Mr. PAYNTER. I am not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In the first place the Senator says that a man who would confess to having been guilty of perjury or bribery in one case, he would not believe if he confessed to the same thing in another case. I do not want to misstate his statement.

Mr. PAYNTER. Oh, no.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What was your second statement?

Mr. PAYNTER. I say that if a man would accept a bribe and then commit perjury in order to get rid of the charge against him——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator says that Holstlaw made this statement, and he says he made it in order to get rid of the indictment.

Now, then, we will read what Holstlaw did say, and then we will come back to the engaging question whether he got the money. I think I will satisfy the Senator where he got the money.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. FRAZIER. As I recall it, the only evidence in this record that Mr. Holstlaw was bribed with respect to the furniture transaction is the testimony of Mr. Holstlaw himself.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. FRAZIER. If the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] states that he was bribed with respect to the furniture transaction, he believes him with respect to that, of course, and it is in the same evidence that he says he was bribed with respect to this matter.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yet the Senator from Kentucky refuses to believe him with respect to that.

Mr. PAYNTER. It is always very important when a gentleman makes a statement to tell all the facts in order that they may be correctly judged.

Holstlaw was indicted—there is a record of that fact—for this bribery. He admits that he testified on the 29th, I think it was, of a certain month, and on the same day was indicted for perjury committed at that time, and on the next day, I think it was—I am speaking now without having the record before me.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We will read the record.

Mr. PAYNTER. The next day he entered into this contract by which he was to make this charge against LORIMER, and in consideration of that, as I am justified in inferring from the statement in the record, the indictment against him was dismissed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Where does the Senator find anything in this record that he made a contract against the sitting Member?

Mr. PAYNTER. He did this——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will read the testimony.

Mr. PAYNTER. In speaking of the attorney. It was the attorney suggested by the sheriff of that county. He had not employed him, as I recollect it, to defend him at all. The man stood indicted for perjury in connection with this furniture transaction. The day after this statement was made the indictment against him for perjury was dismissed. When you take those circumstances altogether is it possible for the Senator from Indiana to infer that the indictment for perjury was not dismissed by reason of the fact that he made this statement? Is there any other conclusion?

ALLEGED "CONSPIRACY" AGAINST SITTING MEMBER.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not have to infer. I have the testimony itself, which I will read in a moment. But before I do read it I want to ask my friend, the Senator from Kentucky, this question: Does he think that this "conspiracy" which is alleged to have gotten up this case, also included a firm of attorneys down at Springfield, the sheriff of Sangamon County, the State's attorney of Sangamon County as well as the State's attorneys and officers of justice of Cook County, Ill.? Did it include everybody? Was everybody at work to forward this "conspiracy," including the officers of justice of at least three counties in Illinois—sheriffs and all?

Mr. PAYNTER. I shall be very glad to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will be very glad to have it.

Mr. PAYNTER. To repeat myself to some extent, this man was indicted for a transaction entirely distinct and separate from this senatorial election. You concede that, do you not?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I concede what the record shows; nothing more.

Mr. PAYNTER. It is a fact.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know whether it is a fact or not.

Mr. PAYNTER. Let me finish. In order to get rid of the indictment for that transaction, he made this statement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Stop right there——

Mr. PAYNTER. Following that, did he not make that statement?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Stop right there. See what he did say.

Mr. PAYNTER. Answer my question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I will read the record and let the record answer the Senator. If I make any mistake I want the Senator to point it out.

Mr. PAYNTER. If the Senator will permit me, I will answer his question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will you let me read right here what is in the record? Let us see what the record itself discloses.

Mr. PAYNTER. The interruption makes it necessary to repeat my statement in order to get before the Senate the exact facts.

Here was a man indicted for perjury committed in connection with a furniture transaction. He was indicted the day he testified in regard to it. Then after he signed this statement—the day following the signing of the statement—that indictment against him for a transaction in which he confessed he was guilty of perjury was dismissed. For what purpose? That he would make this statement incriminating, or attempting to incriminate, LORIMER or his friends. There is but one conclusion to be drawn from it, and that is that he was indicted in Springfield for that offense, a distinct offense, and the State's attorney there preferred to prosecute this case against Mr. LORIMER rather than to prosecute the charge of perjury against this man for which he stood indicted.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, it is the Senator's theory——

Mr. PAYNTER. The Senator can draw his own conclusion. It is perfectly manifest that the State's attorney preferred to obtain evidence against him upon the charge against LORIMER rather than convict Holstlaw on the charge where he had the proof positive against him.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. First, the question is not what was the motive of the State's attorney of Sangamon County. The question is, What was the truth? The question is, Did Holstlaw state the truth when he said that he got this money from Broderick, when he recounted the conversation with Broderick, when he said he deposited it in the bank, which is corroborated by the chief clerk of the bank, by the deposit slip and by the bank's books? That is the question. As one of the attorneys, I think for the sitting Member, said, "We are not investigating the State attorney's office of Cook County."

While I do not want to take time or encumber the RECORD, I have here just at this moment, and I will read, what Holstlaw said about this paper:

HOLSTLAW'S FIRST CONFESSION.

Q. Who drew that paper, Mr. Holstlaw, the paper shown you yesterday?—A. It was Mr. Fitzgerald, Lawyer Fitzgerald, and his partner.
Q. Mr. Gillespie?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. They are partners, Gillespie and Fitzgerald?—A. Yes, sir.

He is under cross-examination now by the attorney for the sitting Member.

Q. They practice law in Springfield, Ill.?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. One of them was attorney for the insurance commission for the State of Illinois, wasn't he?

Then there is an objection.

A. That I don't know.

There are so many objections in here it is hard to follow it.

Judge HANECY. How did these gentlemen come to you to draw that paper?—A. They were recommended to me by the sheriff.

Is the sheriff in the "conspiracy?" Were these attorneys, who were sworn to honorably deal with their clients, in the "conspiracy?" Was the State's attorney of Sangamon County in the "conspiracy," which also embraced the State attorney's office of Chicago? It looks as though the officers of justice were in a pretty wide conspiracy—nobody innocent it appears but the sitting Member. And he—well, he is an "inspiration" to American youth, the Senator from Texas assures us.

A. They were recommended to me by the sheriff.
Q. By the sheriff?—A. By the sheriff.
Q. Of your county?—A. Yes, sir; Sangamon County.
Q. That was the sheriff that had brought you from your home to the grand jury?—A. Yes, sir.

Then there are a lot of objections.

Judge HANCEY. Who drew that paper, Mr. Holstlaw?—A. Mr. Fitzgerald and Mr. Gillespie.
Q. And when it was prepared, was it presented to you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. By whom?—A. By these gentlemen.
Q. Where?—A. In their office.

* * * * * * *

Judge HANECY. In Springfield?—A. Yes, sir; in Springfield.
Q. On what day?—A. I think it was the 29th of May.
Q. And what was the conversation in relation to it before you signed it?—A. Well, I read it over and——
Q. And——A. And then signed it. That was my statement.
Q. Yes, and then did they have you sworn to it?—A. No, sir; I think not.
Q. You did not swear to it at the time?—A. I think not.
Q. Did anybody say to you or explain to you why you were required or requested to sign that statement?—A. No; they did not.

I hope I am not skipping anything. The record, as Senators will notice, is full of interruptions and so-called argument of counsel. But I go down as near as I can. It is a very poor record.

Q. Was there any conversation of that kind had before you signed that paper?—A. I think there was.
Senator BURROWS. What is that?
The WITNESS. I think there was something said about my having voted for LORIMER.
Judge HANECY. Was there anything said to you as to what would happen to you or the indictment that had been procured against you for perjury, if you signed that paper or if you did not sign it? Did they tell you what would happen to you if you did not sign it?
Senator BURROWS. That question is plain. Read it, Mr. Reporter.
(Question read.)
A. No; I don't think they told me what would happen to me if I did not sign it; I don't think they did.
Q. What did they tell you, if anything, as to what would be done if you did not sign it?—A. Well, I don't remember that they said anything about that.
Q. Did they say the indictment for perjury against you would be quashed if you signed it?—A. They said this—they said if I testified to the truth that the indictment would be quashed.
Q. The truth on what?—A. On—well, on the Lorimer vote and also the furniture.
Q. The furniture vote?—A. Yes, sir.

And then it goes on, I think irrelevant as to this, until we come down to a lot of objections again and so-called arguments.

Q. Why did you sign the paper, the writing shown to you yesterday, Mr. Holstlaw?—A. Why did I sign it?
Q. Yes.—A. Because it was a statement that I had made and it was a true one.
Judge HANECY. The language was formulated by some one else, by those lawyers, and not by you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were the questions put to you that are embodied in that statement and did you make the answers therein embodied?—A. Well, I read it over and then I signed it.
Q. And it was true, was it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you make it for the purpose of relieving your conscience?—A. Well, I don't believe I did, particularly, but I did it because it was true and I felt that it was my duty to make a statement to the grand jury.

Now, then, Senator PAYNTER asked a few questions:

Q. Upon what day did you appear before the grand jury at Springfield?—A. Upon the 28th day of May.
Q. Upon what day was the indictment returned against you for perjury for your testimony before the grand jury?—A. The same day.
Q. The same day?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Upon what day was this paper signed?—A. The 29th.
Q. Upon what day was the indictment dismissed?—A. The same day, the 29th.
Q. Before or after the paper was signed?—A. Well, I think it was after.

* * * * * * * *

Senator GAMBLE. How far is your home from here, Mr. Holstlaw?
The WITNESS. It is about 250 miles.

I think that is perhaps enough.

The Senator from Kentucky was going to ask me a question.

Mr. PAYNTER. The Senator is arguing the question of conspiracy by the State's attorney and others at Springfield. I do not think in my remarks I made a charge that it was a conspiracy.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, others have charged that this whole business is a "vile conspiracy" against the sitting Member. If so, that "conspiracy" included reputable lawyers, State's attorneys, sheriffs, judges on the bench—everybody, nearly, it would appear.

Mr. PAYNTER. In addition to what I have already said, I desire to call the Senator's attention to the question that I asked. The Senator, of course, takes the position that it was perfectly legitimate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What?

Mr. PAYNTER. For the State's attorney to dismiss an indictment against this witness for perjury growing out of an entirely distinct and separate transaction in order to induce him to make a statement that would tend to incriminate a friend of Mr. LORIMER's. I presume the Senator justifies that course of conduct on the part of the State's attorney.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not concerned in it. The only thing I am concerned in is what was the truth of those transactions, and I am concerned in the instance the Senator names only so far as it would affect the truthfulness of the transaction. I am not either praising or criticizing the conduct of those public officers.

Mr. PAYNTER. But the Senator——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, I can turn that on the Senator and ask him whether he thinks the State's attorney of Sangamon County, as well as the State's attorney and other officers of justice elsewhere, all worked together to produce this result. The question that interests me is whether these confessions are true; and that is the only question that should interest any Senator.

Mr. PAYNTER. I am very glad the Senator has asked me the question. If the State's attorney had paid Mr. Holstlaw money to make this statement, everybody would concede it was corrupt.

Now, if the same State's attorney will dismiss an indictment for perjury against a party in order to obtain testimony against LORIMER, can you tell me the difference in character between a transaction like that and the giving of money for the testimony, so far as a corrupt act goes?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator now is trying the State's attorney of Sangamon County.

Mr. PAYNTER. No.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The other day they tried the official conduct of the State's attorney of Cook County. What we are trying here is the truth about——

Mr. PAYNTER. But the Senator——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. About the official conduct of these members of the legislature.

Mr. PAYNTER. The Senator turned to me——

THE QUESTION IS NOT THE STERNNESS OF THE OFFICERS OF JUSTICE IN ILLINOIS BUT OF BRIBERY IN THIS ELECTION.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator will remember that even the attorney for the sitting Member, before the subcommittee, when some person was proposing to produce the deputy district attorney or assistant district attorney, said: "We are not investigating the district attorney." That is true. That is not the question. The question is whether this bribery was committed or not.

Mr. PAYNTER. I did not interrupt the Senator, but he addressed himself to me and asked me a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes. I am glad——

Mr. PAYNTER. It gives me pleasure to try to answer him——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Go ahead.

Mr. PAYNTER. In the most satisfactory way I can, at least to myself, if not to him and the Senate. So I have characterized the conduct of the district attorney. To show that my statement is correct, I want to read a question that I asked.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. On what page is that?

Mr. PAYNTER. Page 221, at the bottom of the page.

Senator PAYNTER. I want to ask you one more question.
Q. Did you understand from either District Attorney Burke or any officer of the court there, the judge, or this firm of lawyers, that this indictment was to be dismissed against you if you signed this paper?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You understood that?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And that was the agreement between you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. That talk related, then, to the agreement to induce you to sign this paper?—A. Well, I suppose it did in part.

Then, further down——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Wait a minute; do not skip.

Mr. BURROWS. A little louder.

Mr. BEVERIDGE (reading):

A. I felt it was a true statement and I signed it, and I suppose that had something to do with it.

Mr. PAYNTER. I am making no question but that he said it was a true statement, but the purpose I had was to show the inducement which operated on him to make this statement; then we can consider whether it was true or not, considering the circumstances under which it was obtained.

Let me read a little further:

Q. You were anxious to get rid of the indictment against you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were really more interested in that, were you not, than you were interested in signing the statement, which tells the truth, as you say?—A. I was very much interested in that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator should have continued. The Senator should have read on a little bit further.

Q. Did the fact that you were indicted, Mr. Holstlaw, or that you were in the custody of an officer, or that you wanted to go home, or that you might be called before the grand jury, or any other fact or circumstance induce you to sign that paper containing, as you now read it, any statement that was not true?—A. No, sir; it was true, the statement that I made.

Q. Absolutely true?—A. Yes, sir; it was.

Mr. President, let us see the predicament that anyone is in who says that Holstlaw swore falsely in saying that he got this bribe, that he deposited it, and that he was induced to this perjury by a "conspiracy" which sweeps clear from Chicago down to Springfield and involves the officers of justice in widely separated points of the State of Illinois.

Who is inducing the State's attorney of Sangamon County to "conspire" against anybody? Who is inducing his fellow State's attorney of Cook County to "conspire" against anybody? Who is inducing the sheriff of Sangamon County to enter into this "conspiracy?" Who has devised this gigantic web of evil to enmesh a good man in its fatal strands—a web that includes in its threads officers of justice of a great State, the governor of that Commonwealth, all the newspapers but one of the greatest city except one in the Nation, and nearly every good influence except "Hinky Dink," "Manny" Abrahams, and other saloon keepers?

What vast and hidden power has accomplished all this?

IF ANY "CONSPIRED" AGAINST THE SITTING MEMBER IN THIS MATTER, THEY WERE STUPID "CONSPIRATORS."

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will it interrupt the Senator if I make a suggestion there?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly not.

Mr. FRAZIER. If this testimony of Senator Holstlaw was false, if it was the result of a conspiracy, was made up out of the whole cloth with a view of doing Senator LORIMER a great injustice, as is now intimated by certain Senators, has it occurred to the Senator that the gentlemen who were engaged in that conspiracy were a very ignorant or a very stupid set of men?

Would it not have been just as easy for Mr. Holstlaw, if he was going to swear falsely or was induced to swear falsely, to make up an entirely false story, and to have sworn that Mr. LORIMER himself gave him the $2,500? Senator LORIMER could not have denied it any more vehemently than Mr. Broderick did. Yet if he had sworn that it was a false statement and had sworn that Mr. LORIMER gave him the $2,500, we would not be now troubled with the question as to whether there were enough members of the legislature bribed to invalidate his election; the one would have been sufficient.

As this applies to Senator Holstlaw, it seems to me it would likewise apply to Mr. Link, and Mr. Beckemeyer, and Mr. White. If all this thing is made up, if it is all a humbug, if it is all a conspiracy, why did not those wicked gentlemen who were engaged in that conspiracy induce these witnesses who were so willing to perjure themselves to swear directly that Mr. LORIMER bribed them and hence settle the whole question?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Quite so.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator from Indiana permit me?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I say quite so, and more, and because it would have been far easier for Holstlaw to have sustained the statement that he got the money directly from Mr. LORIMER rather than from Mr. Broderick, for the following additional reasons: There would have been a natural excuse for Holstlaw visiting the sitting Member in Chicago, first, because he voted for him; second, because they are both bankers; third, because he was near the Annex Hotel and the station.

But in the case of Broderick, his fellow senator, Holstlaw had to support the so-called perjury which this so-called "conspiracy" evolved by actually coming 250 miles from the southern part of the State and going a mile and a half across the town, over the bridge, into a saloon owned by Broderick, where he had never been before and where the testimony shows he had no other business whatever, and then come back again and deposit $2,500 in bank. Yes, indeed, the master mind that evolved this so-called "conspiracy" certainly was muddled when that mind did not fix this bribery upon the sitting Member instead of upon Broderick.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Just upon this point. I think we all recognize the importance of the testimony, if it be corroborated, of Holstlaw, Beckemeyer, and Link. I only rise to ascertain if the Senator corroborates this view. I challenged the gentlemen who are attacking the testimony of these three witnesses, and it was shrewdly attempted over and over again by counsel in examining these witnesses to show that it was made a condition upon which the prosecution against them was dismissed that they should testify a certain way. I challenged the gentlemen on the other side to show anywhere in the record were Mr. Wayman, the State's attorney of Cook County, or his deputies or his detectives, or where the State's attorney of Sangamon County or any of his assistants, ever undertook to put the words in the mouth of either Holstlaw or Link or Beckemeyer and claimed, "You must testify to this as a condition for dismissing the charges against you." As I remember it, Judge Haney undertook ingenuously to get Link to admit that the condition was that he must say, "I got a thousand dollars for voting for LORIMER," to get Link to admit that it was necessary for him to say that he got a thousand dollars for voting for LORIMER, before they would dismiss the indictment against him. The attempt was broken down and absolutely failed, and the testimony shows—I think the Senator will agree with me and also the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER]—that the only condition was that these men should tell the truth, as the Senator states. I challenge the record for a syllable of testimony to the contrary.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is absolutely accurate.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Pardon me a moment. They did tell the truth, unless we believe what we are urged to believe, that the State's attorneys of Cook County and of Sangamon County were instruments of an infamous and widespread "conspiracy" to get these confessed bribe takers to tell the clumsiest falsehood ever perpetrated in courts of justice or anywhere else. The question is whether they told the truth. Did Holstlaw get the money? Did he tell the truth when he testified under oath that he got the money? I do not want to get away from Holstlaw for a moment. I am going to come to Broderick right away.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNTER. I do not desire to argue the question that is raised by the Senator from South Dakota in this place, because it was covered as completely as I could do so in the remarks I made on this question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have the Senator's remarks here. I am going to refer to them.

Mr. PAYNTER. Just a moment, if you please. It is asserted by the Senator from South Dakota that they were told to tell the truth. That is true; but they were at the same time told what was the truth as claimed by the district attorney.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Was it the truth? That is the question.

Mr. PAYNTER. That is a question for the Senate to determine.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, it is for the Senate to decide and the Senate alone, uninfluenced by anything but our oath-bound judgment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me there, for that is important. I would ask the Senator from Kentucky to point out a single place where they told these men what they claimed was the truth to which they must testify.

Mr. PAYNTER. It is all through the record, that it was claimed they had received money for voting for LORIMER.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is not a thing in the record except the statement of Link that they tried to put the statement into his mouth. State's Attorney Wayman, of Cook County (Chicago), denies Link's theatrical story. Whom are you going to trust, the State's attorney of Cook County, the State's attorney of Sangamon County, or Link? I am coming to the treatment of these poor abused bribe takers by the officers of justice of the State of Illinois in a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER] suggested a moment ago that if Holstlaw and his associates were to make this statement out of the whole cloth they could have put it on the Senator from Illinois as easily as upon a State senator of Illinois.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. More easily.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire to remind the Senator from Indiana that the testimony will show that Holstlaw was summoned to Chicago by State Senator Broderick, if his testimony is to be believed, and that Holstlaw so testified; and that Broderick, when he was put upon the stand and asked that particular question, declined to answer on the ground that it might tend to incriminate him if he responded in the affirmative. So it is much more likely, I contend, that this invitation to come to Chicago should have been sent by State Senator Broderick than it could have been put upon Mr. LORIMER himself. This connecting circumstance would tend to strengthen the conclusion that he had been invited there by Mr. Broderick himself, whereas in the case of Mr. LORIMER there was no evidence at all that he had invited them there.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, Mr. President, I come to Broderick, who admitted that his fellow senator, Holstlaw, visited Senator Broderick's saloon the very day that the $2,500 was actually placed in the bank by Holstlaw.

BRODERICK, IF INNOCENT, THEN MOST UNFORTUNATE.

Now, Mr. President, it is a melancholy duty which I have before me—the treatment of this patriot Broderick. For if his story is believed and if the theory of the subcommittee is believed, in all the chronicles of ingenious villainy there never was such a victim of bad men in the history of the world, a person so entitled to our tender sympathy as this good man Senator Broderick in his Chicago west-side saloon.

If you believe the theory that Broderick did not give Holstlaw this money, then you must agree that Broderick himself was the object of "conspiracy" not only malign and tragic, but so curious that it is laughable.

Look at the net of circumstances that catches poor Senator Broderick, the innocent, guileless, Chicago west-side saloon keeper. Here he was going peacefully to his saloon, a little late that day. He goes down and he finds Holstlaw there, his fellow senator. Holstlaw never had been there before. He had come up 250 miles from southern Illinois in the heat and sweat and dust of a sweltering summer.

Holstlaw did not know where Broderick's saloon was. But he found it. According to Broderick, Holstlaw was so anxious to pay a social visit to his fellow senator, that he found that west-side saloon. After Holstlaw got to Chicago he went a mile and a half on a hot summer day—and we know what that is in Chicago—out to the patriot Broderick's saloon.

Holstlaw had no reason for going, according to Broderick. He never went there before. He never frequented saloons. He stayed there a half or three-quarters of an hour, as Broderick testifies. There was little conversation—no business transacted, according to Broderick; and then this strange, mysterious Holstlaw leaves and goes a mile and a half back across the bridge, deposits $2,500 in the bank in bills of large denomination, and then he accuses Broderick of having paid it to him. Awful! Ghoulish! That is, awful and ghoulish, according to the defenders of the sitting Member.

Now I come to the kind of a man that Broderick is. In the first place, the members of the subcommittee will tell the Senate, if Senators have not read this record, that the subcommittee had vast difficulty in locating Patriot Broderick at all. The Sergeant at Arms could not produce him. A member of the subcommittee told me that they searched Broderick's house.

He was mysteriously missing. Last night, in going over the record again, I read that the Sergeant at Arms reported to the subcommittee that not only Broderick, but Browne, the "modern Lincoln," as the Senator from Texas would have us regard Lee O'Neil Browne, and Wilson, "Jack Pot" Wilson—none of these innocents could be located. Poor, hunted "babes in the woods," the Sergeant at Arms of the United States Senate could not find them. Alas! [Laughter.]

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

BRODERICK THE ELUSIVE.

Mr. GAMBLE. My recollection is very clear upon this proposition; I recall it distinctly, and I think I am correct in the date, that the subpœna was issued for Lee O'Neil Browne because, as I recall it, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] and myself had to do with it. It was after dinner on Thursday night, and as testified to by Browne, he was in the city and only went to the suburbs. Yet in flaming headlines the next morning——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The suburbs were far enough for some people to lose themselves pretty completely if they wanted to do so. Can you imagine a better hiding place than the suburbs of Chicago? [Laughter.]

Mr. GAMBLE. His testimony is not impeached in that regard. Yet in flaming headlines the next morning it was announced in certain of the papers that Browne practically was a fugitive from justice. It was utterly inexcusable——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question there?

Mr. GAMBLE. Wait a moment; let me go on.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; let me ask a question right there. Is it not true that the Sergeant at Arms reported to the committee that none of the three could be found?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes; I think you will find that in the record. Let me say——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Why could everybody else be found?

Mr. GAMBLE. Let me say that Broderick was under indictment at Springfield; the case was being heard at that time under a demurrer. He was there while the committee was in session. He returned to Chicago. He did not care to appear before the committee, and he gave this as his excuse, until he had conferred with his attorney; and, as I recall it, and as I think the record will disclose, he did appear on Monday morning with his attorney.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And the record further discloses that the committee very obligingly excused him until he could go to Springfield and confer with his attorneys on something——

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes; but——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Pardon me. The Senator is demonstrating what I said a moment ago—that this man Broderick, through unhappy and unfortunate circumstances that he could not well explain, aroused the tearful sympathy of all of the subcommittee, and the Senator from South Dakota is weeping copiously over his condition even yet. [Laughter.] Sad.

Mr. GAMBLE. Not in the slightest degree, Mr. President; but I feel, in justice to the subcommittee which took this testimony and heard the evidence, that I should make these facts plain before the Senate itself. I do not blame Mr. Broderick in refusing to answer certain of those interrogatories——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is plain that you stand by him—poor, abused Saloon-keeper Broderick! Who would not defend him if the theory of the Senator from South Dakota and of all those who defend this election is correct?

"MINIONS" OF THE LAW.

Mr. GAMBLE. Propounded to him because, on account of the minions——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Minions of the law!

Mr. GAMBLE. That were upon his track and the indictments pending against him at Springfield——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Poor soul!

Mr. GAMBLE. He was justified in so doing.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He was with his attorney.

Mr. GAMBLE. I say the minions.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. "Minions" of the law! Yes; down with the "minions of the law" for hounding these bribe givers and bribe takers, says the Senator and the defenders of this election.

Mr. GAMBLE. Not the minions of the law, but perhaps some of the men who were on the track of De Wolf—detectives who represented that they were out there in behalf of the committee, when they were never so authorized.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, Mr. President, the Senator's denunciation of the officers of justice——

Mr. GAMBLE. I do not——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He has told us as his defense of Broderick——

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, no, no. Will the Senator quote me correctly? I said the detectives.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. You said "minions."

Mr. GAMBLE. Not officers of the law.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then you excuse the "minions of the law." You have no complaint to make of the State's attorney of Chicago. But down with detectives, at least those who hunt down crime—especially crime against the American Government.

Mr. GAMBLE. I have put in the record my judgment on that matter.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator mind repeating it? I should like to hear it.

Mr. GAMBLE. I do not think that I particularly complimented the officers of Cook County.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Or of Sangamon County.

Mr. GAMBLE. I never made criticism of them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. About Holstlaw.

Mr. GAMBLE. I never made any criticism of the district attorney. The only criticism I did make upon Holstlaw was that he went before the grand jury and was indicted for perjury. He claimed that on that same day this detective had been following him. The indictment was dismissed. I let the record speak for itself.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The question is whether in that statement he told the truth.

Mr. GAMBLE. That is the sole proposition.

"I REFUSE TO ANSWER."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator has most fortunately, without any intention of his own, directed the attention of the Senate to the very next point which logically comes, and that, I think, will dispose of Mr. Broderick.

Now, I want to claim the attention of the Senate—for it does so illumine this case and the view of the subcommittee—to the statement of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] that he does not blame Broderick for not answering certain questions. I hope you will not forget that statement. What were those questions? Let us read them. I read from page 551:

Q. You had no business relations with him——A. No, sir.
Q. (Continuing.) That would bring you together at all?—A. No, sir.
Q. Did you ever write to him to call on you?
Mr. DAWSON (Broderick's attorney). I object to the question, and, Mr. Broderick, I advise you not to answer it.
The WITNESS. I refuse to answer——

I will now read a series of questions which this man Broderick refused to answer as to which the Senator specifically exculpates him. Every one of these answers——

Mr. GAMBLE rose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Wait a minute. Let me get through. Every one of these answers would have been as to something on which he could be contradicted, and he answered everything upon which he could not be contradicted. More than that, Mr. President—and this is what amazes me—he refused to answer, and the subcommittee permitted him to do so upon the ground that he might incriminate or injure himself, when the subcommittee should have known that he was absolutely in no danger. He was protected by the statutes of the United States giving him immunity for anything he might state to the Senate's committee.

Mr. GAMBLE. But, Mr. President, the only course left to the subcommittee would have been to have reported these facts to the Senate and have taken directions from the Senate. They could not compel answers.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator did not want to go to that trouble, and did not want to bother us.

Mr. GAMBLE. The Senate was not in session. This hearing was had in September and the first part of October, and the Senate was not in session until December.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Why did you not try it? You did not try it; you did not try to force him.

Mr. GAMBLE. We did not presume to call a special session of Congress for that purpose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; the Senator has said that he justified this man in not answering.

Mr. GAMBLE. Hold on.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. You said you did not blame him.

Mr. GAMBLE. Let us be fair to each other, Mr. President, in this.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I want to be fair to everyone—especially to the people.

Mr. GAMBLE. I do say that in certain respects I did justify him, but not in all respects.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Name the respects.

Mr. GAMBLE. I recall that the question was asked Mr. Broderick——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am going to read it.

Mr. GAMBLE. When Holstlaw was there, who else was in the saloon? Now, Mr. President, I will give the reasons for my belief.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; give your belief.

Mr. GAMBLE. I will give the reasons for my belief.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It needs them.

THE SUBCOMMITTEE'S POSITION.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, with the tremendous pressure of this case before it ever reached the Senate of the United States, with special agents, representatives, and detectives employed by the Chicago Tribune practically traversing the entire State of Illinois to dig up and find evidence, if they succeeded in disclosing the names of these men there present, I feel confident Mr. Broderick thought that when the trial came on these men who were then present would be found to be missing or out of the jurisdiction of the State.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Think of that, Mr. President, as an excuse for Broderick refusing to answer, when Broderick himself stated that the reason he refused to answer was because if he answered he might incriminate himself!

Mr. President, the Senator said the only recourse would have been to have appealed to Congress. That is a change of position on the part of the committee; but not the only one, as I will show before I am through. I will ask the Senator and the subcommittee, who are the servants of this body, to tell us whether they insisted on his answering the questions? They could have done that at least; could they not?

Mr. GAMBLE. I think, Mr. President, the statement was fully made as representing the committee by the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER], as to the law of the case.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have also got what he says.

Mr. GAMBLE. It was the understanding of the committee that where there was a refusal to answer the witness must take his own chances and assume the responsibility, and that the committee, to enforce an answer, must have applied to the Senate itself.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But the Senator and the subcommittee did not even urge Broderick to answer; they willingly let him refuse to answer, and the Senator has just told us that he did not blame him for not answering.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, do not take up too much of my time.

I will read the statute, Mr. President. Here was a man, with a perfect legal genius as his counsel, before a subcommittee, which have defended him on this floor with passionate insistence; and he refused to answer the questions which I am going to read in a moment, because he would "incriminate himself." And yet here is the statute of the United States expressly exempting him from any consequences for any testimony he gave before a committee of this body or any committee of Congress and expressly protecting him.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He was not in the least danger, and the record does not show that the committee even suggested that to him.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, that law was very plain. It was before the subcommittee and was thoroughly understood by every member of the subcommittee.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So much the worse. There is no excuse for you then. The committee said nothing about the statute. That being true, why did you not insist on his testifying when he refused to testify on the ground that he would incriminate himself? Then it would have been time for you to have said, "We must consider whether we shall appeal to Congress;" but, as a matter of fact, you not only let him refuse to answer, but it is not quite 10 minutes since the Senator himself said he did not blame him for not answering.

Mr. GAMBLE. Because, Mr. President, he was within his rights under the law, and he assumed the responsibility of failing to answer. To coerce or compel answers, we would have been obliged to have applied to the Senate itself, which was not then in session.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Why that is idle, because the Senator did not try to coerce him.

Mr. GAMBLE. Because he was there with his attorney and under the law.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He was there with his attorney—after awhile, but he was not there for a good while. And his attorney was at his side every minute.

Let us see, Mr. President, what these things are that the Senator from South Dakota most obligingly says he does not blame him for not answering. I beg the indulgence of the Senate while I read these few questions.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator from Indiana permit me there?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I will.

Mr. CRAWFORD. As I remember it, Mr. Robert E. Wilson, another similar witness, testified right here in the city of Washington, perhaps under the dome of this Capitol, and at a time when Congress was in session, or near the time when Congress was in session, that he claimed a similar privilege, and apparently he was protected in claiming it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, well, you must remember that poor Wilson—"Jack Pot Wilson"—was suffering from nervous prostration because of two weeks' campaign, and had to go to Canada for nervous prostration, strangely enough, just at the time the subcommittee was sitting.

THE INCRIMINATING QUESTIONS.

When I come to the case of Wilson the Senate will find it a more lachrymose case than the case of Broderick; but now, let us see what these questions were that this man Broderick refused to answer—questions which the subcommittee permitted him to decline to answer; questions which the Senator from South Dakota, Mr. GAMBLE, says he does not blame Broderick for not answering. I read from page 557:

Q. Mr. Broderick, did you ever have any occasion to write to Mr. D. W. Holstlaw in the month of August to call upon you?—A. I refuse to answer on the same ground as I said before.

I should be glad if Senators would remember that. Why would he refuse to say whether or not he wrote Holstlaw? Holstlaw already had said that he could not find the letter. Why, Mr. President, it was because Broderick knew that he had written the letter, and that that letter might turn up. Is there any other reason?

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. GAMBLE. I will repeat to the Senator that I said I justified Mr. Broderick in declining to reply to certain of those interrogatories.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. You did not justify——

Mr. GAMBLE. But not to all.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not to this one, then? You did not justify him as to this one? Check one, then, that the Senator does not justify.

Mr. GAMBLE. I was not his attorney or responsible for his answers.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am sure the Senator was not his attorney; it was not the Senator's business to be anybody's attorney but that of the people of the United States.

Now, let us get back to Mr. Broderick. One question the Senator does not justify:

Q. On what ground?—A. On the same ground as I stated before.
Q. On what ground do you refer to?—A. That I might be compelled to give testimony against myself.

That is, if Broderick answered whether he wrote Holstlaw to come to Chicago, Broderick feared he would "incriminate himself." Holstlaw says Broderick did write him, and that is the reason Holstlaw came. Holstlaw actually was there. Now, Broderick says that if he answers that question yes or no he would be giving evidence that might incriminate himself. I wish Senators would consider that. Now, again:

Q. Mr. Broderick, when did Mr. Holstlaw come to see you?—A. Well, I don't exactly remember the date, but he was in my place when I came in there.
Mr. AUSTRIAN. Had he come in response to any invitation from you to him?—A. I refuse to answer.

Now, does the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], a member of the subcommittee, justify that?

Mr. GAMBLE. I am not here as the attorney in the case for Broderick.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, no.

Mr. GAMBLE. Nor am I here to defend him. He was taking, as I say, his own responsibility.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, we are trying to develop this case, and whether Broderick gave Holstlaw the money or not, and what kind of a man Broderick is.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, what is the difference between his saying that he could or could not answer whether he wrote the letter to Holstlaw, because it would incriminate him to admit that he wrote it?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. God knows; I do not. [Laughter.] Do not ask me. Some of these answers and some of the conduct in this case are either too profound for my comprehension or too foolish for me to understand—one or the other. The subcommittee both comprehends and understands, apparently. I do not know.

Again, on page 557:

Q. Did you have any business with him which would necessitate his calling on you in the month of June or July?—A. No, sir.
Q. 1909?—A. No, sir.
Q. No business whatsoever?—A. No, sir.

You see Broderick answers that right off. [Laughter.]

Q. If he came to see you during the month of June or July, 1909, did he come on his own volition or at your request?—A. I refuse to answer.

Again, on page 563—here is the one which the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] says he does justify, and you have heard his reason:

Did you ask him—

That is, Holstlaw—

Q. Did you ask him what he was there for?—A. No, sir.
Q. Did he tell you what he was there for?—A. No, sir.
Q. Did he pay for the drink?—A. That I don't remember.
Q. You don't remember anything about the occurrence at all?—A. No.

You perceive he does not remember anything now [laughter]; it is convenient not to do so.

Q. How long was he in your place?—A. Possibly a half or three-quarters of an hour.
Q. That long?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And he talked to no one but you, eh?—A. I refuse to answer.
Q. On what ground?—A. On the ground that I might give evidence or be compelled to give evidence against myself.
Q. Compelled to give evidence against yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

Q. I say did you write to him—Holstlaw—did you fix the time?—A. I refuse to answer.
Q. On what ground?—A. On the ground I might be compelled to give evidence against myself.

BRODERICK AN IDEAL AGENT OF BRIBERY.

How could Broderick's testifying whether he wrote Holstlaw to come, as Holstlaw did come, incriminate him (Broderick)? It could not, Mr. President, except on two theories: First, that if Broderick said he did not write Holstlaw and Holstlaw afterwards produced Broderick's letter, Broderick would be shown to have committed perjury; and, second, if he did say he wrote Holstlaw to come there, then he fully corroborated Holstlaw's story.

Who was Broderick? Broderick was a saloon keeper on the West Side in Chicago. He had been in the State senate for several terms. He was a part of that bipartisan—not nonpartisan—combination that seems to exist in Chicago; because he says he was "affiliated with good friends" of the sitting Member; that he himself was a good friend of the sitting Member; and that he himself would have voted for him at any time. That is Broderick, the ideal agent to select to bribe a fellow senator.

Broderick testified that he knew that the sitting Member was a candidate—when? ABOUT TWO WEEKS BEFORE MAY 26. Does that mean anything to Senators? That is the very time that Browne undertook in the House to "round up" his following. Broderick was operating in the Senate.

And on the morning of the election Broderick swears that the sitting Member himself told him that on that day he was going to be elected. He further testifies that the sitting Member knew long before May 26 that he, Broderick, would vote for him. So, Mr. President, we have Broderick, the bipartisan Democrat "affiliated with close friends" of the sitting Member in Chicago, a close friend himself, experienced by several years' service in the dark practices of a part of the Legislature of Illinois, saying that he learned about the sitting Member being a candidate about two weeks before he was elected, THE VERY TIME THAT BROWNE BEGAN HIS AGENCY.

You see Broderick was the very man who naturally would be selected to practice the corruption which Holstlaw said he did practice. But when this man Broderick is put upon the stand, he refuses to answer any question on which he could be contradicted upon the ground that it might incriminate him, although it could not possibly incriminate him unless Holstlaw's story was true, although he was protected by national law. What do Senators think of that?

In the face of that, will you believe Holstlaw's perfectly natural and corroborated testimony or will you believe Broderick's evasive denial when at last he was produced before the committee? Will you believe Holstlaw, who is corroborated at every point, or Broderick, who refuses time and again to answer questions which even the Senator from South Dakota does not justify him in refusing to answer?

Again, Broderick refuses to say who was in the saloon while Holstlaw was there. Then, a little later on, he did answer and withdrew his answer. That is so amusing that I will read it:

Q. Did you ever notify him that you wanted to see him on any business matter?—A. No, sir.
Q. Did you ever notify him that you wanted to see him on any matter?—A. No, sir; not on any matter.
Q. Not on any matter. Did you ever pay any money to any member of the legislature for any purpose?—A. Pardon me. Will you read the last question?
Q. Read the last one.—A. Not the last one, but the one before that.
(Question read as follows:)
"Did you ever notify him that you wanted to see him on any matter?"
The WITNESS. Well, now, that is one of the questions I refused to answer a while ago.
Q. You have already answered it.—A. I know, but I ask leave to correct that or withdraw that answer.
Senator BURROWS. You withdraw your answer to the question?—A. I desire to withdraw the answer to that question; yes.

What becomes of the theory of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] that the subcommittee could not force Broderick to answer? You let him withdraw it—the subcommittee let him withdraw his answer.

Mr. GAMBLE. But, Mr. President, the answer speaks for itself in the record.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And Broderick withdrew his answer because he knew he had written the letter and he feared it might turn up.

Now, Mr. President, in a little while when I come to Mr. Link I will show, I think, one reason why Mr. Broderick did not answer these questions. And when I show that Senators will see that it is the real reason.

So, Mr. President, we have Holstlaw corroborated in every important particular of his testimony. If there is a point where he is not corroborated, will any Senator point it out? We have Broderick stating the reasons and the circumstances which would make him the most natural man in the world to select as an agent of bribery; we have Broderick refusing to answer any question upon which he could be contradicted, and especially the one as to whether he asked Holstlaw to come to Chicago. Does that settle those two "gentlemen," even though they were taken alone; and if so, what shall we say when we come to take them in connection with the remainder?

BECKEMEYER THE PITIFUL.

Mr. President, there are two out of the seven. That is not all. I come next to Mr. Beckemeyer. Let us be brief on Beckemeyer. He testifies that he got the money in two installments, the first, a thousand dollars, from Browne himself, on June 21, at St. Louis; that Browne, when he handed it to him, said, "This is Lorimer money;" that at Starving Rock—and it is important to remember this when we come to Browne's story—a few days before, he had told him he wanted to see him in St. Louis, that Browne would have a package for Beckemeyer.

Will anybody contradict that? Nobody but Browne; and we will examine Browne in a moment. We have traced every cent of Holstlaw money—the first payment—into the bank on the day it was received.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me? The Senator illustrates the method of arguing this case. He says, "Who denies this but Browne?" There is no pretense that there was anyone besides Browne and this man there.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Who else could deny it?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There were several there.

Mr. BAILEY. There was nobody there when he says Browne told him this.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Told him what?

Mr. BAILEY. That he wanted to see him in St. Louis.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, that was at Starving Rock. At Starving Rock they met alone, so far as the testimony shows: but when they were at St. Louis together there were several others of "the gang," as Beckemeyer calls them, there. There was our friend Joe Clark, Browne says, although Joe denies it, and Browne says, "If Joe denies it he must be right;" there was our friend Shephard—Shephard of bathroom and automobile fame—and all the rest of them. What I say is——

Mr. BAILEY. And they all deny receiving any money there, except Link and Beckemeyer, who had been indicted.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Except Link, and Beckemeyer, and White, and Luke. All these testified that they did receive this money except Luke. Luke is dead; but his wife swears he came home from an unaccounted absence with $950 in large bills. And the committee would not permit State Attorney Murray to testify to Luke's confession. After a while we shall come to Clark, Shephard, and the others. In their case——

Mr. BAILEY. They deny it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We will see.

Now, mark you, Holstlaw was paid his first installment when? June 16; the first installment June 16. When was that? That was the very day or the day before that White testifies that he got the remainder of his first installment from Browne in Chicago, and only three or four days before the rest of them swore that they got their first installment from Browne in St. Louis.

BECKEMEYER DEPOSITS BRIBE MONEY AWAY FROM HOME.

So the date on which Holstlaw swore he received and on which he deposited his first installment is practically the same date on which the members of the house swore that they got their first installment.

Now, Mr. President, we have traced the Holstlaw money. What became of the Beckemeyer money? Some of it, at least, was deposited in a most curious place—Belle Isle, Ill. Beckemeyer did not live at Belle Isle. He even had to be identified at the Belle Isle bank by Gray.

Who was Gray? Gray was a business man there. But that is not all. The following circumstance explains why it was that he took the liberty of asking Beckemeyer where he got the money. Gray said they had known one another from boyhood, they were boyhood friends. Well, Beckemeyer turns up at Belle Isle. He made a deposit in the bank of currency in bills of large denominations, one of which was a hundred-dollar bill. That was unusual, and so Gray, before whom Beckemeyer counted the money, asked him where he got it.

The committee refused to allow Gray to answer. Should not a "declaration against interest" be admitted? Did you ever hear a case in which the declaration of a party against his own interest was not admitted? If it had been admitted, it and the testimony of Murray and of Ford would have shown where this money came from.

Why did not the attorneys for the sitting Member want Beckemeyer's statement to his boyhood friend Gray as to where he got this money admitted? Why did they object? Surely Gray was not also in the "conspiracy" of which the State's attorney of Cook County and the State's attorney of Sangamon County and the sheriff of Sangamon County and nearly everybody else seems to have been members, according to those who are defending this election. Surely Ford, another business man, was not. Gray and Ford and Murray would have told the truth. These disinterested business men were not in the "conspiracy," were they?

Why, then, was it that the attorney for the sitting Member objected to having them state what Beckemeyer told them as to where he got the money. And where did he get it? Will any Senator tell me? Evidently Beckemeyer was not a big lawyer. He was plainly a little lawyer. Was it from a fee? Is it possible that Beckemeyer had a client who paid him a fee in hundred-dollar bills? Absurd.

Was it a part of his salary? No; because it was in July, and a man of Beckemeyer's dissolute habits would not have saved his salary, which I think he drew, at the beginning of the session, all those months without breaking a hundred-dollar bill. And the money was deposited soon after he swore he got his bribe. And Beckemeyer swears he got his bribe money in bills of large denominations. There is where he got this mysterious hundred-dollar bill.

Mr. President, no greater proof can be produced in any case than the declaration of the man himself that he was bribed, followed by being shown in possession of the money which he says he got.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do, indeed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been listening attentively all afternoon to the Senator's presentation of this case. Will the Senator tell me, for information, where he thinks this money originally came from?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Beckemeyer money?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have not the slightest doubt in the world that he got it where he swore he got it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Where?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. From Browne and Wilson, at St. Louis.

Mr. GALLINGER. Where did Browne and Wilson get it?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is what Link says. He "did not know where the money came from." Where does the Senator from New Hampshire think Browne and Wilson got it?

ALL WHO CONFESSED, "A BAND OF LIARS," BUT THOSE WHO DID NOT CONFESS VIRTUOUS MEN.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know. I am of the opinion that they were a band of liars, and that no one can tell whether they were telling the truth on that occasion or not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But they could not lie all together and have all the circumstances corroborated. A lie would not put $2,500 in the State Bank of Chicago.

Mr. GALLINGER. It might.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. A lie would not deposit a hundred-dollar bill in Belle Isle. That is too complicated.

Mr. GALLINGER. The $2,500 might have come from the source that gave this man White $3,500 for his startling revelations.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, the Senator from Tennessee answered that.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Texas will pardon me for a moment. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER] answered that. We have now the suggestion that this "conspiracy" was so broad that it actually went down into its pocket, produced the money, gave it to these men, had them commit perjury, put themselves in danger of the penitentiary, when, as the Senator from Tennessee pointed out so clearly, it was the most stupid thing in the world, because they could have just as easily and far more naturally put it upon the sitting Member himself if they had wanted to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator intend to put it upon Mr. LORIMER?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am putting it where the record puts it. And the law puts it very definitely, as I demonstrated by the decisions already submitted. The record shows that Mr. Holstlaw got $2,500 from Mr. Broderick. He deposited that in bank. The record shows that Beckemeyer got his $1,000 from Browne—who stated it was the "Lorimer money"—and his $900 from Wilson, respectively, in St. Louis, and Beckemeyer deposited part of it in bank away from home in large bills, one of them being a $100 bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. This man Gray, whom the Senator was just talking about, who identified Beckemeyer, was himself a member of the legislature, and, as I recall, probably engaged in the condensed-milk business. But he was a member of the legislature, anyway.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, no; he was not. Gray was not a member of the legislature.

Mr. BAILEY. I rise to answer the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, which is a very pertinent one, and I desire to say to him that this is practically the only case in which bribery was ever alleged in a senatorial election where there has been no attempt to show where the money came from.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; and not only that, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; there is a suggestion——

Mr. GALLINGER. But the suggestion is made over and over again that Senator LORIMER had nothing to do with this.

Mr. BAILEY. That is admitted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. By whom?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a queer case.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senators must not have a joint debate with one another in my time.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has taken a great deal of the time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have taken mightly little time, considering the length of this debate and the fact that I am a member of the committee.

The Senator from New Hampshire has just suggested that this money came from the same source that also originated this whole "conspiracy" against the sitting Member.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator adopt that suggestion?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not. It is most absurd.

Mr. BAILEY. Will he, then, tell us where it came from?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How do I know where it came from? I am not in the confidence of any source from which it could have come.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

WAS CORRUPTION PRACTICED, THE ONLY QUESTION.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It seems to me it is a pertinent inquiry, as to this fund, whether or not it makes any difference where it came from, if it was used for corrupt purposes and through its use the election of the sitting Member was procured. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Applause is not permitted in the Senate galleries.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that is a fair measure of the audience's intelligence.

Mr. President, let me say this to the Senator from South Dakota, that you must trace this money, if it is to be charged and the Senate is asked to believe that it was used to secure the election of Mr. LORIMER; if not to Mr. LORIMER himself, then to some of his friends.

In the other cases—for instance, in the Payne case, the effort was made to prove that Mr. Payne's son and other close friends drew large sums of money out of the bank and appeared at the capital of Ohio with it. In the old Caldwell case—and by the way, Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] said the other day that we were growing very bad; that in 40 years there had been 15 cases of this kind, and I beg to remind him that three of them were from Kansas—three out of the 15. In the Caldwell case they traced the money to Caldwell, drawn out of the bank upon his order and by his friends.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Caldwell denied it was drawn for any such purpose.

Mr. BAILEY. He did not deny that he drew some money out, and they had the bank books there.

So, in the Pomeroy case, they traced where they drew the money. In the Ingalls case it was admitted that money was used on both sides, but there it was claimed not enough to affect the election. But in this case there is not a scintilla of testimony attempting to show that LORIMER drew any unusual sums of money from the bank or that any of his friends drew any unusual sums from the bank.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator is not going to take too much of my time.

Mr. BAILEY. And I submit before you can charge them with having used the money it would be fair to show that they first had the money.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We trace it as far as Browne and Wilson and Broderick as to its sources, and we trace it into the hands of the men who say they got it as to its place of destination.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course the Senator does not believe that Browne and Wilson and Broderick, if they used this money to bribe these members, furnished it themselves.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not, Mr. President. I do not think they were quite so enthusaistic in this cause as not only to incur the danger of the penitentiary, but to also put up the money themselves.

Mr. BAILEY. Then here was LORIMER's bank; here were his known friends; and not one effort made to show that any one of them about the time these payments are said to have been made, or at any other time, drew one 5-cent piece out of the bank for which they did not and could not account; and to my mind——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But the money itself was there.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I say the money itself was there.

Mr. BAILEY. That assumes that these men swore the truth.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course, they swore the truth. There can be no question that they swore the truth when the statement of each corroborates the statement of the other, and all the circumstances corroborate every confession.

Mr. BAILEY. If three men start out to sell their testimony they would be very apt to corroborate each other. That only assumes one of the very points at issue, as to whether these men swore the truth. If they swore the truth, that is the end of the argument.

But it seems to me that in this case, as in all of the others, if the corruptionists were in the possession of money it should be traced from its original source to their possession. But absolutely no attempt has been made to do that in this case.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do want to get through, but go ahead.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I hope the Senator will not feel he must hurry, as this is so important.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I want to oblige the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not want to delay——

Mr. GALLINGER. You will not oblige me. I want you to take all the time you desire.

"RULES OF COMMON SENSE."

Mr. CRAWFORD. It seems to me, while I do not think anyone in this body has a more profound admiration for the very great ability of the Senator from Texas than I, his statement here is against the most simple rule of common sense when he undertakes to say that if it be once established that money was corruptly used, and as the result of the corrupt use of that money the sitting Member obtained his seat, and those facts having been established, the burden is upon those making the charge to trace the fund, instead of being upon him to come forward and disclaim it. It seems to me so simple that it can not be questioned that the presumption is that the men who profited by the use of this money were the men to furnish the money. Who else would furnish it?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. BAILEY. When a Senator talks about the rules of common sense, he ought not to violate them in the very next sentence, as the Senator from South Dakota did. The trouble with that whole argument is simply this, that it assumes that this money has been used according as these witnesses claim. Now, if that be admitted, that is the end of the case. But that is denied. The men from whom these men swear they received this money all swear they did not pay it to them. That is the issue. Now, I say that the way to have demonstrated the correctness of the testimony of the men who swear they received the money, and to have proved to be false the testimony of the men who say they did not pay it, was to show that these men obtained the money. LORIMER is the president of a bank, I believe. Why did they not go there, and see if any unusual sums of money were drawn out? They could have summoned the bank officers on that. LORIMER's friends were known. Why were they not summoned? Mr. President, I see a distinguished friend of mine rather smile at the idea that they might have gotten the truth out of LORIMER's bank, but I make this reply to that suggestion: No bank officer would take the money out of his bank without in some way accounting for it, and it was easy enough to have summoned the officers of this bank, or any other bank with which LORIMER or his friends transacted business, and proved if they drew any unusual sums of money, and that would have corroborated this. But it will not do to assume that the money has been proved to have been paid.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is it the opinion of the Senator that this money which has been testified about and traced is all a dream—did not exist?

Mr. BAILEY. No; it is not a dream. It is a lie, in my opinion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. A lie in the Holstlaw bank?

Mr. BAILEY. Of course I——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. A lie in Belle Isle?

Mr. BAILEY. I discussed the Holstlaw matter, and the Senator knows very well what my opinion about that is. Does the Senator from Indiana believe that any man ever received $2,500 as the price of his vote and within 12 months forgot the name of the bank in which he deposited it?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have not any doubt that in the case of nervous prostration, in which this man Holstlaw seemed to be, he could very well mistake, being a banker himself, and mention the First National Bank of Chicago, which is the very largest bank there. But that is trivial—he corrected it immediately.

Mr. BAILEY. The state of nervous prostration that would have made him forget the bank was just the frame of mind that would make him tell a lie.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will ask the Senator this: Does the Senator himself believe that Holstlaw actually did deposit $2,500 in the State Bank of Chicago on June 16?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not; and the trouble with Holstlaw's testimony is——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What was the motive of Chief Clerk Newton of the bank perjuring himself? He says under oath that Holstlaw did deposit it and that he (Newton) received it.

Mr. BAILEY. The same motive that other men have for trying to destroy this man's character.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That includes——

Mr. BAILEY. I exhibited, and I again repeat that I hope whoever has it will produce that affidavit of Newton, because there is not a man living who will examine Newton's signature to that affidavit and then say that Newton wrote the name "Holstlaw Bank" at the head of that deposit slip.

THAT "FORGERY," AGAIN.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator from Texas still think the bank's deposit slip is a "forgery?"

Mr. BAILEY. I do; undoubtedly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I presented here this morning an affidavit which I asked for.

Mr. BAILEY. From whom?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. From the chief clerk of this bank, to the effect——

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator let me see that affidavit?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will be glad to.

And the other one was lost. There is the photograph of the deposit slip. I never saw the original. In the affidavit Chief Clerk Newton says it is entered on the books. I call the attention of the Senator from Texas to that.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will permit me, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to print a photograph copy of the signature of Jarvis O. Newton to this affidavit, side by side with the name of the "Holstlaw Bank."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is right. I will ask the Senator from Texas——

Mr. BAILEY. Let us get that consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I sincerely hope that will be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will ask the attention of the Senator from Texas to this. Will the Senator look at the "w" in Newton and the "w" in Holstlaw and tell me that they are dissimilar? Also the "t" in Holstlaw and the "t" in Newton, with the peculiar crossing of the "t." Also the "s" in the two names.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope they will be reproduced.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senate could see these at once——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Let them see them.

Mr. BAILEY. They could not all see them at once.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. You can pass them around. I shall pass them around.

Mr. BAILEY. But that is the very purpose for which I asked unanimous consent to put them in the RECORD. I repeat that the name of Newton appears to have been signed by a man of some skill in penmanship, and the name "Holstlaw Bank" appears to have been written either by a boy or an uneducated man, and those things will show for themselves when they appear photographed in the RECORD side by side.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senate can judge for itself.

Mr. President, I will repeat what I said while the Senator from Texas was compelled to be absent. I do not criticize the subcommittee for not calling for the books of the bank, because it is clear why they did not call for them. They believed the deposit had been made. They believed that Mr. Newton spoke the truth. They did not believe that Newton also perjured himself. They did not think the deposit slip was a forgery, and they believed the money actually was deposited there. So they did not call for the books.

So did the vigilant attorney for the sitting member, Mr. Haney, and his associates believe the deposit was made. If they had thought that Newton was perjuring himself, if they had thought the deposit slip was a forgery, they at once would have asked for the books. But not until the novel theory was suggested that the deposit slip was a forgery, another crime committed in this vast and widespread "conspiracy" to destroy a man, as the Senator says, was it ever supposed that Holstlaw did not deposit the money?

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me? The answer to that is that when the slip was presented to the committee, no member of the committee detected the mispelling of Holstlaw's name, so far as the record discloses, and it was not then testified to by anybody that Holstlaw himself had made out the deposit slip. That statement was not presented to any member of the committee until the attorney for the prosecution filed his reply brief, and then in that reply brief he laid great stress upon that photographic copy of the deposit slip which he solemnly declared to have been in Holstlaw's own handwriting.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. Just let me finish. Then when the deposit slip was said by the attorney in the case to have been in Holstlaw's own handwriting, and they examined the misspelling of Holstlaw's name, of course it became apparent either that the attorney had tried to mislead the committee by declaring Holstlaw wrote it with his own hand or else a forgery had been committed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Or else that the attorney had made a mistake, as attorneys have been known to do before.

Mr. BAILEY. Never one like that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, I think many more serious than that, Mr. President; and so the charge of forgery is superadded now to the charge of perjury to a man who had no motive. And that terrible charge is based upon the misstatement of an attorney in a hasty reply brief, when I think the Senator from Texas will agree with all of us that neither one of these attorneys on either side of this singular transaction showed very much skill as lawyers or very much diligence or anything else.

Both men when they were examining witnesses, for instance, often would call some other man's name. The Senator remembers, no doubt, with a good deal of digust here how this record is burdened with irrelevant arguments and everything else. I have had to cross out a great deal so as to get down to the testimony.

Mr. BAILEY. One of the attorneys in that case has held the high and honorable position of a judge of the courts of Chicago, and I would not be willing to allow the statement to stand in the record that I think he is an inferior lawyer.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will ask the Senator, now, directly from reading the questions by this attorney, and the arguments he makes, and all that sort of thing, does he strike the Senator from Texas as an accurate lawyer?

Mr. BAILEY. There was so little law presented to the committee——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will not press that question.

Mr. BAILEY. And so much of fact, and so many contradictions, that I would not be willing to make up a judgment on any lawyer's accomplishments from that record. But this much I will say, that I would hate to have people excuse that kind of a statement in a brief of mine. I would hate to have it said that upon my honor as a lawyer I had sought to mislead a committee by a false statement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Or even had made a mistake.

Mr. BAILEY. That could not have been a mistake, because a lawyer, laying stress upon and inviting the committee to draw a conclusion from that, and treating it as the one important corroborating circumstance, could not have been honestly mistaken about it.

A DULL KNAVE—IF THE ATTORNEY WAS A KNAVE AT ALL.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then he was unspeakably and unbelievably stupid—a dull knave; for if he made that statement for the purpose of misleading us he knew that it would be discovered that Holstlaw's name was not written by Holstlaw himself. So, Mr. President, instead of making this man out a knave, the Senator makes him out the most shallow of fools, because he had not made a mistake, but a willful and misleading statement, and upon this the charge of forgery and perjury by a new witness is based.

Mr. BAILEY. I think nearly all knaves are fools when you get to the bottom of it. I have no doubt in the world that if a lawyer were not honest enough to always be frank and candid with the court that is very much the best thing for him to do. But I return to the proposition that a lawyer who would stand before a court and with a paper in his hand argue that it was in the handwriting of a particular man without knowing it would give the court a good cause to strike him from the roll of attorneys.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Whether all knaves are fools or not, there are certainly some knaves that have sense enough to keep out of the penitentiary. Now, the question is after all whether this money was deposited—not whether this lawyer was a good lawyer or not, not whether the State's attorney of Cook County and Chicago did his duty or not, not whether the conduct of the State's attorney of Sangamon County was just what we think it should be or not? That is not what we are trying.

We are not disbarring the Attorneys Austrian or Hanecy or trying them; we are not trying the conduct of the State's attorneys' office of Cook County or Sangamon County, or the sheriff of that county. We must not be diverted by such considerations. The only question is whether these men actually got this money, which the report of the committee itself says they swore that they did get "as the consideration for their votes."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I must get on merely for the reason that I suppose I have to conclude to-night. It appears that there is unanimous consent for to-morrow and the same courtesy can not be extended to me that was extended to the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Texas seems to be of the opinion that because the committee did not inquire and it was not ascertained from what source the Lorimer money came it is some evidence, at least, that there was no Lorimer money. Did I get the view of the Senator from Texas correctly?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator does, with substantial correctness.

Mr. CUMMINS. The first address that was made upon this matter came from the chairman of the committee, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]. As I remember that address, although it is not before me at this moment, the Senator from Michigan admitted or charged that there was in the Illinois Legislature what was known as the jack-pot money. That view of it was emphasized a few days later by my distinguished friend, the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], in which he not only charged it, but deplored it. It seems to me that if you will discover where the jack-pot money came from, you will have some clue to the sources of the Lorimer money.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, in reply to that I have to say that if the Lorimer money was contributed to the jack-pot money, then, by finding where LORIMER made his drafts on the bank, they could have connected the two. But my suggestion was that if this money was used for LORIMER it would be easy enough to have proved by the banks with which he and his friends transact their business whether or not they drew these sums.

Now, just a moment further. The Senate will remember that this man White testified that at one time Browne had $30,000 on his person, in a belt around his waist. If a sum of that kind was contributed about that time to Browne, it is utterly impossible that LORIMER and his friends could have furnished it without leaving trace of that transaction in the banks with which they transact their business. The fact, I say, that no effort even was made to show that LORIMER or those close to him drew money out of the banks for any purpose connected with this transaction is, to my mind, strong proof that no such circumstance could have been shown.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Texas made a mistake a few moments ago which I am sure he will be glad to correct the moment it is called to his attention. I do not insist that it is material at all, but it illustrates how easy it is to make a mistake. Mr. LORIMER was not elected president of the bank of which he is now president until nearly a year after this occurrence took place.

Mr. BAILEY. Then all the easier it was to have traced the drafts of this corruption fund from other banks, because when a friend of mine who sits across the aisle rather smiled at my suggestion that they might have derived this testimony from LORIMER's bank, I felt the force of it at once. It might be difficult to have obtained any information from that, and I tried to cover that difficulty by suggesting that no officer of a bank would have allowed a large sum to have been taken from it without leaving some memorandum there.

The Senator is correct. I believe the date of the organization of the bank of which Senator LORIMER is president is not a matter of the record at all, and is outside of the record. I thank the Senator for setting me right on that point.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the junior Senator from Illinois stated, I think, the date upon which he became president of the bank to which we are both referring in his speech which was made before the investigation began. That, however, is not at all material. I simply called it to the attention of the Senator from Texas in order that the mistake might be corrected and there might be no misunderstanding about it.

But the point I make is this: The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] seemed to think, and as I believe justly to think, that the evidence did show there was a fund that was called the jack pot for distribution among the boodlers of that legislature.

Now, the same evidence which establishes the existence of that fund establishes the existence of the fund which it is alleged was used for the purpose of buying votes for Mr. LORIMER. I do not know whether the Senator from Texas believes it or not, but if he believes that there was what is known as a jack pot in that legislature, to be distributed among the corrupt members who were willing to participate in it, what reason has he for thinking that there was not another fund just as corrupt?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, there are two answers to that. I think that there never was a man in the world so corrupt that he did not do some honest things. When I remember that dishonest men have voted for every Senator in this body, I am compelled to think they have done some honest act at least, because I know all these Senators have not been elected improperly. So it might happen that the representatives who participated in a jack pot would have voted for Senator LORIMER as they might have voted on other questions without any improper or corrupt consideration.

But there is still another answer to my mind. The Senator from Iowa will recall that the very witness by whom they prove this existence of a jack pot swore that no promise was made to pay them for their vote before they voted for LORIMER. There are but three witnesses to the jack pot. One is White, and, as the Senate will recall, White swore that on the very night Browne bribed him he did not know of the existence of this jack pot in that legislature; he had heard from members of previous legislatures that a jack pot was organized in every session and divided at the end of the session, but that he did not know it. That is the testimony of one. The next is Link. He swears he obtained $1,900 from Browne and Wilson, but he swears positively and specifically that not one dollar of it was promised him to vote for LORIMER and that not one dollar of it was paid to him for voting for LORIMER. The other witness by whom it was sought to establish a jack pot is Beckemeyer, and Beckemeyer swears that he was not promised one 5 cents to vote for LORIMER, but that when they gave him a part of this money, they told him it was his Lorimer money.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Holstlaw was in the jack pot.

Mr. BAILEY. No; Holstlaw was not in the jack pot, because the jack pot was distributed, they claim, by Wilson and Browne. Holstlaw claims to have been paid by Broderick. The trouble with Holstlaw's testimony is he swears that Broderick promised to pay him $2,500 and then swore that Broderick paid him $3,200.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator from Texas does not answer my question. I did not enter into the inquiry whether this money was paid to these men for the purpose of bribing them to vote for Mr. LORIMER. The Senator from Texas, as I understand it, disputes the existence of this money, and my inquiry was, Does the Senator believe that there was jack-pot money, no matter what it was paid for, when it was paid, or to whom it was paid?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Iowa has forgotten he asked me the question whether I believed there was jack-pot money and also whether if I believed this money was contributed for that purpose, why not for the other purpose, and I proceeded to answer him that the witnesses to the existence of a jack pot did not claim that they were paid to vote for LORIMER. Then I proceeded to state the facts about the jack pot, intending to say, in conclusion, that in my judgment those circumstances completely disprove the existence of a jack pot.

I call the Senator's attention again to the fact that every time they put an honest man on the witness stand he testified that he had heard a good deal about the use of money, but when brought to book he said he never saw the use of it, that nobody ever offered to bribe him, except the man Meyers alone; he did not know anybody else who had been bribed; and like Donahue, denied positively that money was offered him; and like Shaw, who said that he heard a good deal of talk about opening barrels, but when they were opened they were always apples.

Mr. President, if the Senator will indulge me one moment further——

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not indulge the Senator from Texas, for I have no right to the floor. I am trespassing upon the time of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Indiana is occupying himself with the record. If I had it in my hand I would put into the RECORD now a statement made by a former official of the Government, in which he is reported to have said that never in its history were so many and such hungry lobbyists infesting the corridors of this Capitol as now. That goes out to the world to impeach the character of the American Congress. Yet every man here knows how little truth there is in it. If there are any lobbyists here plying their nefarious vocation, they have done me the honor not to interview me.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not intend to interrupt the Senator from Indiana in the argument upon the weight of testimony, but I was rather startled to hear the Senator from Texas declare that the failure on the part of the committee to pursue the inquiry and ascertain from whence this money came was an evidence that there was no such money, when I had heard but a few days ago the statements of two members of his own committee, both distinguished men and lawyers, that they were convinced there was in that legislature a corrupt fund to be used for forwarding or obstructing legislation. It seemed to me the evidence which established the existence of the money which is alleged to have been paid to Link and Beckemeyer and to White, if not to Holstlaw, was exactly the same evidence, and quite as persuasive, as that which established the existence of any corrupt fund whatsoever.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Texas this question: Does the Senator from Texas believe that any of these men got any money from Browne, Wilson, or Broderick?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I would dislike very much to be compelled to return a verdict or to render a judgment upon the testimony of Holstlaw, or Link, or Beckemeyer, or White. I would be compelled to guess at whether they were telling the truth or not. I am very free to say to the Senator from Indiana, and that can be taken as my reply to all other Senators, that as between Holstlaw, and Link, and Beckemeyer, and White, who swore that they did perjure themselves and accept bribes, and Wilson, and Broderick, and Browne, who swore that they did not give bribes, I would believe the three latter as against the four former.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. And I do not believe that those men paid the others one cent. Let me say this to the Senator from Indiana, who wants, of course, the whole circumstance in the RECORD. They indicted Browne for bribing White——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am coming to that. I shall not leave that out.

Mr. BAILEY. And they tried him, and 11 to 1 voted for his acquittal. They tried him again, and the whole 12 of the jurymen voted for his acquittal. When the Senator comes to that point, there is another circumstance concerning that trial which I am sure he will not omit to state, and that is the circumstance about indicting the witnesses and the attorneys.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I asked the Senator from Texas whether he believed that Holstlaw, or Beckemeyer, or Link, or White got any money from Browne, or Wilson, or Broderick, and in the course of his answer, toward its conclusion, I think I quote him correctly when I say as between Beckemeyer, Link, and White, who swore they accepted bribes, and Browne and Wilson and Broderick, who swore they did not give bribes, he would believe the latter.

Mr. BAILEY. And I added that I did not believe the bribes were paid.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That makes it still stronger. So the Senator does not believe it. Now, Mr. President, the Senator is right as far as he goes. If the only thing were the bare statement of four or 10 self-confessed bribe takers as against three or five bribe givers, and nothing but their denial, then, of course, we would rather believe the man who says that he never gave a bribe than the man who says he accepted one, if that were all.

[At this point Mr. BEVERIDGE was interrupted by Mr. GALLINGER, and he yielded the floor for the day.]

Thursday, February 23, 1911.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, in a moment I shall ask the Senate to return to the record of testimony given under oath, the record of testimony not only given under oath but searched as by fire with fierce cross-examination.

"NOTHING EXTENUATE NOR SET DOWN AUGHT IN MALICE."

I want to say at the outset of these remarks that in my examination or the testimony I shall "nothing extenuate nor set down aught in malice." I shall nothing extenuate because I ought not to do so, and I will set down naught in malice because I have no malice.

Indeed, Mr. President and Senators, at the beginning of what I have to say I shall be obliged, as I proceed, if any Senator will interrupt and correct me in case I should make any misstatement of the testimony or fail to make a statement full and correct. For I would far rather have Senators interrupt me constantly in order that we may get the truth before us than I would risk any possibility of a misstatement of this testimony.

Indeed, Mr. President, I go further and I say that I would far rather find things in this testimony favorable to the validity of this election than I would to find things in this testimony which impeach the validity of the election; for I call the attention of Senators again to the fact that the issue we are determining is the validity of an election, and it is not an agreeable thing as a man or as a citizen to be confronted with facts showing that an election is invalid—an election upon which the very life of our Government and institutions depends.

But before I return to the record of the testimony and ask the Senate to go with me, I wish to make one or two remarks concerning the address to which we listened yesterday.

OTHERS HAVE HAD BURDENS—AND SAID NOTHING.

I listened to the remarks of the sitting Member with a peculiar personal sympathy. His pathetic account of his rise from an humble estate to this high place here touched me in a personal way, and I know it touched other Senators; for there are many Senators here who have struggled from an even earlier age, bearing even heavier burdens than the sitting Member; but none of them ever asked anything of the world on account of that.

The sitting Member's recital of his popularity was interesting, and indeed, Mr. President, in all fairness, it must be said that it gives some explanation of his political strength. But it was not relevant to the issue before us, which is the validity of an election challenged on the ground of bribery. It was a novel and an undoubtedly truthful account of peculiar popular strength; but it did not touch the issue we are to determine here.

The sitting Member's most affecting account of his newspaper experience, out of which grew his intimacy and lifelong friendship with "Hinky Dink," was as engaging, Mr. President, as a page from Hugo; but it was not relevant to the issue, because the vote of Griffin, which the sitting Member says Hinky Dink delivered, is not one of the votes questioned in this testimony.

So, while I with all others was deeply affected by that tearful recital, I could not determine how it concerned this case, except that unconsciously the sitting Member did in that recital throw light on a certain transaction to which I shall call the attention of Senators when we reach it.

The same thing was true, Mr. President, of the sitting Member's dramatic, well told account of his aid to one Galligan when Galligan's wife was sick and Galligan himself in dire straits. That is one of those "touches of nature which make the whole world kin;" but as keenly as every man with human sympathies throbbing in his breast might have responded to that, all must admit that it was in no wise relevant to the issue before us.

It had nothing to do with the alleged bribery of Beckemeyer or White or Holstlaw or Link by Browne and Wilson and Broderick. It was wholly immaterial, because it affected only Galligan's vote, and Galligan's vote is not in question.

So, Mr. President, while the whole life-story revealed by these incidents aroused my sympathy as a man and interested me as a student of human nature, it did not appeal to my judgment as a Member of this court. It did not touch the issue. If courts were to try cases on sympathy, instead of on justice, there would be no such thing as courts or law.

SITTING MEMBER DID NOT TESTIFY BEFORE SUBCOMMITTEE—WHY?

But, Mr. President, as I listened with much approval to many of these incidents, I could not help wondering why the sitting Member did not lay them in full before the subcommittee of the Senate, appointed and empowered to gather all this information, if he or his counsel thought any one of them was pertinent or relevant to the question which we must determine. It is not for me to suggest to the sitting Member that that should have been his true course; it is for him to take what course he and his counsel think best, and it is for us——

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me just for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. BURROWS. There are many of the committees in session, and I wish to say that, so far as the Committee on Finance is concerned, we are engaged in hearing gentlemen from different parts of the country in relation to the reciprocity matter, which will account for the absence of members of that committee.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is quite satisfactory, Mr. President. Of course, I suppose the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], who appears to have the keeping of the consciences of Senators in his possession, was notice that it is perfectly useless to lay any testimony or any law before the Senate, because the Senator from New Hampshire says that the votes are already determined.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, I shall pursue the duty which lies before me and place upon the records of this body the facts in this case—which I ask any Senator to correct immediately, while I am on the floor, if I misstate anything—and the law in this case so that every Senator when he comes to vote may have the facts and the law directed to the specific issue before him.

And thus it is, Mr. President, that as to every incident of the address of the sitting Member yesterday which, while they deeply touched us all, and me as much as anyone as a man, none of them could affect any of us as judges trying, as I said the other day, the greatest issue that can arise under free institutions, whose very life depends upon the freedom and purity of elections, institutions to found which so much blood has been shed and so many sacrifices made.

MODERN POLITICAL MANIPULATION.

Mr. President, to pass these incidents, which made up the body of the sitting Member's remarks, what else was suggested? He said that every Republican member from his district voted for Hopkins; that he himself supported Shurtleff; that thereafter he urged Gov. Deneen to become a candidate. Now, all of this, Mr. President, was interesting political history.

But how did it touch the question whether Holstlaw, Beckemeyer, White, Luke, and Link, and the others received money, to use the language of the majority report, "as the consideration for their votes," from Browne and Wilson and Broderick? Therefore, of course, I shall pay no more attention to that recital of the political manipulations described in support of these various men. I do not blame the sitting Member for that. Indeed, I suppose that it was perfectly permissible political strategy in the manipulation of well-known forces in the manner in which Senators of the United States are elected so often at the present time.

I am not skilled in practical politics; and yet I can see that it might have been the part of wisdom for a wise political manager who wanted finally to arrive at a definite end to give votes to Hopkins when Hopkins could not be elected, because that would tend to mollify Hopkins's adherents in the future; or to support Shurtleff, who had no opportunity of election, because that would tend to bind Shurtleff still closer to his already bosom friend.

But when it comes to Gov. Deneen, we have something on the record. For Browne, this twentieth-century "Abraham Lincoln," this "marvelous intellect," testifies that they were willing to elect Deneen in order to "get rid of him"—to "eliminate him," as Mr. Browne swears. Mr. President, if it were pertinent at all to mention the fact that the sitting Member and others were willing to support Gov. Deneen, it becomes necessary for us to recur to the record and find out that "marvelous intellect" Browne, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] describes him, testifies that they "might be willing to do that in order to get rid of Gov. Deneen."

I know nothing of Illinois politics, although I was brought up in that State; but I wonder what they wanted "to get rid of" Gov. Deneen for? But, Mr. President, it is apparent that that part of the sitting Member's well-arranged remarks does not touch the question involved in this case, and I think all Senators on both sides will agree that his engaging analysis of the modern term "bellwether" in politics, which so amused and interested us, does not touch the question here.

THE "BELLWETHER."

It was a valuable contribution to the lexicography of political terms, although I do not think any of us will quite agree with the definition of our duty as described by the sitting Member in the following of "bellwethers." There was one mistake of fact that he made. He attributed its origination to the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. Well, a good deal has been said about the Senator from New York. He needs no defense in this case; and if he did, there is not a man in the Senate of the United States so capable of that defense as the Senator from New York himself.

But I must call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we can not accord to the Senator from New York the honor of originating the term "bellwether" and applying it to Manny Abrahams. The fame of the Senator from New York must rest on other foundations. No! "Bellwether" belongs to Mr. Browne, this "marvelous intellect," as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] calls him. Browne, this new Abraham Lincoln, as the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], by inference describes him; Browne who swears that Manny Abrahams was the "bellwether" of his faction, stood at the head of the roll call, and that when any of his faction wanted to know how Browne thought they should vote they listened to find out how Manny Abrahams voted, and then, as Browne says, followed their "bellwether." In ascribing the paternity of the term "bellwether" to the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], the sitting Member went far afield. In his passion of oratory he was influenced by "the light that led astray."

I was glad the sitting Member made the reference, because that is pertinent to our duties as Senators. We all understand the practice which we loosely follow—nearly all of us—where on strictly party questions well understood, when we come from busy occupation in the committee room, we vote with our party. But I never considered that my duty as a Senator, or my oath of office, required me to vote on grave questions affecting the welfare of millions of people as some other man voted, without any knowledge of my own, or without any convictions derived from that knowledge. But we are to have a new gospel of legislative procedure, it appears—the gospel of the "bellwether," as proclaimed by the sitting Member.

But whatever we may think of "bellwethers," we must agree that that passage, or passages, like the "Hinky Dink" incident and the "Manny" Abrahams description and the relief to Galligan when his wife was sick—a thing which many a man in this Chamber and thousands of private citizens have done time and again, a praiseworthy thing, a thing which I admired and approved on the part of the sitting Member—still it had nothing to do with the case.

The sitting Member's explanation did afford a reason, Mr. President, as to why some Members, and especially a few Democrats, voted for him. But has that anything to do with the issue we are sworn to try and determine? Has it anything to do with votes secured by bribery?

FRAUDULENT TITLE TO ONE TRACT OF LAND NOT EXPLAINED BY GOOD TITLE TO OTHER TRACTS OF LAND.

Suppose, Mr. President and Senators, that a man owned several tracts of land. His title to one of those tracts of land was questioned in a lawsuit on the ground that he had acquired it through the fraud of an agent. Would any court permit him to plead as a defense to that alleged fraudulent title that he had acquired the other pieces of land legitimately and without fraud? If testimony were offered in such a lawsuit showing that the title to the piece of land in question was acquired by fraud, would any court, to offset that, permit testimony that he had acquired other tracts of land legitimately?

That, Mr. President, is what the sitting Member's explanations amount to upon the issue before us. If Senators say that perhaps they fairly do raise a presumption of good title to the piece of land in question, every lawyer would answer you that you would be put out of court in a minute on such a plea.

But this election is a much more important thing than any lawsuit; it affects no mere title to a piece of land. It does affect, as I showed the other day by undisputed historical examples, the life of this Nation. I am willing myself to take any possible favorable view, for I am discharging a duty painful to me—to all—but which no man any more dare shirk than he would refuse to defend the flag if it was fired upon. The common law regarded bribery as treason. Senators seem to think it as light a matter as a common lawsuit.

And, Mr. President, was the other section of the sitting Member's appeal any more pertinent? It was artfully done, his appeal to our Democratic and "standpat" Republican colleagues. He plainly states that he never—no, never—will abuse the one or desert the other. I think he told the truth about that. He said he had never abused the Democrats. I liked that. It showed his good sense. I have done some campaigning in the last 25 years, and, thank God, I long since have gotten beyond the point of making a partisan speech.

Born in Ohio during our awful Civil War, I was brought up in southern central Illinois while the fury of that great conflict was still upon us. At that time party passions flamed. That time has passed. Nearly everybody among our ninety millions has risen far above that. We do not denounce anybody any more because he belongs to some party to which we do not belong. We all know perfectly well that all of us, Democrats and Republicans, are alike Americans, equally anxious for the country's true welfare and equally willing, if necessary, to fight in its defense.

While the sitting Member's account of his refusal to abuse Democrats meets the approval of every thoughtful man, what has it to do with this case? Did any counselor of his imagine that votes in this tribunal were going to be affected by such an appeal as that?

It simply had nothing to do with the case. A good many years ago the gifted writer of a comic opera—a comic opera which you will all remember—satirized the practice of a certain type of lawyers who always are trying to win a case in which they have no relevant testimony by introducing something entirely irrelevant. The song became popular. It was sung by all the people in derision of that type of legal mind—

> The flowers that bloom in the spring, tra la,
> Have nothing to do with the case.

That refrain will become popular once again, I think. It applies to every sentence of the sitting Member's heart-melting address.

Mr. President, I shall pay no more attention to any feature of that engaging and tear-producing speech, because while it aroused our sympathy, it did not even attempt to influence our judgment by presenting any fact relevant to the question before us. And so, Mr. President, I will ask the Senate to return to the record of the testimony given under oath.

[At this point Mr. BEVERIDGE yielded for the presentation of the unfinished business.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But, Mr. President, in examining the record of sworn testimony I shall stick to the issue. That issue is not the personal habits, fortunes, feelings, or career of any man; it is the validity of an election. If it were a mere matter of sympathy, I challenge anybody to have more sympathy for any human being who deserves it than I have.

But if this testimony shows that an election to the most exalted place in human government has been vitiated by bribery and corruption, then, Mr. President, to paraphrase a sentiment uttered the other day by a distinguished Senator, so help me God, I would not vote to sustain that election if it was that of my own brother.

It is a question of the welfare of a people, not a matter for sentiment, on the one hand, or those other things of which rumor is rife and the press is full, on the other hand. We have a duty to discharge. It will not pass away the day we vote. This record will go down through generations, and we must hand the explanation of our votes on this solemn business down to our children and our children's children.

I showed how this body of death almost dragged England to its tomb, as it did drag even a greater power than England to its tomb. I showed how the English people have saved themselves by administering their laws in the ancient English spirit, which did not hesitate at executing on the block a lord chief justice of the Crown for this offense. I read the decision of the English court avoiding elections for causes which some Senators here in these complacent days would think amusing.

But what has it done? It has saved Great Britain. It has made her Parliament almost the purest legislative body in the world. It has opened the doors of that great Empire's legislature to those humane reforms demanded by the welfare of her struggling millions and resisted by all the money and power of hereditary privilege or special interests.

A Senator said to me the other night, "What do I care about the English law? What do I care about the English method of dealing with bribery? England is an effete monarchy." Well, Mr. President, the Senator was mistaken. England is not effete. But England would have been effete if she had dealt with this viper within her bosom as we are asked to deal with it in this case.

IS IT A MATTER OF NO CONSEQUENCE THAT ELECTIONS SHALL BE PURE?

I again present this other aspect of the case because it searches out our remotest future. I see before me a veteran of our great civil conflict [Mr. WARNER]. What do you say? Is it a matter of no consequence that elections shall be pure in that Republic you risked your life to save?

Mr. President, I cited some historical examples, but there is one I overlooked. I wondered how they managed these things in France. France at least is not an "effete monarchy." France is a pretty up-to-date Republic. Curiously enough, as some Senators here must think, the French electorate guard their right of suffrage most jealously.

They do not think their polls a market place. Perhaps it is because they have established the Republic so recently, but I can find but one case of bribery in the French Republic since it was established. I want to read to Senators who intend to "pass this matter up," as one colleague urged me to do, as to how France treated this. It was the celebrated Wilson case. When I mention it I think you will all recall it.

Mr. Wilson undertook to get a seat in the French Chamber of Deputies. Money was spent and banquets given in Wilson's behalf. He won. The election was challenged as being corrupt. It came to the Chamber of Deputies to decide. How did they decide it? An investigation was urged. Was it granted? It was not. The French Chamber of Deputies refused it, and instead declared that the dignity of the chamber and the safety of the Republic demanded a vacation of the seat. That is how they dealt with it. That is the Huguenot spirit, just as the Puritan spirit is manifesting itself in England again. Senators, has the Huguenot and the Puritan spirit deserted us? God forbid!

You arrange votes on bills, yes; but shall it be said that we arrange votes upon the validity of an election upon any other ground than our oath and our conscience? I do not believe it can be said of any of us; yet a fearless American press of every political complexion is full of intimations to the contrary.

Here is what occurred in the Wilson case. The committee who considered the matter recommended that a parliamentary investigation be made and the evidence sifted. The House, after some debate, in which the candidate participated, declined to do this by a vote of 290 to 129.

Now listen.

But by a vote of 465 to 2 the French Chamber of Deputies declared the Wilson election invalid. Yet that corrupt French election was "a trifle light as air" compared with the election which this record discloses.

> The proponents for the annulment of the election took the ground that the evidence of general corruption was so indisputable that respect for the dignity of the House and regard for the public morals demanded this action. (Journal Officiel, Feb. 26, 1894.)

No wonder the monarchists of France do not make any progress when they come face to face with as pure and fearless an electorate as that. Think of it, the seat vacated by a vote of 465 to 2 on the ground of the dignity of the chamber and in the interest of public morals.

But I suppose, if I were to advocate such an action in this case upon the ground of "public morals" or "the dignity" of the Senate, I should be told that I was acting outside of the law. There are some views of the law which appear not to take into account "public morals," and yet public morals is the rock upon which this Government rests.

HOLSTLAW AND "FORGERY" ONCE MORE.

When I concluded the other day, Mr. President, I had shown that Holstlaw, the State senator, had gotten $2,500 from Broderick, State senator, in pursuance of a talk the two had before the election; that he deposited this money in bank the same day in bills of the same denominations in which he swore he got it. I showed—and it excited several Senators here who are my colleagues on the committee to quick and instant combat—that Broderick, the senator saloon keeper of Chicago, whom Holstlaw charged with paying this money, refused to answer the only questions that were asked him upon which he could be contradicted upon the ground that if he answered them he would incriminate himself, although at the same time he knew, or his counsel ought to have known, and the subcommittee ought to have known, that, in any testimony he gave, he was absolutely protected by the statutes of the United States. Why did he do it? I mention it at this time, so that I will point out to you the true reason when I come to examine the testimony of another witness.

Mr. President, the tracing of this $2,500 of bribe money into the State Bank of Chicago was seen by the defenders of this title to be so fatal that it must be disposed of. Somehow or other they must get rid of that $2,500. It appears to have been conceded that if they admitted or did not do away with the fact that $2,500 had been paid by Holstlaw into the bank the same day it was received it was a fatal circumstance. So, Mr. President, first of all they disposed of it by saying that Holstlaw was a liar; that was all. But then they were confronted by the testimony of Jarvis O. Newton, chief clerk of the bank, who swore that he himself received this money in bills of large denominations from Holstlaw personally.

I say it appeared to be necessary to destroy the credibility of the testimony of that $2,500 deposit by Holstlaw; I am going to pass a paper around among the Senators in a minute and subject the matter to a practical test. So the first device to accomplish that was the bald assertion that Holstlaw was merely a liar. That is all. That seemed to be the subcommittee's theory.

Then, of course, if that was true, Newton, the cashier of the bank, a disinterested party, was a liar, too. But then, Mr. President, the bank's deposit slip was produced and has, unfortunately, been lost, but I guess everybody concedes that this [exhibiting] is a photograph of it. So that was presented.

Then, Mr. President, what occurred? This is worthy of the attention of every Senator on the floor and of the whole American people. If the deposit of $2,500 in that bank on the very day that Holstlaw swore he got it was to be disposed of, the bank's deposit slip must be disposed of, too. So we heard it here announced that it was a "forgery." That is a grave charge to make against any man and against a reputable financial institution. It was said that it was a "forgery" because an attorney, whose care we can all have our opinion of, had actually said, in a hasty reply brief, that the name of Holstlaw was written in Holstlaw's handwriting.

Well, instantly that was met by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] producing the affidavit of the chief clerk of the bank, Jarvis O. Newton, to the effect that he had actually received this money, that he had attached the deposit slip, and that he himself had made out the deposit slip. When the defenders of this title were confronted by that, the affidavit of the chief clerk of the bank was disposed of by the statement, "Well, those who will forge one instrument will commit forgery to explain it." Does anybody believe that? Does the Senator from New York, who is a member of the subcommittee, believe that [exhibiting] is a "forgery?"

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, since I asked him a question.

Mr. DEPEW. I am not a member of the subcommittee, but——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I mean of the committee.

Mr. DEPEW. But I am a member of the committee.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is that the way the Senator answers the question? I asked the Senator—he does not need to answer unless he wants to—whether he believes this is a forgery?

Mr. DEPEW. I have not made up my mind whether it is a forgery or not; but I have read the testimony, and it has not taken me as long to digest it as it has the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am very much obliged to the Senator from New York for making that statement, because that compels me do a thing that I had wanted not to do, yet ought to do. I am going to ask the Senator from New York a question. He, like myself, is a member of this committee who was not on the subcommittee; he, like myself, one evening—and we will see about the "hurdle race" now, since this question has been raised, and I call on you all to witness that I did not raise it—was notified that the committee would meet the next morning, Saturday, at 10 o'clock.

RECORD OF THE TESTIMONY NOT READ BY COMMITTEE BEFORE THEY MADE THE "REPORT" NOW BEFORE THE SENATE.

We met next morning, Saturday, at 10 o'clock. This volume of testimony [indicating], which I have nearly worn out, was on the table before us fresh from the printer. I never had seen it before. I understood that it had been freshly delivered. Had the Senator from New York ever seen that volume before that morning?

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, there had been sent to me at my office in New York volume after volume of this testimony.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of the testimony? Printed?

Mr. DEPEW. Printed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Where did you get it?

Mr. DEPEW. I understood it came from the prosecution.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is it not true that what the Senator received were briefs of counsel and not this record?

Mr. DEPEW. No; it was testimony and briefs of counsel, both.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Was it not an abstract of testimony and the briefs of counsel—abstracts of testimony made by counsel? Was this printed official record of the testimony which I hold in my hand ever seen before that morning that we met in committee?

Mr. DEPEW. After that there came to me, as I say, briefs of counsel.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And the abstract——

Mr. DEPEW. And the abstract of testimony.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Made by counsel?

Mr. DEPEW. Made by counsel for the purpose of demonstrating that the sitting Member was not entitled to his seat. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.] I read them all with the greatest care.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And made up your mind?

Mr. DEPEW. Yes; after reading them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. On the abstract of counsel? Now, the Senator is an eminent lawyer——

Mr. DEPEW. No; after——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have been one myself, and there are other lawyers here, so I ask this Senate and ask the country what it would think of a judge who would decide a case, not upon the official record of the testimony, but upon the brief and abstract of testimony made by counsel? [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Applause is not permitted in the galleries.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think we will have an audience pretty soon.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I yield.

Mr. DEPEW. I am glad that the Senator from Indiana wants an audience.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, I do not appear to lack for an audience as much as the Senator might wish me to lack one.

Mr. DEPEW. Evidently he does not want a discriminating one.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, so long as I have the Senator here, after his statement about having decided this case on the briefs and without reading the record, I do not need any more discrimination than that. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will announce that if the applause is repeated the Chair will order the Sergeant at Arms to clear the galleries.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the Chair will do so, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rules of the Senate must be observed.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana is singularly unfair in not addressing himself to the case but to the galleries, which is his usual custom.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, if that were my custom, which it has not been, I would have had instruction in the example always given by the Senator from New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. DEPEW. The Senator does not state correctly, but most unfairly——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, put me right, then.

Mr. DEPEW. What happened in committee. It is not the usual thing to state what happens in committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not proper.

Mr. DEPEW. And it is not regarded as proper, but, notwithstanding, that does not appeal to the Senator from Indiana. The Senator from Indiana says I made up my mind. He does not know how I made up my mind, except that I joined with the general committee. He says that I made up my mind on the briefs of counsel.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator said it.

Mr. DEPEW. Who were the counsel? They were the counsel against LORIMER, not for him.

THE RECORD OF THE TESTIMONY, NOT BRIEFS OF COUNSEL, THE MATERIAL FOR OUR DECISIONS.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know and I do not care who the counsel were. I say it is the duty of the Senator, as a member of the committee, and of every Member of this Senate, to make up his mind on the testimony and not on the brief of any counsel. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. DEPEW. Wait a moment. I received these documents, in which were the briefs of counsel against LORIMER, in which they gave hundreds of pages of testimony to sustain their case; I heard not one word for LORIMER or on LORIMER's side, but all of it was for the purpose of sustaining the position that the Senator from Indiana now has been seven hours in trying to prove. When I came to the committee meeting we had there the report of the subcommittee. The subcommittee was composed of as able men as there are in this body—four Republicans and three Democrats. That committee had spent, I think, four months listening to the testimony, and not only listening to the testimony, but doing that which every lawyer knows is so important, watching the witnesses who were giving the testimony and seeing what was the value of the testimony which they gave. When those seven gentlemen, some of them eminent lawyers who had served with great distinction on the bench, had given four months to this question and then presented to the committee their conclusion——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator agreed without reading the record.

Mr. DEPEW. With what I had already heard—the whole case on the other side—and with what I had already read of much of the case on this side, I was with the committee, and am still, unless the Senator in the next six hours in which he speaks can change my mind.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I shall speak as many hours as it is necessary to put this testimony upon the records of the Senate.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Just in a moment. Now, the Senator has made another statement which it will be necessary for me to refer to later on. He affords not only the excuse and provocation but the justification for what I later on shall lay before the Senate.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator will pardon me for just a moment more, I shall not go into what did occur in that committee that morning, unless the Senator from New York gives his personal consent, except to say this, Mr. President, that the first time I ever saw this testimony it was lying on the table before us when we met that morning, and a motion was made to make an immediate report, before anybody could have read a page of the official testimony.

I asked, as will be shown by the records of the Senate, that the report be not made until after the holidays, because I had not read the testimony. I wanted to read the testimony. I have spent a good many years in the practice of the law, and I would consider myself dishonorable to a client if I dared to go into court and try his case upon the brief of an opposing counsel, without examination of the official record of sworn witnesses.

If that is true, what shall be said of those who propose to pass upon this case, infinitely greater than any private suit in court, involving the life of our institutions, and state that they will decide it upon the briefs of counsel for the prosecution? Every Senator who has read anything concerning election cases knows that this is not a criminal-court room.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. This is the greatest forum on earth—not trying a case, but investigating and determining the validity of an election. Now, I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

Mr. DEPEW. I simply want to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana that he again misstates the case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana has not yielded to the Senator from New York, but has yielded to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I simply rose to correct a possible inference that might be drawn from the statement of the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. I was unfortunate enough to be a member of the subcommittee that heard this testimony. The committee did not spend four months in hearing the testimony, or anything like four months. The committee spent some two or three weeks very laboriously, and I have no doubt very conscientiously, trying to arrive at a conclusion and to get the true facts in respect to the matter. The Senator's statement that the subcommittee made the report is correct only in one respect. The other members of the subcommittee did report in favor of the validity of the title of Mr. LORIMER to his seat. As a member of that subcommittee, I disagreed with the other members of the subcommittee. I so stated before the subcommittee and subsequently filed that statement with the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Would the Senator from Tennessee mind stating how it happened that the——

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That the Senator's views did not happen to be filed at the same time that the majority views were filed?

Mr. FRAZIER. O Mr. President, that is a matter that occurred in executive session of the committee, and I do not care to state it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I withdraw the question. An answer to that question would be very interesting, though.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say this, Mr. President—and the Senate will pardon me, because it has already been made a part of the RECORD by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], the chairman of the committee—that in view of the fact that part of it is in the RECORD, I thought then and I think now it would be entirely ethical, if the Senator sees fit, to state the other part of that transaction.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. DEPEW. The only reason I violated all the traditions of the Senate in revealing what did take place in committee was because the Senator from Indiana had revealed just enough of it to put me in a false position.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will reveal the rest of it if the Senator says so.

Mr. DEPEW. Otherwise I never should have mentioned it. In stating that the committee had given three or four months to this matter, I meant not only in the taking of testimony but the time which, after the testimony was taken, the subcommittee had devoted most conscientiously and most laboriously to the preparation of their report. So far as the position of the Senator from Tennessee is concerned, which I highly respect and which put me in grave doubt, it was fully stated before the committee what it was, and it did not differ from the report which he subsequently made.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, the Senator has stated——

Mr. DEPEW. Just one word more.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Two words, if you like.

Mr. DEPEW. Before we finally voted upon that question, I had an opportunity of examining that report, which was sufficient, with what I already knew, to make up my mind.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, two things, then. The Senator says he had an opportunity to examine this report. It was laid on our committee table on a Saturday at 10 o'clock. We adjourned and came into the Senate. The committee met at 10 o'clock again on the following Tuesday. There were two days and a half, including Sunday—only half of a working day—in which the Senator says he examined this record. I worked as hard as I could, and it took me two weeks; and there are Senators here—and they are practiced lawyers, too—who have told me that it took them an even longer time; but the Senator could dispose of it in two and one-half days, in which there was only one half working day.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, just a word.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Two words.

Mr. DEPEW. Just one word. I do not know how long it takes the Senator to read a volume like that——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There it is [exhibiting]. Anybody can look at it for himself. It has 748 closely printed pages.

Mr. DEPEW. And to absorb its contents when he already knows most of it, when he has heard arguments by counsel, and has heard the report of the committee, each member of which had fully investigated it, and the discussion of members of the committee upon it, lasting for a long time. All my life I have been compelled to make speeches on short notice, and I presume the Senator has had a similar experience.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. You are demonstrating your ability now.

Mr. DEPEW. This is on no notice at all.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. None at all; that is even better.

Mr. DEPEW. Some of those speeches required a vast amount of reading. I have, in making an oration of that kind on short notice, when at active practice at the bar and when the time of my working day was fully occupied, carried the reading into the night and all night long, for, happily, God endowed me with extraordinary physical health.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Did you do it this time?

Mr. DEPEW. And I have carried it through Sunday——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Did you do it this time?

Mr. DEPEW. And a dozen times in my life I have between Friday and Tuesday gone through two or three volumes like that, and got the substance of them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, the Senator's interesting account of what his previous habits were is engaging, but I ask the Senator, since he has mentioned it, did he do it in this case?

Mr. DEPEW. I hope——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Did the Senator read the record of testimony Saturday all night and all Sunday and Sunday night, or was the Senator dining out that night?

Mr. DEPEW. I was not; but I hope when the Senator reaches my period of life, which is pretty nearly double his, he will have the same vigor which I now possess.

THE COMMITTEE'S REPORT CHANGED.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I sincerely trust I shall have the same vigor, Mr. President; and, if I may be permitted to say so, when a grave question of this kind is before me, more diligence in reading the testimony.

Mr. President, the Senator—and the RECORD will show that he has been the cause of this discussion about it—has mentioned another matter which compels me to ask him a further question. I had made up my mind not to do it, but he has referred to the matter again. He says after the committee had spent four months—which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER], a member of the subcommittee, denies—in the taking of testimony—and I am quoting the Senator's words—"and had laboriously prepared their report," and it was laid before us that Saturday morning, that he did not feel it necessary to go very thoroughly into the testimony.

Now, I ask the Senator this question: The Senator had great respect for the report laid before us that morning. Very well; tell the Senate, then, if the report laid before the full committee by the subcommittee that Saturday morning was the report that finally was laid before the Senate the following Wednesday or another report?

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, a great many things have happened since the meeting of that committee.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Only two days happened——

Mr. DEPEW. Hold on a moment. Since the meeting of that committee a great many things have happened. I am a member of six committees. I have been performing my work on those committees and in the Senate, and I confess—I do not know whether it is age or not—that my memory is not up, as the Senator's seems to be, on every detail that took place in the executive meeting of that committee. I ask him to call other witnesses. There were others there.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator himself has brought this up three times.

Mr. DEPEW. I did not bring it up.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have withheld my hand in this matter. I now ask the Senator——

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Whether he thinks it is a detail that the report he signed himself, and that is now before us as the report of the majority, is the same report or anything like the same report which was laid before us when we first met two days before the present report, which the Senator has eulogized so highly, was made?

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I am going to say now what I have never said before in all my controversial life, and that is, I did not bring this matter up. The Senator brought it up in an effort to reveal the secrets of the executive session of the committee.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The RECORD will show, Mr. President. Now, so far as secrets are concerned, I understand that a committee is the servant of the Senate and not the master of the Senate; that we are at work upon the public business, and that when anything vital occurs in that committee—and something appears to have occurred that was vital—it becomes the duty of Senators to refer to it. I should not have done so, however—and the RECORD will bear me out—if the Senator had not furnished the occasion of it. Now I will pass that for a moment.

"ELEVEN MEN IN BUCKRAM."

So, Mr. President, we have Holstlaw. We have the perfectly innocent chief clerk of the bank. We have the bank's deposit slip. We have Gov. Deneen, and it was even said that some person had informed a Senator that a newspaper man had copied this, and all this grows out of the effort to dispose of that fatal $2,500—several people guilty of forgery and perjury and all kinds of offenses who could have had no motive for doing so—all this in order to show that this was a forgery. As Hal said to Falstaff—

O monstrous! Eleven buckram men grown out of two.

Now, then, it was said the books of the bank are the best evidence. The books of the bank! Why is it that it has only recently been felt necessary to overthrow the deposit of $2,500 in this bank on the books of the bank?

Mr. President, I took pains myself to get the affidavit of Jarvis O. Newton, the chief clerk of that bank, that the books show that the entry was made in the regular course of business, in the regular order. Does that satisfy the Senator? Well, it was said that Jarvis Newton's own signature shows that he did not sign it, and I am going to pass this around among Senators and I ask you to examine the signature of Jarvis O. Newton to this legal document and then look at the name "Holstlaw Bank, Iuka, Ill."

I do not even ask you to remember that a signature to a legal document is always formal and when made in the course of business runs more swiftly. I ask you to examine the mark. Look particularly at the "t," which is very peculiar, crossed with the cross not touching the upright. That is a letter common to both names. Look at the letter "w," common to both names. Look at the letter "s," common to both names.

Pass it around; please do not lose it; and return it to me, and say if you think it is a forgery.

Now, Mr. President, another thing—a thing upon which a more absurd emphasis has been laid than anything I have encountered in many years of very active practice in actual combat in the courts—real practice of the law before courts and juries; not pseudo practice in Senate debates. So I am not discussing pseudo law. It is said that the "forgery" is suggested because the name Holstlaw is spelled wrong. I am going to put everybody here to a practical test; I will put the Senator from New York to a practical test. Will the Senator be kind enough to take his pencil and spell properly the name "Holstlaw?"

Mr. DEPEW. There are some things I can do; but I can not do that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No. And yet when Holstlaw appeared at the window of this bank and said to the teller, "Please deposit $2,500 to the credit of the Holstlaw Bank," and the clerk, Mr. Newton, writes it out and spells it—I do not myself now know whether it is "Holtslaw" or "Holstlaw"—and got the "l" before the "s." Great heavens, Mr. President, here is evidence of the deepest "conspiracy" to ruin a good man!

And yet the Senator from New York, who has told us of his deep familiarity, says he can not do it. Of course he can not. I have gone over it pretty well myself. Can you offhand [addressing Mr. LA FOLLETTE]? Try it. I hope that disposes of that.

Mr. President, we have disposed of Holstlaw. I am merely reviewing what I said the other day about Holstlaw. We are having a kind of practical demonstration here. That is more valuable than thunderous denunciation. It may not be so pleasing to the ear, but it is more valuable to our judgment.

Let us now take up Beckemeyer again. I went over that the other day. Beckemeyer swore he got the money. It was found in his possession. He deposited it in a bank away from his own home, where he had to be identified. And the subcommittee actually refused to let Mr. Gray, who identified Mr. Beckemeyer at the bank, testify—and I would like the attention of Senators to this—as to Beckemeyer's statement as to where he got the money.

THAT HUNDRED-DOLLAR BILL.

A little country lawyer carrying around a $100 bill and depositing it with other big bills in a bank away from his own home. The subcommittee refused to let that statement go in. I have never been able to comprehend on what ground; for I challenge anybody to find a case or an authority in the textbooks which does not say that "declarations against interest" are admissible.

But it was not admitted. However, we do not need it. Beckemeyer's deposit in the Belle Isle bank is not denied. The upholders of his election do not ask for the books of that bank. They do not ask for any deposit slips from that bank. What do you think about it? A man swears he got this money. A little later on he deposited that very money in bills of the denomination which he said he got it in—unusual bills—$100 bills—in a bank away from home, where he had to be identified. Are you going to wash that out by tears of sympathy?

But, Mr. President, let us dispose of this "forgery" before we go further. I wish I had an expert in handwriting here. I have had the opportunity in the course of my practice to try one or two will cases where forgery was alleged, and one or two other cases where handwriting was involved.

The absolute similarity of certain letters that are common in those two documents—the deposit slip and Jarvis Newton's affidavit—would establish the forgery of the will or the validity of the will, as the case might be; and any court in Christendom could decide this case without the fact that there are the books, without the fact that there is the testimony of Newton, without the fact that there is Holstlaw's testimony, and without the fact that the subcommittee itself believed the money was deposited in the State Bank of Chicago. Does not the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] believe the money was deposited there?

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana further yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do. I am going to yield to everyone.

Mr. DEPEW. I have listened to the eloquent speech of the Senator from Indiana from the time he started, both the other day and to-day, with an open mind, and really I do not think he ought to make me an object lesson.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think that is fair. I apologize to the Senator. If in the eagerness of debate I see the engaging presence of the Senator before me, he invites those questions which he has shown such readiness and ability to answer. But I will not ask any more.

Personally I invite interruptions. I repeat, that if anybody thinks I am misstating this testimony or stating it unfairly, he will do me a personal favor to call my attention to it at the time I make it. I would far rather abandon my position in this case than to misstate testimony.

Now I come, Mr. President, to the crux of this case, and I ask to this the attention of every Senator here who thinks this title valid; and I want to be careful of the statement. I would like to have the attention of the Senator from Wyoming and of all Senators here who think this title valid. By looking at the last report of the committee—the one we have here now——

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield further to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. DEPEW. The Senator has questioned me several times in regard to these two signatures, whether they were written by the same man or whether one is a forgery. I should say it would require an effort of the imagination to say they were written by the same man.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. On any question that involves an effort of the imagination the Senator is a master. I am an humble plodder who deals merely with the facts. When I see the "t," "s," "w," and "o," and when I reflect that one is written in the flow of business and one is a signature to a legal document, when I back that up with the affidavit of a man who had no motive for committing perjury on the stand or swearing falsely to an affidavit, and when the entry appears on the books of the bank, then it is conclusive.

Mr. DEPEW. May I ask the Senator one question? He has asked me a great many.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. You may.

Mr. DEPEW. Do you think it is the rule of bank officers to write one kind of a hand when writing in the course of business and another when they are swearing to an affidavit?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will ask the Senator this: From your experience, is it not true that where you sign your name to a legal document you sign it more formally—your own name—than in writing in the swift rush of business another man's name?

That is not the question. We will indulge in reciprocity. I understand the Senator from New York is for reciprocity. [Laughter.]

I will ask the Senator this question, Does the Senator believe that Jarvis O. Newton committed perjury when he said he received this money as chief clerk of that bank? Let us get down to the point. If so, for what motive? The Senator refuses to answer. Very well. Let us pass that.

It is too absurd. It shows the desperation of audacity, or the audacity of desperation—this charge that the bank's deposit slip is a "forgery." I recall history when another great speaker, though in a nobler cause, resorted to audacity. Danton said, in the throes of the French Revolution, "Audace, encore audace, toujours audace, et la france est sauvée." (Audacity, again audacity, always audacity, and France is saved.) Is that the Senator's position? Accuse forgery and perjury and everything else in order to destroy this $2,500 deposit.

Now let us get down to Beckemeyer again. Beckemeyer got the money. He deposited the money. It was found in his possession. How does any Senator get away from his deposit in the bank, away from home, of bills of large denomination, a bank where he had to be identified?

"THE THIRD DEGREE."

Now, I come to the crux of this case so far as the attempt to break down these witnesses is concerned. I repeat that all who have read the majority report, everybody who has listened to the speeches, have heard these witnesses attacked for "perjuring themselves" when the confessed—Beckemeyer and all of them—attacked on the ground that they were put through a "third degree" at Chicago. Is not that true—badly treated by the officers of justice, so badly treated that they were made to committ perjury, enter into an evil "conspiracy" that involved the State attorney's office.

Let us see what Mr. Beckemeyer said about this "third degree," and it is so important that I am going to read it. Let us get it on the record. His first experience with the third degree begins at page 236 of the record. This begins his third degree. The next is on the next page:

Q. Before you were taken down before the grand jury of Cook County did you tell Mr. Wayman, Mr. Arnold, Mr. Marshall, or any other assistant or representative of the State attorney's office that you had never received any money or other thing of value for voting for Senator LORIMER, either before or after voting for him?—A. I don't know; I think I denied knowing anything about it; not the exact language you are using.

Q. I didn't ask you to use the exact language.—A. I denied it; yes, sir.

Q. Didn't you tell him or them that you never received any money or anything of value for voting for WILLIAM LORIMER for United States Senator?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Then were you taken before the grand jury that was then in session as a witness?—A. I want to get straight on being over there on that day, now. If I remember correctly, I never had talked with Mr. Wayman or Mr. Arnold about this matter at all before I appeared before the grand jury.

Q. I don't care whether the same day or not. The time I was talking about was before you went into the grand-jury room.

Q. Did you testify before the grand jury that you did not receive any money or anything of value for voting for Senator LORIMER?

If anybody thinks there is anything in these third-degree methods I should like to have their attention.

A. I never at no time denied before the grand jury not having received any money.

Q. Did you tell the grand jury that you were never promised any money before you voted for Senator LORIMER, and that you never understood that you were to get any money, and were not induced to vote for Senator LORIMER by any promise, agreement, or understanding? Did you testify to that before the grand jury?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Senator BURROWS. Will you state what was said upon that subject by you?—A. I think that about all that I said was that I received $1,000 that was supposed, as I understood, to be Lorimer money. I think that is about all. I was not before the grand jury 10 minutes.

Third degree now, mind you.

Q. Did you tell anything the first time about whether you got anything for voting for WILLIAM LORIMER, or were promised anything?—A. I did not; it was not discussed. * * *

* * * * * * *

Q. The second time you went was in the forenoon, was it not?—A. No, sir; in the afternoon.

Q. Were you taken out of the grand-jury room and put in the custody of an officer the first time you went there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the officer?

Now, I ask particular attention to this, because I am going to place before the Senate a new fact. I wish the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], who talks about these "minions of the law," was here.

Q. Who was the officer?—A. Well, immediately—I went to dinner with Officer Keeley; I went to dinner with him.

I wish to get the attention of Senators to this very important point. Remember, this was Officer Keeley. I hope Senators will fix that name in their minds. I shall give the Senate some startling information about Officer Keeley that demolishes this "third-degree" excuse even more than this testimony.

Q. Who put you in his custody?—A. Why, the foreman of the grand jury, as I understand it.

Page 243; still third degree now:

Then did you say, "I can't tell them anything about it, because I don't know anything about it. I never got any money from anyone. What is the matter? Is Wayman on the outs after LORIMER elected him?" Did that conversation take place between you and Officer Keeley?—A. Some of it took place; I don't think all of it did.

Q. What did not take place?—A. I don't just recall now the reading of the question, but some I don't think took place.

Q. Can you designate any particular part? I would like to have you listen to me. "I don't know what to tell those people. I never got a cent for voting for Senator LORIMER from anybody." Did you say that?—A. I think the last part of that I denied to Mr. Keeley that I ever got any money; I think that is true.

Q. Then did you add: "They want me to tell something that I don't know. If I don't tell them what they want they will indict me and get me into trouble for nothing."—A. I don't think I said that to Mr. Keeley at all.

Senator BURROWS. Do you remember whether you did or not?—A. I am satisfied that I did not.

This is a part of this awful "third degree" that we have heard about.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do, indeed.

Mr. FRAZIER. I call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to page 254——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was just coming to that.

Mr. FRAZIER. Of the record where the direct question was asked Mr. Beckemeyer:

Q. Were there any threats or duress used upon you for the purpose of making you tell anything with reference to the Lorimer payment of money that you have testified to here?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am just coming to that.

Mr. FRAZIER. His answer is "No; there was not."

Q. Or either by the State's attorney or the officer in whose keeping you were?—A. No; there was not.

Q. Did you tell the truth then as you have told it now?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I thank the Senator from Tennessee. He always is accurate. If any friend of mine got into trouble through no fault of his, I should advise him to employ the professional services of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER]. But if he were in the wrong, God help him. Well, I was just coming to that. I was skipping some of these pages; it takes too much time; because I want to put the whole third-degree story in the RECORD and yet not to burden it. Senators tried to impress the Senate that some awful "third-degree" methods were used on this man which made him confess.

On page 252 occurs the following:

Q. After you testified before the grand jury, Mr. Beckemeyer, didn't somebody in the State's attorney's office tell you that you had been indicted for perjury?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you tell John Gavin that, when you did talk to the State's attorney, that you understood and believed you had been indicted for perjury?—A. I don't think I told Mr. Gavin that at all.

Q. Did you tell anybody that?—A. No, sir; not that I know of. I had no reason to tell that to anybody.

Q. Isn't it a fact—

You see they are trying to make him admit that he had an awful third-degree method.

Q. Isn't it a fact that you were shown an indictment—what purported to be an indictment on paper—an indictment against you, charging you with perjury?—A. No, SIR.

Q. Did you testify before the grand jury you had received $1,000 in the same way that you testified to it here?—A. YES, SIR.

* * * * * * *

Q. You were indicted or threatened with an indictment for perjury and you went back before the grand jury and corrected your testimony, didn't you?—A. YES, SIR.

Now then follows what the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER] read, but he did not read it all.

Q. Were there any threats or duress used upon you for the purpose of making you tell anything with reference to the Lorimer payment of money that you have testified to here?—A. THERE WAS NOT.

What do you think of that "third degree?"

Q. Or either by the State's attorney or the officer in whose keeping you were?—A. No; THERE WAS NOT.

Q. Did you tell the truth then as you have told it now?—A. Yes, sir.

And now, mark this:

Q. And your going before the grand jury on the third visit, and that, as I understand you, was the only time with reference to which you have testified about the $1,000 Lorimer money—were you asked to go before the grand jury on that occasion, or did you voluntarily go?—A. I ASKED PERMISSION TO GO BEFORE THE GRAND JURY.

What do Senators think about this "third degree" for Beckemeyer, now? But that is not all, Mr. President. On pages 260 and 261 occurs the following, and I am taking time about this because we have heard so much about this brutal and cruel "third degree," causing men to commit perjury in furtherance of a great conspiracy against the sitting Member:

Q. Who ordered you?—A. No one, that I know of. If the committee would like to know how I came to be in the custody of an officer, I will tell them.

Q. Tell it, Mr. Beckemeyer.—A. Wayman asked me if I would not like to have an officer go with me down home. We talked the matter over in Mr. Wayman's office, and several propositions were put by the State's attorney as to fellows talking to me and getting up impeaching testimony or probably getting whipped. That was two of the reasons why I partly requested—and it was very willingly granted, of course, by Mr. Wayman, that I let an officer go with me.

The "third degree!" Senators who are upholding this election would have us believe that Beckemeyer confessed under the crushing terror of a brutal "third degree." Senators have declaimed about Beckemeyer being terrorized, made drunk, and so forth, by a police officer forced on him by the State's attorney; that Beckemeyer was compelled to commit perjury by being dragged and frightened before the grand jury. But Beckemeyer swears that he asked for an officer to go with him. Beckemeyer asked to go before the grand jury. He did not testify before the grand jury to what he did not testify to here. And on page 261:

Q. It was at your own suggestion that the officer went down—in part—went down with you to———A. In part it was.

Q. Did you ever make any objection to it, directly or indirectly?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you consider that you were under any duress or any restraint, or anything of that sort? * * * A. No, sir.

"Third degree!" What does any Senator think about the "third degree" for Beckemeyer now?

FATE OF OFFICER KEELEY, THE PRINCIPAL "MINION" OF THE "THIRD DEGREE."

Now, Mr. President, we come to another thing which I hope will interest the Senate. How many times has it been stated that Beckemeyer was subjected to a cruel "third degree," the testimony about which I have just read, and which shows it was not so? How often have we heard passions torn to tatters in this debate, appeals made that "split the ears of the groundlings, but made the judicious grieve," about Officer Keeley taking Beckemeyer out under instructions, getting him drunk, taking him to bad places, and all that sort of thing? Is not that pretty familiar?

"Infamous" tactics of the officers of justice of Chicago, Ill., putting this poor man, who says he went very willingly and asked for the protection of an officer—and then the officer being instructed to take Beckemeyer out and get him drunk! I was curious about what happened to that officer—this brutal officer of justice. So I telegraphed to District Attorney Wayman as to what became of Officer Keeley, and I find that this man, who has been paraded before us for having done these things, has been indicted and CONVICTED of perjury for having sworn that he was ordered to do any such thing or did do any such thing.

That, I think, has occurred since the committee reported. I read in State's Attorney Wayman's testimony, which I will call the attention of the Senate to in a moment, the statement that the grand jury had indicted this man Keeley.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Where?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In Cook County, Chicago, of course; and now he is convicted of perjury. Officer Keeley—"Third Degree" Keeley—whom we have heard so bitterly denounced, has been indicted and convicted of perjury for swearing to the very things that have been paraded before us as establishing the "third degree." Senators did not know that, I take it.

While I am on this subject, Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] the other day, inadvertently, of course—I could not see the relevancy—stated that Browne, our twentieth century Abraham Lincoln, was tried twice, and that the first time the jury stood 11 to 1 for acquittal. I asked, by telegraph, District Attorney Wayman about it, and here is his answer: "The first Browne jury stood eight for conviction and four for acquittal."

I will ask the Secretary to read this telegram of State's Attorney Wayman about this man Keeley, and I hope we will hear nothing more about the cruel treatment of these witnesses by the State's attorney's office in Chicago.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., February 22, 1911.

Hon. A. J. BEVERIDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

P. J. Keeley was indicted by September grand jury for falsely swearing for the defense in the Browne case that Assistant State's Attorney Arnold had placed Beckemeyer in his custody and told him to treat Beckemeyer right, meaning, as Keeley said, to get him drunk, so that he would testify before the grand jury. Keeley's testimony in the Browne case being to give the impression that the State had plied Beckemeyer with liquor to get him to testify.

This was an infamous lie, and on the trial of Keeley for perjury he admitted that Beckemeyer was not drunk at any time. Keeley was tried at this term of court, and on February 10 WAS FOUND GUILTY, having been discharged from the police force in the meantime for conduct unbecoming a police officer. THE FIRST BROWNE JURY STOOD EIGHT FOR CONVICTION AND FOUR FOR ACQUITTAL.

JOHN E. WAYMAN, State's Attorney.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, so we find that Beckemeyer got the money; part of it was found in his possession, he confessed; he was not under duress; the "third degree" is a silly invention; and "third-degree" Keeley is convicted of perjury.

LINK, THE ARCH HERO OF THE THIRD DEGREE.

Now, Mr. President, I come to Link. The first thing that is apparent about Link is that he is a reluctant witness, a witness so reluctant, Mr. President, that he is impertinent. There is not a lawyer here who can read that man's testimony before the subcommittee without knowing that if he had dared to so conduct himself before a court he would have been punished for contempt. Everything that that man swore to was drawn out of him by the red-hot forceps of cross-examination. Notwithstanding that, to what does he swear? The majority of the committee weeps over Link—poor Link, subjected to the "third degree"—compelled to swear falsely, as Beckemeyer was, by the cruel "third degree."

I have sometimes wondered whether the majority's sympathy for poor Link was greater than its hatred and disapproval of the officers of justice of Illinois. The latter's treatment, according to some Senators, of this bribe taker reminds us of Burns's lines—

Man's inhumanity to man
Makes countless thousands mourn.

For are not the whole American people mourning over poor bribe-taker Link and Beckemeyer and those other tender innocents, so roughly manhandled by the officers of justice?

Mr. President, to what does Link swear? I will not read the record unless some Senator thinks I am misstating it. First of all, he can not remember how the invitation came for him to meet Browne in St. Louis June 21. He can not remember it, not at all. This is on page 281. He can not remember anything about it. But I ask you to compare his lack of memory on details, on pages 280 and 281, with his accurate memory as to a conversation with Beckemeyer, pages 300 and 301.

The facility with which his memory accommodates him almost, but not quite, equals that of Mr. Browne, whom we have the authority of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] for saying is of "marvelous intellect." I will read you, when I come to Browne, what the Senator from Kentucky says of Mr. Browne and his "marvelous intellect."

Nevertheless Link testifies that he did meet Browne there; that Browne paid him a thousand dollars; and that he, Link, "thought it was campaign money," although no campaign was possible for 1¼ months. You will find that account on pages 281 and 284. Then he admits meeting Wilson down there, and from Wilson he, like White and Beckemeyer, got $900, and again he thought it was "campaign money." He is not surprised at all that he got it—not Link. They did not owe him anything; he did not expect to get it; Browne just handed him a thousand dollars; he took it for granted it was "campaign money" for a campaign a year and two months off; and Wilson gave him money under the same circumstances.

Mr. President, the whole transaction is given in the examination, the admirable examination of Senator FRAZIER, of Tennessee, on pages 306 and 308. Senator FRAZIER'S whole examination of this man Link should be read by every Senator.

Mr. President, Link is the star "third degree" witness. Yet this man was not subjected to things so humiliating as Beckemeyer, in the opinion of the subcommittee.

Mr. FRAZIER. Would it interrupt the Senator from Indiana if I ask him a question?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not at all; I would be glad to hear the Senator's question.

Mr. FRAZIER. I ask the Senator this question, or rather I make this suggestion to the Senator. It is contended that Link was induced to swear to this story by the "third degree," to which the Senator has alluded. Did it ever occur to the Senator that those who induced Link to swear to those falsehoods were very bungling conspirators, that they did not induce Link, while they were getting him to swear to these falsehoods, to swear to a more convincing story than he did? If he was making up the story would it not have been just as easy for those who were securing him to make up that story to have got Link to have admitted the fact that he was promised this $1,000 if he would vote for Mr. LORIMER, and that thereafter he was paid the $1,000 for voting for Mr. LORIMER?

Upon the other hand, Mr. Link would not state upon the most rigid cross-examination that he was ever spoken to with reference to his vote for Mr. LORIMER in any corrupt sense before he voted for him, and he refused to admit that the $1,000 which he did receive was paid to him for voting for Mr. LORIMER.

If it had been a made-up thing, if it had been a conspiracy, if it had been made out of the whole cloth, as it were, would it not have been just as easy for Link to have made a good story as to have made an imperfect story?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Exactly; just as the Senator pointed out the other day, if these were all lies gotten up by a "conspiracy," how much easier and simpler would it have been to have had Holtslaw testify that he got the $2,500 from LORIMER himself instead of having fixed up a bungling story for Holstlaw that he went clear out to Broderick's saloon, a mile and a half, and got it from Broderick.

Of course, if these men are telling falsehoods about getting this money as the result of some "conspiracy" to "destroy" the sitting Member, as the Senator from Tennessee shows, with the positiveness of a demonstration in Euclid, then they were the stupidest set of knaves who ever put on foot a nefarious plot; it will not hold together.

I have already shown that to be false in the case of Beckemeyer. Beckemeyer denies it, and he says he never was under duress. He says he suggested himself that the officer go with him. He says that he never was asked to tell anything but the truth. When the committee or any Senator has told us that Officer Keeley was instructed to go out and get him drunk in furtherance of that "conspiracy," remember that Officer Keeley has been indicted and convicted of perjury for swearing to the same thing that Senators have told us here.

LINK'S "THIRD DEGREE."

Now we come to the "third degree" in the case of Link. Of course, if this "third degree" goes down, then the last excuse for pleading that these votes were not bought disappears.

What does State's Attorney Wayman say about Link's "third degree?" First, I ask Senators to remember the absurd overdrawn story of Link about the "third degree." Link, it appears from this testimony, must have been a great big, raw-boned, powerful man, physically. It appears so from his own description. Yet the Senators wail and moan over Link, poor man.

Link says he was threatened with all manner of things—separation from his home and farm; and, finally, his wife—if he did not testify to what they wanted him to testify to.

Link says that the man who did this chiefly was Assistant State's Attorney Arnold. Now, the subcommittee did not believe Link's story about Arnold; otherwise, of course, the subcommittee would have called Arnold. But the subcommittee did not. However, they did call State's Attorney Wayman, and I ask the attention of Senators to the testimony, undisputed, of the State's attorney concerning the "third degree" for poor, oppressed, giant Link. Here is what happened. I read from page 370:

Q. What talk or discussion did you have with him, personally, as to his being in the custody of an officer while in the city of Chicago?

State's Attorney Wayman answers:

A. I had no discussion at all Friday evening at that time, but Saturday I did, as to what would be done with reference to the case in which an indictment had been returned. After nolle prossing the case Saturday morning it was again discussed, and Mr. Link WANTED an officer to go with him to the train, and then he WANTED an officer to go with him clear home—

What do Senators think of that? That is what happened about Link's being placed in the cruel "custody of an officer." Link himself asked for the officer— and after discussing that between us, we agreed that would be wise, and the reasons there stated between us was that we didn't want anybody to interview Mr. Link or talk with him upon this subject, and I stated that to Mr. Link. Mr. Link expressed himself as being very desirous that no newspaper men were to be allowed to interview him, but all be kept away from him.

Then there was a great deal of discussion between the attorney for the Chicago Tribune and the attorney for the sitting Member. Finally this occurred:

Senator GAMBLE. There has been an attack by these witnesses upon the State's attorney's office; for that purpose that would be for the committee to determine.

Mr. AUSTRIAN—

He is the attorney who seems to have represented the Chicago Tribune—

If the committee would strike out all the evidence about their being in custody and the so-called third degree, I would not ask to put in this evidence, but if it remains in the record, I think the explanation should be there, too.

Judge HANECY. WE ARE NOT INVESTIGATING THE STATE'S ATTORNEY'S OFFICE.

Judge Hanecy, remember, was the attorney of the sitting Member in this investigation.

Although the counsel for the sitting Member says that they were not investigating the State's attorney's office when he was trying to keep out of the record correspondence between the State's attorney and this man Link, yet the State's attorney's office of Chicago has been the chief subject of denunciation on this floor. The State's attorney's office of Chicago has been held up to us as the machine of an infamous inquisition to compel men to tell stupid and bungling lies. Does any Senator believe it?

Here follows a communication between the State's attorney and Link from his home. Link, in his method of bravado, says on the stand he "read Wayman the riot act." Here is the riot act that bribe taker Link read State's Attorney Wayman:

MITCHELL, ILL., May 12, 1910.

Hon. JOHN E. W. WAYMAN, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR MR. WAYMAN: I have no room to keep Mr. O'Keefe at my home, and I promise you that I have no disposition to repudiate in any manner the testimony that I gave before the Cook County grand jury on last Saturday, May 7.

I realize that you are a friend of mine and will depend on what you told me.

And I shall not allow myself to be interviewed by anyone.

Yours, etc., M. S. LINK.

Why was not that laid before the Senate when we were hearing these lurid details about the "third degree?" The officer whom Link was "in custody" of Link himself asked for; the officer whom Beckemeyer was put in "custody" of, and whom we have heard took Beckemeyer out and got him drunk, and so forth, has been convicted of perjury in Cook County.

But that is not all of the "third degree." Mr. Wayman, the State's attorney, testifies further, on page 379—this is on cross-examination:

Q. Is it because you don't remember or because you don't know?—

That is, whether Link was "in custody"—

A. Because Mr. Link, after they arrived at Mitchell, O'Keefe went with him, and then Mr. Link went to St. Louis and about the country as he pleased, and I would not regard it as custody, and neither did Mr. Link.

* * * * * * *

Q. And he insisted you had no right to keep him "in custody?"—A. No, sir; Mr. Link never said a word to me at all, excepting that letter—

I have just read the letter—

I have produced here, and upon the receipt of that letter I telephoned to John O'Keefe to come home.

Now, that is all the "third degree" there is as to Link. Was it not proper? As a lawyer, will any Senator say here that State's Attorney Wayman, instead of being cruel, was not considerate and kind, even? What do Senators say of the "third degree" in view of this testimony? Senators may shout "third degree" all they like, but there is the testimony that the "third degree" is an absurd and bizarre myth. One man who is said to have been the agent of the "third degree" has been indicted and convicted for perjury for saying what has been shouted here time and again as the truth.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the most important statement in Link's testimony. I ask any Senator who votes to sustain this title to remember this before he does it in connection with the rest that I have read.

It has been said that the reason why Link testified as Beckemeyer did to having received $1,000 from Browne and $900 from Wilson was because he was subjected to the "third degree." But Link unwittingly gives another reason, and I will read it to you. You will find it on page 305. Link is now on the stand. Senator FRAZIER is cross-examining him.

"I DID NOT WANT TO GET MY FRIENDS INTO TROUBLE."

All through this record, after Senator FRAZIER arrived there, Senators will find that when witnesses had testified to an absurd state of affairs the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER] took it up, and his examination was thorough, direct, keen, and relevant. So he took up Mr. Link. I direct the particular attention of the Senate to this:

Senator FRAZIER. If it were true that you met Wilson at St. Louis and he paid you $900, and that you met Browne and he paid you $1,000, why did you not tell that when you came up here before the grand jury and before Mr. Wayman? What were you concealing it for?

I must beg the attention of every Senator here. Here is Link's answer as to why he concealed that he got the $1,000 and the $900:

A. I didn't want to get myself, perhaps, in trouble and my friends in trouble. I didn't know where the money came from. That was the only reason.

Q. Why didn't you tell it if it were a fact that you got it, and that you met those gentlemen? What were you trying to conceal it for; what was there wrong about the transaction?

This is Link giving his reason why he did not make a clean breast of it in the first place.

A. I didn't know anything about what there was about it. And I didn't desire to criminate myself for taking this money. I didn't know where it came from.

Q. If it were a present to you, and a fair and honest transaction for campaign purposes—

This is Senator FRAZIER cross-examining—or a gift or otherwise, why were you trying to conceal it?—A. I had no reason at all for concealing it.

Q. Why didn't you tell it?—A. Pardon me, I will correct that. I WAS AFRAID OF GETTING SOMEBODY INTO TROUBLE; I didn't know where this money came from.

Q. Who were you afraid of getting into trouble?—

Inquired the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER].

A. Friends of mine or myself—

Answers much-abused Link.

Q. Who were your friends?—A. I had a great many friends on the Republican side and on the Democratic side in the general assembly.

Q. How would you get your friends into trouble by telling the truth, if this were a perfectly honest and legitimate transaction?—

Asks the Senator from Tennessee.

A. I didn't know how it would get them into trouble, only it struck me I might get them into trouble—

Answers bribe-taker Link.

That is Link's sworn testimony as to why he concealed getting the $1,000 from Browne and the $900 from Wilson. What friends was he afraid of getting into trouble do Senators think?

The majority of the committee absolutely ignore the fact that Link himself swears that the reason why he concealed this was the fact that he "FEARED GETTING HIS FRIENDS INTO TROUBLE," and they lay it on a "third degree," which the record itself shows did not exist. Now, Senators can vote as they please, but it shall not be on any fantastic ground of a "third degree." Link says that he refused to tell because he was "afraid of getting my friends into trouble," and that is not denied.

And what "friends?" That goes back to Broderick. Why did he refuse to answer the questions that were put to him? He said he was "closely affiliated" with certain "friends" of the sitting Senator in Chicago. Broderick says he knew the sitting Member was a candidate two weeks before, at the same time Browne says he knew it. Was Link's reason for concealing this transaction the same that moved Broderick to refuse to testify?

You can not pass those matters over, Senators, by sympathy or aid to a man whose wife is sick or the beginning of a boyhood friendship even with Hinky Dink.

Now, Mr. President, we come to White. There is a good deal to be said of White; a good deal, I think, that is interesting. The first thing that appears about White is this: The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] made the point that either White told the truth or else White is a genius.

WHITE, IF UNTRUTHFUL, THE AMERICAN GABORIAU OR CONAN DOYLE.

If White's story is a falsehood, White need never care any more for the future, because we have developed among us an inventive genius of fiction who puts all the writers of imaginary tales from Emeile Gaboriau to Conan Doyle to the blush. That is not an extravagant statement.

Read White's story, so natural, so corroborated at every material point. Then read any of the masterpieces of detective fiction, such as "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes," or "The Mystery of the Rue Morgue," and the like, and compare them to White's story, if the last is fiction.

Yet we are told by eminent Senators that White is a man of no intelligence. But if he is a man of no intelligence, he told the truth; because a man of mean intelligence can not conceive a tale so full of details, so full of novelty and dramatic point, a tale, too, that happens to be corroborated at every important point.

Mr. President, I press again upon the attention of the Senate this fact: White's story is corroborated in every vital particular. Let us put that to the test. Is there a Senator here who intends to vote to support this title who will point out to me one instance that is vital in White's story that is not corroborated? I pause for reply. We might as well face this matter.

White says Browne approached him. Beckemeyer and the others say the same thing. He says he was invited by Wilson to St. Louis. Beckemeyer and the others say the same thing; Clark says the same thing; Shephard says the same thing; and Wilson admits he was in St. Louis. White said he got $900 there from Wilson in the bathroom; Beckemeyer says he got $900 there; Link says he got $900 there. Shephard denies that he got $900 there; but admits he was there, and was called into the bathroom by Wilson because Wilson wanted to know the name of a lady he saw Shephard dining with two months before.

White says Browne paid him the major part of his first installment at Chicago. When? July 16, the day Holstlaw got his first installment. He said Browne told him he was going to St. Louis. Browne went to St. Louis, and Browne admits it. It is sworn to by the other bribe takers. Beckemeyer and Link swear that they got $1,000 there from Browne. White is again corroborated.

When I came to take up the testimony of Browne—this Abraham Lincoln of the twentieth century; Browne who has been compared with the great savior of the Republic—I think I will dispose of Mr. Browne to the satisfaction of everybody; I would if we were jurors. But before I pass this I want again to ask: Will any Senator here point me out, so that I can straighten it out now, what vital point in White's testimony is not corroborated—one? Again I await a reply. No one answers. Very well; we will pass that.

BROWNE ON WHITE'S CHARACTER.

But, Mr. President, it is said that White's character is base. I never practiced law in a criminal court, but I have talked with criminal lawyers, and I have heard that one of the methods of that practice is to assail the witness of the cause that you want to defeat with a savagery in proportion to the desperateness of your own side. Is not that true? Very well; what has happened here? White has been assailed as base and vile and infamous and low and with all the other adjectives of disgrace.

What has that to do with the truth of this bribery? We are not trying White's character, we are determining the truth. My own opinion is that it is not shown that White was a bad man before he went up there to Springfield; but I think that occurred to White which has occurred to other men. The senior Senator from New York, [Mr. DEPEW] by his long experience in this field has known many of them; I have known some of them myself, boys who came from the country, went to the legislature, and fell into evil habits.

If Mr. White is a bad man, I will show you that one instrument and agent of White's infamy was Browne himself. We have one good witness on White's character, and that witness is "marvellous-intellect" Browne. I am going to read to the Senate what Mr. Browne thought of White clear down to the end of 1909. I read from page 53; and I shall take the time to read these letters over, because they have internal evidence of the truth of White's story that no man can resist. I believe this is the first letter—the Lee O'Neil Browne letter:

[Exhibit 1.]

OTTAWA, ILL., June 9, 1909.

Hon. CHARLES A. WHITE, O'Fallon, Ill.

MY DEAR CHARLIE: I did not get home until the night of Monday, June 7, when I found your letter awaiting me. I wish you had spoken to me of the matters contained in your letter before we left Springfield. It would have been comparatively easy for me at that time to have advised with you personally and properly. It is far from difficult now, and I would hardly know what to say to you without seeing you personally. In any event, unless you would care to see me before that time by coming here or meeting me in Chicago, I expect to see you and have a visit with you some time within the next two weeks. I shall be only too glad to advise with you along the line of the matters referred to, and suggest anything that may be appropriate and proper.

The matters referred to—

You know where I stand, old man, and that I will go my length for you.

This is Browne's opinion of White:

Should you find it necessary to see me before the end of the next two weeks, you had better arrange to come to Chicago and meet me there. However, as matters stand, and in the way that I am tied up with business matters now, I would prefer to put off the meeting for the length of time I have stated. I want you to feel and realize that I am as good a friend as you have in the world, and that I am not only willing but ready to do anything in my power for you at any time. My best regards to you.

Very sincerely, your friend, LEE O'NEIL BROWNE.

And yet all that is bad in White, Lee O'Neil Browne certainly knew, and most of which Browne himself developed. Second—this is a brief letter, and I call the attention of Senators especially to it—

[Exhibit 2.]

[People's Exhibit 5 B. B.—Written on letterhead of Forty-sixth General Assembly.]

OTTAWA, ILL., June 13, 1909.

FRIEND CHARLES: Your letter did not reach me till too late to do any good. I was in Chicago, but could not have remained longer had I got your letter. Got home here this evening and am due in court to-morrow a. m. But, Charlie, I will be in Chicago Tuesday or Wednesday—

That was June 13, three days before he paid him the money—and (this is under your hat)—

That is a common expression that White testifies that this man Browne used, and here is Browne using it in a letter to White—and (this is under your hat, though, for I do not want to be bothered by every job hunter in Chicago), if you can wait I'll do my best to see you. I'll be at the Briggs when there.

In haste, BROWNE.

That is the second letter. I now come to the third letter. Senators will remember that this man White has been denounced as "a scoundrel unworthy of belief." I am showing what "marvelous intellect" Browne thought of him. This is dated July 16, 1909. This letter is conclusive. Browne swears—and I will point it out when I come to his testimony—that he did not send Wilson to St. Louis and had nothing to do with the second meeting.

[Exhibit 3.]

OTTAWA, ILL., July 16, 1909.

Hon. CHARLES A. WHITE, O'Fallon, Ill.

FRIEND CHARLIE: Thank you very much for your prompt recognition of my request in the Doyle matter. You have certainly been one of my good old friends since we have become acquainted. I feel sure that the friendship will last just as long as you and I do.

This is getting really quite tender, isn't it?

I was awfully sorry that I WAS UNABLE TO BE WITH YOU YESTERDAY FORENOON IN ST. LOUIS.

This is when White got the second installment of money.

I was taken very ill in Chicago Monday night with an attack of ptomaine poisoning, and have had a pretty serious time of it. I did not dare to attempt the trip. I hope everything is all right with you and satisfactory—

What does he mean by satisfactory?"— and that you are happy and fairly prosperous. I hope before very long to be able to meet you either in St. Louis or Chicago and talk over old times. I think you and I have got one real good visit coming. Let me hear from you when you get time and the spirit moves you.

Very sincerely, your friend, LEE O'NEIL BROWNE.

THE "MUSIC AND FLOWERS" VOYAGE.

Yet this is White, who is so vile and infamous and all the other bad things that Senators think about him after he has been found out, and this was the opinion Lee O'Neil Browne had of him. Browne said he thought they ought to have "a real good visit coming." Well, they got a "real good visit" a little on, as I shall show the Senate.

This is a letter written after they had had that "real good visit" together. It is dated September 9, 1909, and White is now asking him for money, I think.

OTTAWA, ILL., September 9, 1909.

[Exhibit D, Sept. 27, 1910.]

[Letterhead Forty-sixth General Assembly, State of Illinois, House of Representatives.]

FRIEND CHARLES: Just got your letter. Am awfully sorry for you, old pal, because I know how true a good fellow and gentleman you are.

"Old pal!" This is the villain White; this is the infamous White; and this is the "Abraham Lincoln" Browne who is writing, and "old pal" White is a "true good fellow" and a "gentleman" according to Browne.

This is Browne's opinion of White, whom everybody has heard is such a scurvy villain; but there has been no person closer to him than Browne—and Browne ought to know about White, because White and Browne were "good friends" and "old pals;" and because Browne is a "marvelous intellect," as the Senator from Kentucky assures us in his speech.

Browne continues:

Your fault, old pal, is in trying to go too —— fast. You must cut it out for awhile, old boy. I'll do all I can to land you in a job, but do not yet know when LORIMER will be able to do anything, or, rather, when he will do anything.

But I'll do all I can, Charlie. Am pretty hard up myself after the vacation—

I will tell you about the vacation when I come to Browne—

we all had, but have managed to scratch out a fifty for you. Hope it will do some good, anyway. I am down at the "grind" again, working like a slave. It's sure hell after the "music and flowers" we had for a time this summer.

"Marvelous Intellect" Browne and "Infamous Scoundrel" White had been on a lake trip together, where they had "music and flowers" and it was "sure hell getting down to work afterwards." Browne continues:

But when a thing has got to be done, I can always shut my teeth and go to it. It's the only way. It's hell, but that's the price one pays for most of the pleasure of life. I always did, at least. Good-by, old man, and God bless you. Wish I could do more for you.

Your friend, LEE O'NEIL BROWNE.

P. S.—I hope you will do all you can to help James Morris, our old pal, pull through. He must win, he says.

I am reading the character of Mr. White through the letters of his most intimate friend, Lee O'Neil Browne, who, the committee thinks, is worthy of all credence, and who the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] said in his speech the other day had a "marvelous intellect."

Now, Browne, with his "marvelous intellect;" Browne, whom the committee would have us believe is above suspicion; Browne, who did what Abraham Lincoln did, we are told—this Browne was White's closest friend, his "old pal," and so we have Browne's opinion of White's character. Very well. Let us go further.

Mr. President, I will ask to insert in the RECORD at this point, without reading, the other letters of Lee O'Neil Browne to his "old pal" White, and later on when I come to Mr. Browne himself I shall refer again to these letters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The letters referred to are as follows:

[Exhibit 4.]

[Letterhead Forty-sixth General Assembly, State of Illinois, House of Representatives.]

OTTAWA, ILL., September 23, 1909.

Hon. CHARLES A. WHITE, O'Fallon, Ill.

FRIEND CHARLIE: The reason I have not written to you before is because that I did not find it possible to do as you wanted me to. You know I told you in my last letter to you, when I sent the other inclosure, that that was the best I could do for you at that time. It was, and, while I regret the fact, circumstances do not permit me to do what I would like and what you seem to think is so easy for me. I herewith inclose draft for $50; also your note which you sent me, and you can send me one for $50 in its place. I hope that this will help you and only wish that I could arrange the matter to suit you.

I do not know what you are thinking of, my boy, to get yourself into a position of this kind. I do not want to preach to you, but you certainly are not very wise in your generation. I will tell you, Charlie, you must just simply take the situation by the neck and get down to hard tacks and go to work. If you can not get what suits you, get something else. You know that you got to do something, and when you are in that position, do not be too particular about what you do. LORIMER is tied up so that he can not move a hand at the present time in the way of getting jobs. When he does get so that he can move, I will do anything in my power to help you. And, as you know, there is no other avenue through which I can move. I am awfully sorry that you are in your present financial condition, Charlie, but really, don't you know, you have nobody to thank for it but yourself. You certainly could have used more judgment and foresight than you have under the circumstances. Now brace up, old man, and surprise yourself and everybody else by making good. It is in you, and all you need is a little nerve at the present moment. I hope and trust you will do everything in your power at that convention at Belleville to see that Jim Morris lands. My best regards to you. I will write you again before very long. Am working hard.

Very sincerely, your friend, LEE O'NEIL BROWNE.

CHICAGO, October 24, 1909.

FRIEND CHARLIE: Have been trying to land something for you. I came up yesterday and had a visit with LORIMER in the afternoon for about half an hour. He goes back to Washington in December, at which time he feels that he can probably place you along the lines you suggested in your last letter. In the meantime he is arranging to give you a temporary job up here as clerk in some one of the offices. I will get word down home the early part of the week, and then I'll let you know and will come up here and report to LORIMER'S secretary, who will take you out and place you. See? The salary of the temporary job will not be very high, probably $75 per month, but it will help you through all right until I can land you better after awhile. If this thing does not suit you well enough to take it, you must wire me at Ottawa as soon as you get it. However, in your present condition, I think you had best take it. I am awfully sorry, Charlie, that you are situated as you are; but really you are not entitled to a whole lot of sympathy; it's largely your own fault. You must get down to cover and learn that you must cut your coat according to your cloth. You know I am fond of you and will do anything I can, but this does not blind me to your faults and the fact that you are not at all consistent in your expenditures. My very best regards to you, old pal, and remember that I will do all I can.

Your friend, LEE O'NEIL BROWNE.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I repeat that every vital point of White's testimony is corroborated; and, if I am wrong about that, I again appeal to any Senator here to point out what vital point in this testimony is not corroborated. You can not dispose of the matter upon the ground that White is a bad man. You acquit Browne as a good man—even a "marvelous intellect," another Abraham Lincoln. Yet Browne calls White "old pal," "a true good fellow and gentleman."

REASONING IN A CIRCLE.

The committee seem to think that nobody but a good man is going to accept bribes; they seem to be horrified that the men who confessed to bribery were not exemplars of purity. According to the committee, bribery never could be proved, because the moment a man confessed and was caught in the tangle of circumstances, they say you must disbelieve him because he is a bad man; he is a bad man because he accepted a bribe, and therefore you can not believe him.

So you perceive that convincing reasoning in a circle which the supporters of his election adopt to hold up this title to this office. I asked in my minority views what did they expect? What kind of men did they think would accept bribes? These men, we are told, we must not believe because they are such base fellows. Well, will any other kind of fellows accept bribes?

The American people will tolerate no such verdict. And, after all, while we are the jury, the American people are the court to which we must return our verdict. That position is an offense against common sense. It is an insult to reason. When Senators vote, they must vote knowing what the testimony shows.

Mr. President, in the case of Holstlaw the money was traced to the bank where he deposited it. In the case of Beckemeyer, part of the money was traced to the bank in Belle Isle, soon after he swears he got it, where he did not live, and where he had to be identified. As lawyers, what do you say to that—the money taken and the goods found in their possession?

What would you say if a burglar is seen coming out of a house at midnight, then it is later found that silver is missing, and then later on the silver is found in the possession of the man you saw coming out of the house? The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is a keen and learned lawyer. Can evidence be more complete than confession that money was taken and the money itself found in the possession of those who confess?

WHITE'S BRIBE MONEY.

Now we come to White's money. What became of that? White's character may be very low. If so, Mr. Browne's was one of the leprous hands that dragged it down; but whether low or not, White swears, as Beckemeyer swears and Holstlaw swears, that he got the money. What became of it?

Well, Mr. President, his stenographer, Miss Mollie Vandeveer, swore as to what occurred when he came back from Chicago—I think it was in the middle of June—after his meeting with our modern "Abraham Lincoln" Browne in the Briggs House at Chicago. She testified that—

About the middle of June Mr. White came to the office with a bunch of bills.

White's business partner, Mr. Dennis, swears that he was in straitened circumstances before that time.

Judge Hanecy, counsel for the sitting Member, said:

May I interpose the objection that it is corroborative evidence, manufactured or created——

And, by the way, I hope I will have the attention of all who listen to me when I come to speak of manufactured evidence in this case. That one thing alone would be sufficient to convict.

Senator BURROWS. The committee has passed upon that question, overruled the objection, and we will now go on.

The WITNESS. About the middle of June Mr. White returned to the office with a bulk of bills—

"A bulk of bills"—

"a stack of bills" about this high [indicating] of different denominations, twenties, fifties, and tens. It seemed to be yellow-backed money—this gold-backed money.

Q. Can you tell the committee about what time that was?—A. Why, that must have been about the 17th or 18th of June. It was about the middle of June. I don't know just exactly.

It was about the middle of June, the 16th of June, that White swore he got the $850 in Chicago, in bills of those denominations. Now, you who believe in a "conspiracy" that involves the State attorney's office of Chicago, the State attorney's office of Sangamon County, the sheriff of Sangamon County, the officers of a great bank in Chicago, do you think that this "conspiracy" also involved little Mollie Vandeveer down at O'Fallon, Ill.? If so, Mollie is a subtle child and should seek broader and richer fields than O'Fallon. But no, Mr. President. Plainly Miss Vandeveer is a good and truthful girl.

But that is not all. It appears, Mr. President, that this man White was not only seen by his stenographer, Mollie Vandeveer, in possession of the money in "bills of tens and twenties and fifties," but it further appears that he deposited a large sum of money in the Grand Leader department store in St. Louis.

KIRKPATRICK, THE DEPARTMENT-STORE FLOORWALKER "CONSPIRATOR."

Mr. Kirkpatrick, the floorwalker of that department store, swears that he saw White deposit that money, and that on the envelope was marked "$800 deposited with the cashier," and Kirkpatrick saw the denominations of some of the bills. Was Kirkpatrick, the floorwalker of the Grand Leader department store, also in this "conspiracy," and did he trump up this story?

We have been told with thunderous tones that we ought not to believe a word White said; that it is all a great "conspiracy." Ah, the difficulty of that is it is too complicated and its webs extend too far. Here is the money traced from Holstlaw's hands into the bank; from Beckemeyer's hands into the bank; and it is seen in the possession of White by Mollie Vandeveer, by Kirkpatrick, and finally by Dennis.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator the date on which he said White accepted this money? I think the Senator stated that it was in June, did he not?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator is going to do me the favor of correcting me in case I have stated anything wrong.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am going to rest the Senator a moment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is kind. Yes; about the middle of June. White testified he got it June 16. I will again read from the testimony of Miss Vandeveer:

About the middle of June Mr. White returned to the office with a bulk of bills, a stack of bills about this high [indicating] of different denominations, twenties, fifties, and tens. It seemed to be yellow-backed money, this gold-backed money.

Q. Can you tell the committee about what time that was?—A. Why, that must have been about the 17th or 18th of June. It was about the middle of June. I don't know just exactly.

Mr. GALLINGER. This man White is the same individual who offered to sell this story of his to Senator LORIMER, naming his price at $75,000?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not until long after this.

Mr. GALLINGER. Long afterwards?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, long after this.

Mr. GALLINGER. What year was that?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It was the year 1909, in June, and it was one day after, according to White's story, that he met Browne in Chicago and got $850 from him and the day on which Browne swears he met White in Chicago and loaned him $50. That was in 1909.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is all right. I am much obliged to the Senator. This transaction that three witnesses swear to—Kirkpatrick, in St. Louis; Mollie Vandeveer, in O'Fallon; and Dennis, in O'Fallon—occurred in June; but when White—this infamous scoundrel whom Browne called "Dear old pal"—tried to sell the story—which, by the way, White says he did not try to sell—to the sitting Member was months after this transaction.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, Mr. President, the Senator will not say that White did not try to sell the story when we have his addressed to Senator LORIMER.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We have his letter; but he swore in his examination that it was not for the purpose of sale but for exposure. My own opinion about it is that he would have both sold and exposed after his experience with his "dear old pal."

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And yet the Senator thinks badly of White. I do not care how badly the Senator thinks of White. What does he think of Mollie Vandeveer and Kirkpatrick and Dennis, who saw White with the money immediately after White swore he got it? Were they, too, in this far-reaching "conspiracy" that embraced bank officers in Chicago and stenographers in O'Fallon and clerks in a St. Louis department store and State's attorneys of two counties in Illinois?

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Suppose he had the money and suppose two or three parties saw him handle the money, has the Senator any suggestion to make as to where it came from?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is explained where it came from. White said he got it from Browne.

Mr. GALLINGER. Where did Browne get it?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know where Browne got it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Ah, that is different.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What does the Senator think about that himself?

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not quite sure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It was asked yesterday—I did not say a word, for I make it a rule not to interrupt, although I invite and like interruptions—it was asked yesterday, why had not we traced this money to its source; why did not the subcommittee do so? Why did they not ask the bank of the sitting Member to produce its books? The Senator from Texas said we ought to have gone to the sitting Member's bank.

Well, if some person was bribing these people, do you suppose they would have taken the money out of the sitting Member's bank? That would have been just as stupid as are other parts of this conspiracy, if it is a "conspiracy," as the Senator from Tennessee has pointed out.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the sitting Member did not have a bank at that time, did he?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; of course not. That bank was not in existence then or for months afterwards; but it was suggested by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], you will remember, why were not the books of the sitting Member's bank produced. And now the Senator calls attention to the fact that the sitting Member's bank was not in existence at that time, which shows that even the Senator from Texas can make an unintentional mistake, although he could not overlook possibly some little irrelevant mistake that the Senator from New York and one the Senator from Iowa made.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator from Texas corrected that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, no. The habit in this case of trying to destroy testimony on some little absurd inconsistencies is so ridiculous that I am not going into it.

I fasten this down again. Holstlaw swears he got the money, and the money is traced. Beckemeyer swears he got the money, and the money is traced. White swears he got the money, and the money is traced.

"DIAMOND JOE" CLARK.

Now we come to Clark. "Diamond Joe" let us call him. His name is Joe and he bought diamonds as we shall see. Also, he has a close friend, a saloon keeper, named Joe Diamond. Clark's testimony is the most curious testimony in this case. He was one of the furniture rascals. He was one of Lee O'Neil Browne's followers. He was a police magistrate, and mark this—it might be important in this case—and "interested in the lumber business." I do not emphasize "lumber business;" I just mention it.

He first voted for the sitting Member May 26. He had made up his mind, he swears, three or four days before, but "Prudent Joe" told nobody that he was going to vote for the sitting Member, not even his adored leader, "Abraham Lincoln" Browne.

Here is the thing to which I call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire: Joe Clark was one of the men who met Lee O'Neil Browne in St. Louis with Beckemeyer and Link and Luke and Shephard. Clark swears he did not. Browne swears he did; and then said, "Well, I believe Joe says he didn't meet me there. I thought he did meet me there; but if Joe says he didn't why, I guess he didn't."

Mr. GALLINGER. A nice bunch.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. A nice bunch. What does the Senator think of Browne—Browne, the man of "marvelous intellect," as the Senator from Kentucky says? Well, Clark also met Wilson at St. Louis July 15, the date of the second distribution. He met Wilson with White—well, with all of the rest of them; what the Senator from New Hampshire calls the "nice bunch."

Then, Mr. President, when it was noised about—and I have often wondered what my engaging friend, the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], thought of that—that this thing was going to be exposed, what happened? Beckemeyer telephones Clark to meet him in Carlyle. Clark responded, "Can not meet you in Carlyle, but I am going to Centralia to visit a friend of mine"—Joe Diamond, a saloon keeper. The names in this drama read like a 10-cent novel. Beckemeyer was going to Centralia to the funeral of a friend.

So these two disinterested patriots, one upon a funereal visit and the other upon a journey to see a friend, a saloon keeper named Joe Diamond, met on the train going to Centralia; and there is where it is said that Joe Clark, the police magistrate, the person schooled in the craft of standing pat on a story, was to advise him as to whether or not Beckemeyer should deny he was in St. Louis.

Then Clark goes, by mere accident, to Springfield, and there, by mere accident—and mark this—he meets Wilson. It was the surprise of his life that he met Wilson. But he met Wilson there.

A MERE "ACCIDENT," YOU SEE.

When Wilson saw Clark, Wilson must have exclaimed "to what happy accident is it that we owe so unexpected a visit?" or else Clark must have so exclaimed. For, of course, both Wilson and Clark were familiar with Goldsmith.

What do the Senators think about that? Clark says he talked to Wilson maybe only three minutes, and yet in that three minutes he told Wilson of White and Tierney's visit to him, Clark. Does the Senator believe—does anybody believe—that they spent only three minutes together with what the Senator from South Dakota calls the "minions" and sleuths on their track?

More than this, Clark told Beckemeyer that one way he had of covering up the money he got from this transaction was through the fact that he was chairman of the committee to bury his fellow representative, Powers; that the money which was coming to the widow was paid to Clark, and he took this voucher and put it in the bank in his name and then took the cash he got from Browne and Wilson and paid Mrs. Powers; and that is the way he had of covering it up.

Clark was there in St. Louis. He admits that. The other fellows got the money. The only difference in the world in the testimony is that Clark stubbornly denies it. He testifies that he never knew anything about the sitting Member having a chance to be elected until the morning of the 26th, and that nobody said a word to him about it. He said he saw men flitting about, but "they passed Joe Clark by." No one notified him; and yet so important a man was Joe Clark that when he voted for the sitting Member he swears there was more applause at his vote than there was at anybody else.

CLARK WITH CONFESSED BRIBE TAKERS WHEN LATTER GOT THEIR BRIBE MONEY.

Suppose, Senators, you found one man coming out of a house he had burglarized with two other men at 1 o'clock in the morning; suppose stolen property taken from that house that night was found in the possession of these two men; suppose none was found in the possession of the third man who came with them out of the house that had been burglarized.

Would he be acquitted in any court in the land, especially if he could not explain how it was that he was with them; especially if he admitted that he was in the house when the burglary occurred; especially if he had means of concealing the stolen goods? I do not know how anyone else may feel, but as for me the evidence shows that Joe Clark was about the worst of the "nice bunch," because he was the nerviest and cleverest.

The fact that this police magistrate in a little country town bought diamonds—a hundred and fifteen dollars' worth—has been made light of. I sat amused at the way Senators wafted it away. "Why," they said, "that is not so very much—a person buying $115 worth of diamonds."

Of course, not with Senators. It would not be so strange a thing with us. Many here can afford to buy diamonds. Many here buy diamonds frequently. The Senator, no doubt, buys $115 worth of diamonds quite frequently.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is not pointing to me, I hope. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does not the Senator buy diamonds? It was said here the other day that the purchase of diamonds by a member of the Legislature of Illinois was so trivial an affair that nobody ought to notice it. What does the Senator think of a police justice in a little country town buying $115 worth of diamonds? It is not so insignificant a thing after all. And he testified to——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does seem to me that that might occur and yet not be a dishonest transaction.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It might—it just might, possibly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly it might. If it only appeared that Hon. Joe Clark, who was engaged in the "lumber business," had bought $115 worth of diamonds in the middle of the legislative session—well, that would be singular, but it would not be convincing of any crime.

But when we find that Joe was with the other members of the "nice bunch," as the Senator from New Hampshire so well says, who got the other money; when it appears that he was the man who helped set up the alibi to which I am going to refer in a moment, it does begin to look rather conclusive.

Mr. GALLINGER. It shows he got some diamonds.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It shows he got some diamonds, and if he got diamonds, he had money to get diamonds with, and if he could afford to buy diamonds he must have had a little excess of money. Men do not buy diamonds every day—not unless they are engaged in a lucrative business.

[At this point Mr. BEVERIDGE yielded the floor for the day.]

"BATHROOM" SHEPHARD.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish now to resume at the point of Mr. Shephard's testimony. Shephard was one of Lee O'Neil Browne's faction. He is a banker in Jerseyville, Ill., I believe. It is curious how many bankers there were in this legislature. He testified that he was approached by Browne to vote for the sitting Member a week before the election occurred.

That will be found on page 318 of the record; and yet, although Shephard was approached a week before the election occurred, he never appears to have said a word about it. Later on, I think on the day of the election, he was again approached by Browne and by Alschuler a second time. I will, lest there be any doubt, read that. This is the second visit.

He [Browne] said, calling me by my first name, Harry—of course, my real name is Henry—but he says, "Harry, aren't you going to vote for LORIMER to-day?" and I said, "No; indeed I am not." "My soul," he said, "are you going to throw us down that way? All of your friends are going to vote for LORIMER," etc.

Then came up the conversation concerning the post office, which, I believe, is admitted by everyone, and therefore requires no further extended comment. Shephard testified that the promise of influence concerning preventing two men being appointed postmaster and assistant postmaster was "the only consideration for his vote." I am not going to enlarge upon that. As a strict matter of law, nobody will deny that that is bribery. That is bribery in law, but I am not going to enlarge upon it. It is not so serious, because it is not uncommon.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Do I understand the Senator from Indiana to declare that as a matter of law it is bribery to say that you will not recommend or indorse a certain man?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; that is not what was said—that he would use his influence to prevent their appointment. I say that as a matter of law, although I am not going to enlarge upon it, that is as illegal a thing in elections as the promise that he would use his influence affirmatively. What is the difference?

Mr. BAILEY. As a matter of law, I think it perfectly true that if Shephard had said, "If you will give me this office, or give my son or my brother this office," it would have been a corrupt agreement. But a promise that he would not give it to somebody else was not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No——

Mr. BAILEY. Let me put this case to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator has inadvertently stated the facts incorrectly. It was not that the sitting Member would not use his influence in favor of some one. It was that he would use his influence against some one.

Mr. BAILEY. I stated that. If that was not exactly what I said, then I did not say what I intended to say.

Let me ask the Senator this question: Does the Senator believe that if the name of a postmaster, which had been sent to the Senate under a recommendation, was afterwards withdrawn on the demand of a legislator and that legislator predicated that demand upon a threat to vote against a Senator in the legislature, it would be corrupt to withdraw the nomination or to withdraw the recommendation?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Corrupt on the part of the President?

Mr. BAILEY. On the part of the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think that the decisions, although that is not this case by any manner of means, leave no doubt about it. Certainly it would be corrupt in law. But as I have said I do not enlarge upon it very much. I had not heard it disputed heretofore that this was the law.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator understand that I say if the sitting Member had promised an office to a man for his vote, it would have been a corrupt agreement; but if he simply promised that some man objectionable should not have the benefit of his influence, it was just such an agreement as every Senator and every other man engaged in politics make? But in a case where a Senator had recommended the appointment of a postmaster and where under the threat of a member of the legislature that recommendation was withdrawn, does the Senator think that is corrupt?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, although I am obliged to the Senator for asking my opinion, I do not think that my opinion or anybody else's on that statement would be important, because that is not this case as I understand the facts here to be, and I can turn to them if there is any dispute. I have them all marked down here and I shall read them if the Senator says so.

Mr. BAILEY. That is not this case, but the case I cite is a case where the record of the Senate may show is an existing case which I may call attention to later.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It may be an existing case, but it would not be pertinent unless it was this case. The practice on that matter is loose. I am talking about the law. I ask the Senator from Texas if he does not agree to this proposition: It is agreed that if a candidate for office secures a vote by promising to use his influence to get an office for that legislator or a friend or anybody else, and the legislator makes the getting of the office for him the consideration of his vote, that is corrupt.

Take the converse of the proposition then. If the legislator is more deeply interested in preventing a man from holding office than in getting some man appointed to an office, and he makes it a consideration for his vote that the man for whom he votes will use his influence to prevent that appointment, would not that be just as corrupt as if it were done affirmatively? However, Mr. President, I pass that.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. Will the Senator permit me to call attention to the statute of Illinois?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. OWEN. It is as follows:

31. Whoever corruptly, directly or indirectly, gives any money or other bribe, present, reward, promise, contract, obligation, or security for the payment of any money, present, reward, or any other thing, to any judge, justice of the peace, sheriff, coroner, clerk, constable, jailor, attorney general, State's attorney, county attorney, member of the general assembly, or other officer, ministerial or judicial, or to any legislative, executive, or other officer of any incorporated city, town, or village, or any officer elected or appointed by virtue of any law of this State, after his election or appointment, either before or after he has qualified, with intent to influence his act, vote, opinion, decision, or judgment on any matter, question, cause, or proceeding which may be then pending, or may by law come or be brought before him in his official capacity, or to cause him to execute any of the powers in him vested, or to perform any duty of him required, with partiality or favor, or otherwise than is required by law, or in consideration that such officer being authorized in the line of his duty to contract for any advertising, or for the furnishing of any labor or material shall directly or indirectly arrange to receive, or shall receive, or shall withhold from the parties so contracted with, any portion of the contract price, whether that price be fixed by law or by agreement, or in consideration that such officer hath nominated or appointed any person to any office or exercised any power in him vested, or performed any duty of him required with partiality or favor, or otherwise contrary to law, the person so giving, and the officer so receiving, any money, bribe, present, reward, promise, contract, obligation, or security, with intent or for the purpose or consideration aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of bribery, and shall be punished by confinement in the penitentiary for a term not less than one year nor more than five years.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, passing that, because while it may be legal bribery, if I can use such an expression—I mean bribery in law—the Senator from Texas accurately says there is a good deal of that going on around. Nobody pretends there is not. That might not be sufficient in practice. It is sufficient in law. In law it is bribery, and in practice it is essentially immoral. Both law and public morals are clear on that.

"BATHROOM" SHEPHARD WITH THE OTHERS.

After this transaction, and after the election of the sitting Member, Mr. Shephard testifies that he met Browne in St. Louis on the 21st of June in response to a letter from Browne asking him to come there. This was the first celebrated meeting, the meeting where the first distribution occurred. Shephard admits he was there.

It was there that Browne paid out the $1,000 to Link and Beckemeyer and Luke. Link and Beckemeyer confessed; and I think I shall show that Luke did confess, although he had no opportunity of doing it before the committee. He was there with the rest of these men when this money was distributed.

If Senators believe that Link got his $1,000 there, if they believe that Beckemeyer got his $1,000 there, and it was traced immediately afterwards to a bank away from his town, and that the others got their money there, they must conclude that Shephard got his money there also. Otherwise, why was Shephard there?

The fantastic story that Browne gives as to why this meeting was called I shall demonstrate to the satisfaction of the most reluctant mind is so grotesque as to offend common sense. So Shephard was there. Shephard was with the other men who confessed that they got the money, and Shephard admits that he was called into the "jack-pot" bathroom by "Jack Pot" Wilson. Not only that, but White testifies to it.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fatal defect of this testimony. Shephard admits that he met Browne by appointment. He admits that he met Wilson and all the others; and the others testify that they met Wilson by appointment. But Shephard says that he met Wilson by pure accident, and that the reason why he was in St. Louis on that fatal day is because he ran in to get some automobile packing. A banker ordinarily would have the chauffeur attend to buying automobile packing. Also Shephard visited the safety-deposit box that he owned on the very forenoon he himself admits having met Wilson.

I repeat, and shall repeat again, that Shephard was seen going into the bathroom with Wilson. It was in this bathroom that the other money was distributed, and Shephard admits that he was called into the bathroom. I ask Senators to consider the excuse that Shephard gives:

Q. Did Wilson take you into the bathroom?—A. He called me into the bathroom; yes, sir.

Later on he testifies, as all will concede—I have the pages marked here—that although he was called into the bathroom, the reason why Wilson called him into the bathroom, Shephard swears, was to ask him the name of a lady he saw Shephard dining with two months before in Springfield. Is that credible? Is it possible that Wilson met Shephard down there in St. Louis and called him into the bathroom to ask the name of a lady he had seen him dining with in Springfield two months before?

Mr. President, when Mr. Shephard gave that excuse every lawyer here knows that he was trumping up an excuse, and he admits having been in the bathroom only because convincing testimony was at hand to show that he did go there. He had only missed indictment himself by not denying that he was in St. Louis, as the others did.

Now, Mr. President, I do not think it is necessary to take much of the time of the Senate on this creature Shephard.

LUKE AND HIS MYSTERIOUS $950.

Mr. President, the next man involved is Representative Luke. Representative Luke had died before this investigation came about, but it is established, and, I believe, not denied, that he, too, like White and Beckemeyer and Link and Clark and Shephard, met Wilson on the 15th of July, and that he, like all of them except White, met Browne at St. Louis at the Southern Hotel on the occasion of the first distribution of putrid cash.

The testimony of Luke's wife has been read here so many times that I will not read it again, but she testifies, although evidently an unwilling witness, that at one time when he had been away he returned home with $950, as I remember it, in twenty-dollar bills, or bills of unusual denomination at least.

She says it was before he went to St. Louis, but I ask Senators to read her testimony as to whether she knows it was before or after he had been to St. Louis. Is not that one of a piece with the tracing of the money, as in the case of Beckemeyer, who deposited it in a bank in a town which was not his home, where he had to be identified; as in the case of White, and deposited it with the cashier of a department store in St. Louis, and exhibited it to Mr. Dennis and Miss Vandeveer; as in the case of Holstlaw, who deposited his money in the State Bank of Chicago?

This man Luke was there about this time. After an unexplained absence from home he returned home with the unusual sum of $950 in bills. Luke was a member of the Browne faction. He was the man who had nominated Stringer, either in the caucus or in the legislature. And he was a "jolly, sociable fellow," so Browne testifies; and Browne of the "marvelous intellect" ought to know such a man when he sees him.

Now, Mr. President, Mr. Murray was produced. I wish the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER] was here, because he was present at that time and he can tell us all about it.

He was the State's attorney, as I remember, in Luke's county, to whom Luke had made a statement as to where this money came from, or at least about this whole transaction. He was produced before the committee, but was not permitted to testify. No Senator who was a member of that subcommittee has been able to tell us upon what legal ground the declarations of Beckemeyer to his schoolboy friend, Gray, to Murray, and to Ford were not admitted in view of the fact that they were declarations against interest, but we do not need it.

In this case, however, Mr. President, I assume that the committee must have refused to let Mr. Murray, the State's attorney, tell what Luke told him about this transaction on the ground that it was hearsay. And yet it was directly in violation of the precedents in the Clark case. Here is what happened in the case of the declaration of Mr. Flinn in the Clark case.

Clark's attorneys objected to the declaration of Flinn being admitted in evidence upon the ground that Flinn was dead and that it was hearsay testimony. The chairman ruled as follows—and it does not appear that any member of the committee, which at that time was composed of unusually good lawyers, objected to this rule; the record shows that it was the unanimous view of the committee, because there was no objection—

The CHAIRMAN. Anything Mr. Flinn said to him. Mr. Flinn is shown to have changed his vote. Now, the suggestion appears to be that, possibly, he may have been influenced to change it. That is what we are investigating. He is going to state what Mr. Flinn said to him about methods being used to influence votes.

"A WEIRD RULING."

I was very curious, Mr. President, to know why this committee, which is not now composed of the same Senators who composed the committee that made the Clark ruling, could possibly have made such a ruling, and I was even more astounded when I recalled what occurred in the election case from Utah, in a matter not of the validity of the election of the senior Senator [Mr. SMOOT], but of his expulsion.

In that case members of that committee, who at that time served as I did upon it, will remember that not only hearsay was freely admitted, if indeed it was not invited, but rumors were freely admitted, if indeed they were not invited, and testimony as to what a newspaper had said was admitted, if not invited.

I have all of these instances here, Mr. President, more than 40 in number, where this committee, composed largely of the same members who now compose it and with the same chairman, under the chairman's ruling admitted hearsay, rumor, and newspaper statements. I shall not, of course, take your time to read all of them, but I am going to give you one example, which impressed itself on me.

It appears, Mr. President—I do not want to be harsh, but it would seem that in the exclusion of the testimony of Gray and Ford and Murray as to a declaration of Beckemeyer against interest and in the refusal to permit State Attorney Murray to testify as to Luke's statement about this transaction, when contrasted with the rulings of this same committee in the Smoot case—that it depends a good deal on whose ox is gored. It was a weird ruling—the exclusion of Beckemeyer and Luke's confession to others.

I will give you a ruling of our committee in the Smoot case. It impressed itself very much on me at the time, and Senators who were on that committee will remember it, and it is only one of scores. I have them marked. This was a case where a man by the name of Critchlow was testifying that a Mormon bishop had a revelation from the Lord on an electric-light plant.

When cross-examination came, it did not appear even that this witness was testifying that the Mormon bishop told him that. No! But that the attorney on the losing side of the case had told witness Critchlow that some person had told him, the attorney, that the Mormon bishop had a revelation from the Lord; and here is how it was summed up. I put this question to Mr. Critchlow at the end—and I want the Senate to pay attention to it, in view of the subcommittee's action in the present case:

Senator BEVERIDGE. So that that testimony amounts to this: That you say that a man said to you that somebody else said to him that the president of the stake had a revelation on the subject of an electric-light plant at this place, that he laid it before the council, and there was a disruption, and so forth?

Mr. CRITCHLOW. A disruption?

Senator BEVERIDGE. Between the council, or the people, or somebody?

Mr. Critchlow, the witness, who was himself a lawyer, replied:

I take it, in a legal sense that is as close as it comes to being evidence.

Now, if that kind of testimony could be admitted in the Smoot case, if the declaration of the dead man, Flinn, could be proved in the Clark case, what do Senators think of excluding the declarations of Mr. Luke in this case? The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER] was present at that time. He is not here now, or I should ask him—as I think I shall hereafter—to rise and tell the Senate what occurred in that connection.

Luke was there. He met Browne at the time Browne distributed the money at the place Browne distributed the money to the others. He met Wilson at the time Wilson distributed money to the others at the same place. He came home after having been absent, his wife did not know where—I want Senators to mark that—did not know where, with $950, $50 less than the first distribution and $50 more than the last distribution, and in $20 bills.

His wife says that this was before he went to St. Louis, but she also said that it was after Luke had been away—she did not know where. So that if he had been away, and she did not know where, how does she know that it was not to St. Louis where he had been?

So, Mr. President, I was convinced when I read this testimony that Mr. Luke shared the plunder. When the Senator from Tennessee arrives I think I shall take the responsibility of saying that Luke stated that he had gotten it.

So, Mr. President, we have Holstlaw, White, Link, Beckemeyer, Shephard, Clark, and Luke—7 who received money from Browne, Wilson, and Broderick, who gave them the money. That makes 10, but exclude Luke, Shephard, and Clark, and you still have 7 filthy votes; and I trust that I will have the attention of any Senator who thinks that 7 are not enough to vitiate this election under any view of the law when I come to discuss the Senate cases on that.

But is this all of this transaction? No, Mr. President. Three other men testified that they were corruptly approached. In view of the fact that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] the other day gave a good deal of attention to these three men, I shall ask the Senate to permit me for a time to beg its attention to that matter.

Mr. President, the first is Meyers. Meyers was a banker. The Browne gang, it appears, thought bankers easy and willing game. Holstlaw, banker; Sheppard, banker; Beckemeyer, son of banker, etc. But Meyers, banker, fooled them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. For what purpose?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As there are only seven Senators in the Chamber at this time, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator will not do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Senators are at luncheon, and, besides, I guess we will have to speak to the American people. Senators perhaps do not want to hear the testimony, the facts, and the law, but to vote without them. It is no matter of mine. I hope the Senator will not call for a quorum.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I press the point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Chamberlain	La Follette	Shively
Beveridge	Clapp	Martin	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Cullom	Newlands	Stephenson
Bourne	Curtis	Nixon	Sutherland
Bradley	Dillingham	Oliver	Swanson
Brandegee	Flint	Overman	Taliaferro
Briggs	Foster	Owen	Taylor
Brown	Frazier	Page	Thornton
Bulkeley	Gallinger	Percy	Warner
Burkett	Gamble	Perkins	Warren
Burnham	Jones	Rayner	Wetmore
Burton	Kean	Richardson

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Senators who have paid any attention to the testimony doubtless think that they have heard it all; and yet I call the attention of Senators now to the fact that Mrs. Luke said that she saw her husband in the possession of $950 after he had been away—she did not know where, and therefore, of course, if she did not know where he had been he might have been in St. Louis or any place else. Taking her testimony to be true, that this was before he went to St. Louis on the trip that she knew about, how does she know that he was not at St. Louis on the trip she says she did not know about?

There was quite an animated discussion here the other day between the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Idaho about the fact that Mrs. Luke's testimony exculpated Luke because she testified that this money was in his possession before he went to St. Louis, but she says it was after he had returned—I hope I will get the attention of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] to that—after he had returned from a trip to some place, SHE DID NOT KNOW WHERE IT WAS. So if that is true he may have been at St. Louis. Anyhow, he came back from that trip with this money, and he HAD BEEN TO ST. LOUIS TWICE. She only testifies to one trip to St. Louis.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. OWEN. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that Mrs. Luke, in referring to the visit to St. Louis, was referring to the visit in July, the last visit, where the $900 apiece was distributed, and was not referring to his previous trip, and her evidence plainly shows that, as the Senator from Indiana has pointed out.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That, then, establishes this beyond a question of a doubt, because if the St. Louis trip, to which she refers when she says it was before he went there, was the Wilson trip where $900 was given, then the trip that he did take when she did not know where he was, was the first St. Louis trip where he met Browne and got $1,000, and came back with $950 of it. We hear from the testimony of Mr. Browne that Luke was a very sociable fellow—Charley Luke—and he was enjoying himself, as the record shows, down in St. Louis. Apparently he got rid of $50 of the $1,000. Mr. President, did the distinguished occupant of the Chair ever hear of a more conclusive tracing of the spoils of corruption?

"APPROACHED" BUT NOT CORRUPTED.

We come now to three witnesses whom nobody can denounce with reason or without it, and these are the three men who swear that they were corruptly approached. The first one to whom I wish to call attention is Representative Meyers.

Representative Meyers was a Democratic representative, a member of the Browne faction, a banker, 40 years old, a former county treasurer. I want to call the attention of the Senate particularly to Meyers's character. Nothing has ever been said against him. Evidently he was a man of high repute among his people until, as the Senator from Wisconsin suggests, we got into this debate. He had been their county treasurer, a position of the highest trust. Evidently he served well and honorably in that office, because the people elected him as their representative in the legislature.

Meyers swears that Browne approached him. You will find the record of it on page 312. I will read it:

Q. How long have you been engaged in the banking business?—A. The last time about two and one-half years.

Q. Prior to that, what business were you engaged in?—A. Well, I was in the banking business and county treasurer of the county at the same time, about six years ago.

Then he testifies to being elected to the legislature.

Q. Mr. Meyers, who was the minority leader of the Democratic Party of the house?—A. Lee O'Neil Browne.

Q. Were you a member of the Browne minority faction?—A. I was.

* * * * * * *

Q. Mr. Meyers, do you recall the election on the 26th day of May, 1909, of WILLIAM LORIMER to the United States Senate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Prior to the time of that vote on the 26th of May, 1909, when the joint assembly were in session, did you have any conversation with Lee O'Neil Browne?—A. I had.

Q. Where?—A. In the house there.

Q. While the two houses were in joint session?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long before the taking of the vote for United States Senator?—A. Fifteen or twenty minutes, I do not know just how long; just a short time.

Q. Will you tell the committee who sent for you, if any one?—A. Well, there was a page came to me and said Mr. Browne wanted to see me.

Q. Where were you when he came to you and told you Mr. Browne desired to see you?—A. I was at my desk.

Q. How far removed from Mr. Browne's desk was your desk?—A. My desk was three rows back of Mr. Browne's.

Q. Pursuant, or in response to that message, did you go to Mr. Browne's desk?—A. I did.

Q. Will you tell the committee what, if any, conversation you then had with Mr. Browne?—A. I went down to his desk and sat down on a chair right beside him, and he says, "We are going to put this over to-day, and I would like you to go with us." I says, "Lee, I can't do it."

"THE READY NECESSARY."

Q. What else?—A. Then he says that there are some good State jobs to give away and the READY NECESSARY. I says, "I can't help it; I can't go with you."

Q. "The ready necessary," that is correct, is it, that I repeat?—A. Yes, sir.

Now I come to Senator FRAZIER'S examination of this man, Representative Meyers. I do not wish to be offensively complimentary to the Senator from Tennessee, but I say this, that any lawyer or any layman who will read this testimony will recognize the fact that the keenest and most lawyer-like examinations in this whole book were those conducted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FRAZIER]. I have seen him do the same admirable work in hearings held by the Committee on Territories. The witness was asked what he supposed was meant by "the ready necessary."

The WITNESS. I supposed he meant money; I did not know what else.

* * * * * * *

Q. You say that was one of the things that Lee O'Neil Browne said to you, "There are plenty of State jobs"?—A. Yes.

Q. And "ready necessary."

Senator FRAZIER takes up the examination—

Senator FRAZIER. Did Mr. Browne make any explanation of what he meant, "We are going to put this over to-day?"—A. No, sir.

Q. What did you understand him to mean by that; his election?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was in that connection that he stated that there were State jobs and plenty of "ready necessary?"—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You declined to receive either a State job or plenty of the "ready necessary"?—A. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

Q. You voted for Mr. LORIMER?—A. Yes, sir.

This answer was inadvertent, and Meyers later corrects it. He did not vote for Mr. LORIMER.

Judge HANECY. Were any State jobs or any "ready necessary" offered to you by anybody?—A. JUST AS I STATED IT RIGHT HERE.

Q. Well, Senator FRAZIER asked you if you did not refuse to receive any of the State jobs or any of the "ready necessary" and voted for Senator LORIMER. Now, I want to know, did anybody ever offer you a State job?—A. Only as Browne stated.

Q. There was not anything said in the form of a job, except that general statement there as to the State job or the "ready necessary?"—A. No, sir.

Mr. President, if we believe that Meyers was corruptly approached by Browne, all legal authorities and common sense commands us to consider it a circumstance of the highest corroborative importance. Those who are upholding the title to this seat in this case recognize that to be true; therefore Meyers has been attacked on this floor.

The counsel for the sitting Member saw the importance of Meyers's testimony and saw that it had to be disposed of; and how was it disposed of? By the testimony of a page, McCann, which I ask every Senator to read before he votes. That page, McCann, declares he was standing by Browne's seat all the time during the whole session and that Meyers never came to Browne's seat. That testimony bears on its face indisputable evidence of manufacture.

"PERJURY" WITHOUT A MOTIVE.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that the testimony of Meyers has been challenged here—and it would not have been challenged here if the upholders of this title on this floor had not seen that it was necessary to destroy its credibility—I want to ask the Senate what motive Meyers, the friend and follower of Browne, had for committing perjury? I am going to repeat that two or three times.

If Senators think that Representative Meyers, county treasurer, banker, representative of his county in the legislature, Democrat, follower of Lee O'Neil Browne, belonging to his faction, committeed perjury in testifying to Browne's corruptly approaching him, what was his motive for committing perjury?

Men do not deliberately walk into the danger of the penitentiary without a motive. Why did Meyers swear falsely, if he did swear falsely? Does any Senator here believe, does any member of the subcommittee believe, and I put the question directly to everyone who is here, that Representative Meyers committed perjury when he says that Lee O'Neil Browne asked him to vote for the sitting Member, saying, "There are State jobs and plenty of the ready necessary?" Once more I pause for a reply.

I will make it broader. I ask any member of the committee who is not a member of the subcommittee, whether any member of the committee or of this subcommittee believes that Representative Meyers committed perjury when he made that statement. I ask the opinion of the chairman of the committee, who sits before me, on that point.

I pause again for a reply. I have asked for the third time. Does anybody here believe that Representative Meyers committed perjury in testifying before the subcommittee when he testifies that one Lee O'Neil Browne, his factional leader, asked him to vote for the sitting Member, and said State jobs were around and there was "plenty of the ready necessary." There is a strange silence.

I put this to Senators: If you think Meyers did commit perjury, what motive had he for committing it? He must be a man like Iago, of "motiveless malignity," if he did commit perjury. Yet he is a reputable man, enjoying the confidence of his community—charged with committing perjury without a motive. Is that comprehensible?

If he did not commit perjury, if he told the truth, if others did approach him asking him to vote for the sitting Member in the language and with the inducements which Meyers testifies to, what effect do Senators think that testimony has upon the testimony of Link and Beckemeyer and White and Holstlaw?

WHAT MOTIVE HAD TERRILL?

The next man who testifies to have been corruptly approached was Henry Terrill. He says, on page 498, that Griffin—about whom we heard from the sitting Member day before yesterday, was "delivered" to the sitting Member by Hinky Dink—Griffin had told Terrill. I will read it.

Q. Will you tell the committee who, when, and where and all of the circumstances surrounding it?

That is this approach.

A. Well, Mr. Griffin, a member of the house also. I think he comes from Cook County, but I don't remember what district. He never made me any offer of cash. HE ASKED ME TO VOTE FOR Mr. LORIMER. I asked him what there would be in it, and he said: "A THOUSAND DOLLARS, ANYWAY." That was all.

"That was all"—and that was enough. "A thousand dollars, anyway," was the exact amount that Link, White, Beckemeyer, Luke, Clark, and Shephard got at the first distribution.

The examination continues:

Q. When was this conversation?—A. This was either the night before the election of Mr. LORIMER or two nights before. I am not certain. I think it was the night previous.

Senator BURROWS takes up the examination:

Q. Did you ask him what there would be in it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you mean by that?—A. I meant in money—is what I meant. I wanted to find out——

Q. Do you mean that you meant to intimate to him that you could be purchased?—A. No, sir.

We were told the other day that Terrill was the solicitor of a bribe, when Terrill's own testimony shows that, having heard the rumors, he was curious to find out. What else?

What did you ask it for?

Questions the Senator from Michigan.

A. To find out what he was getting.

Q. What he was getting?—A. Yes, sir.

The Senator from Texas the other day said, in pointing out that Terrill's testimony could not be believed, that "if any Senator will read the testimony of Griffin he will see that that man was the last man in the world to be used as an agent of bribery."

But the sitting Member says in his speech that Griffin was "delivered" to him by "Hinky Dink," a Chicago politician of whom the country knows a good deal. Therefore, instead of being the last man in the world to do this business, would Griffin not be the ideal man for that nefarious job?

"HINKY DINK" "DELIVERS" GRIFFIN'S VOTE.

While I am on this point, Mr. President, I might as well correct another thing. The sitting Member—I think I quote him correctly; if I do not, I hope I will be set right now—stated the other day that Griffin voted for him because of "Hinky Dink;" that "Hinky Dink," the sitting Member's boyhood friend and fellow politician, although of the Democratic complexion, said, "You can have Griffin's vote;" and, as I remember the general statement of the sitting Member, "Hinky Dink delivered Griffin's vote to me." That is correct, I believe. If it is not, please set me right.

Now, what is the testimony? Evidently the testimony had not been read or else Mr. Griffin and "Hinky Dink" did not know what the sitting Member was going to say in his speech, because here is the testimony at page 575, Griffin on the stand:

Q. Lee O'Neil Browne never asked you to vote for him?

That is, for the sitting Member.

No, sir.

Griffin says.

Q. Did anyone ever ask you to vote for him?

Griffin answers under oath:

No, sir.

Yet we are assured by the sitting Member that Griffin was "delivered" to him by "Hinky Dink." It is a puzzling, not to say melancholy, conflict of statement and testimony.

Thus, Mr. President, one by one the unsubstantial excuses disappear for members' votes and the damning circumstances under which they were procured. Gradually, as we examine the record, the cloud of confusion is vanishing that has been blown up in this Chamber in order to raise in Senators' minds a doubt.

Nobody shows any motive for Meyers perjuring himself. Very well. I ask the same question as to Terrill. What was Terrill's motive for perjuring himself? Those who are upholding this title, in order to get rid of the testimony of both Meyers and Terrill, both of whom say they were corruptly approached, one with an offer of a thousand dollars, and the other with an offer of plenty of the "ready necessary," intimate that these two men perjured themselves.

What was their motive? Will the Senator from New Hampshire tell me that, since he is so determined in this case? Why did Henry Terrill perjure himself and render himself liable to the penitentiary? What was the reason?

So, Mr. President, it appears there was no motive for Meyers committing perjury. There was no motive for Terrill committing perjury. Meyers was a Democrat; Terrill was a Republican. What was the motive for Henry Terrill committing perjury? Men have motives for committing perjury. It is too important a matter.

Here are three men—Meyers, Terrill, and Groves—approached corruptly who did not accept the bribe. Here are seven men approached corruptly who did accept the bribe.

Those men who accepted the bribe are denounced as infamous scoundrels, not to be believed because they accepted the bribe and because they confessed to doing so; but here are three men who were offered the same thing and did not accept. Yet they, too, are denounced as scoundrels because they dared tell of the attempt to bribe them. Everybody scoundrels, according to Senators who uphold this election, except Browne, Wilson, Broderick, and their kind.

I ask again, what was their motive for perjury? They were not threatened with indictment, were they? They were not put under the "third degree." Meyers, Democrat, and Terrill, Republican, both testify to corrupt approach without any motive for committing perjury. And now I come to Groves—poor old Jacob Groves—who has been treated pretty harshly in this discussion. I will not stop to read his testimony, but I will recite it and ask the Senators to correct me if I am misstating it.

ANOTHER MOTIVELESS PERJURER.

Groves testifies that one Douglas Patterson came to his room in the nighttime while he was asleep and asked him to vote for the sitting Member the next day. Groves says—

> He thought if I could vote for him that probably a couple more would do so, and he would like to make it unanimous on the Democratic side for LORIMER, and he said it might be a good thing for both of us if I would do so.

Groves interpreted that as a corrupt approach. Evidently he is an excitable old man. He appears to have that old-fashioned honesty which can not be calm when corruptly approached. His indignation was aroused and he resented the approach and raised his voice, whereupon he says Dug Patterson asked him to close the transom and not to talk so loud.

Now, I will prove that Groves told the truth, in the opinion of the subcommittee. The subcommittee believed Groves told the truth, because if the subcommittee had not believed that Groves told the truth they would have subpœnaed Dug Patterson, would they not?

But Dug Patterson was not subpœnaed. Not only that, but the counsel for the sitting Member believed that Groves told the truth, because if they had believed that Groves was lying they would have demanded that Dug Patterson be produced. Is there any escape from that conclusion?

Here is one question by Senator FRAZIER and answer by Groves:

> Senator FRAZIER. Mr. Groves, when you said to this man Patterson that there was not enough money in Springfield to hire you or bribe you to vote for LORIMER, was it at that time that he requested you not to talk so loud and closed the transom?—A. Yes; about that time.

He also testifies that Henry Terrill told him that he could have got a thousand dollars for voting for the sitting Member. The stenographer made Groves say that Terrill told him "he got a thousand dollars." When Groves discovered that he went on the stand and said: "No; that is not what I said. I said Terrill told me he could have got a thousand dollars."

Yet the Senator from Texas said the other day that on one day Groves testified Terrill said he got a thousand dollars, and the next day he said that Terrill told him he could have gotten a thousand dollars, and, the Senator from Texas asked, who can believe a man who swears that way?

But what the man swore to the second day he swore to the first day. It is plain that the stenographer's transcript left out the words "could have." It is asked of us, Who can believe such a man? Well, the subcommittee believed it, I repeat, time and again; otherwise they would have called Dug Patterson.

What motive or motives had Jacob Groves for committing perjury? Here is the most astounding story, I believe, ever presented in the history of any court or of any controversy—three men deliberately perjuring themselves, according to the upholders of this title, without any motive for doing so.

It passes belief, Mr. President. It is said there are plenty of votes here to uphold the election of the sitting Member. Well, when those votes are cast they will have to be cast in the face of that; for if you believe that Groves told the truth and Terrill told the truth and Meyers told the truth, all of whom had been approached corruptly, but none of whom did accept the proffered bribe, then the men told the truth also who swore they had been approached corruptly and did accept the proffered bribe and the bribe money was traced in their possession.

"MARVELOUS INTELLECT" BROWNE.

Now, Mr. President, we come to the most important witness in this transaction, Lee O'Neil Browne, the twentieth century Abraham Lincoln. Before I go into Mr. Lee O'Neil Browne's testimony, so that we can properly understand it, I want to read to the Senate what evidently the subcommittee thought of Lee O'Neil Browne. No wonder he was a successful minority leader. Evidently Lee O'Neil Browne hypnotized that subcommittee, because here is what the honorable Senator from Kentucky says as to him:

> I desire to say something in reference to Lee O'Neil Browne. I saw him upon the witness stand, watched him closely, and endeavored to form a correct opinion of him. He is a man of great intellect. In fact, he impressed me as being a man of MARVELOUS INTELLECT.

Remember, now, that we are going to examine the testimony not only of the leader of the minority faction but of a man of "marvelous intellect."

Everybody admits that Browne was the leader of his minority faction of 30 votes. That is conceded, is it not? If Browne alone had been corrupted it would have been more than sufficient to have vitiated this election even under the committee "precedents" that have been cited here and to which I shall come very shortly.

For the testimony shows that Browne's influence over his followers was something like that of a Scottish chieftain over his clan in the old days, when the burning cross was sent across the hills and dales of Scotland. He had the Chicago saloon keeper, Manny Abrahams, for the "bellwether" of his gang, and Browne testifies that Manny Abrahams voted as Browne wanted him to, "right or wrong," and that Browne's faction followed Manny Abrahams's lead.

So, even if Browne alone were corrupted and even if his followers knew nothing of it, the testimony shows that more than 7 votes would have followed him in voting for the sitting Member. As was established in the Caldwell case, where the opposing candidate was purchased to quit the field, that fact would be more than sufficient to vitiate the election, because that influence over his followers would have been enough to have given Mr. Caldwell his seat. I will not stop now to read the Caldwell case on that point, but I will stop long enough to read a short extract from the Payne case upon that point:

> If B, C, and D have promised to vote as A shall vote, if A be corrupt, four votes are gained by the process, although B, C, and D be innocent.

If there was any corruption in this case, you must admit that Lee O'Neil Browne was corrupted. Yet if he was, that one thing is sufficient to vitiate the election even under the easy and accommodating precedents that are relied upon by the committee.

Mr. President, before we go into this transaction, let us see how it was that Browne gave his signal. You will find that on page 665. This is a rich and historic page. This has given rise to something that will go down in our political literature on account of the keen analysis of the term "bellwether" the other day by the sitting Member, which he mistakenly attributed to the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], but which was really originated by Lee O'Neil Browne. This is what Browne testifies to:

> Q. As minority leader, I suppose your vote would be taken as a criterion on strictly party questions, to those who should follow you, as to party policy in voting?—A. Well, IN THIS TRANSACTION, I might say the "bellwether," so to speak, was Manny Abrahams—Emanual Abrahams. He is the first on the list, you will see, the first Democrat; and he was a very strong and stanch adherent of MINE, AND WHETHER RIGHT OR WRONG, HE BELIEVED WHAT I DID WAS RIGHT, and whenever they saw Manny Abrahams—those that wanted to know how I was going to vote—saw Manny Abrahams vote one way, THAT SETTLED IT.
> Q. And he voted for Mr. LORIMER?—A. Yes, sir.
> Q. I suppose you had an understanding with Mr. Abrahams that he was going to vote for Mr. LORIMER?—A. OH, YES; WITH ALL OF THEM—with all of them.

Browne states it twice, and yet the sitting Member said the other day that Manny Abrahams voted for him on his own account without any understanding; but Lee O'Neil Browne swears that Abrahams was Browne's "bellwether," and that he "had an understanding with him." Very well. Now, we have the scene laid.

The sitting Member in his speech last year said—I call the attention of Senators who are intending to vote to sustain this title to this—that Browne and himself had been "intimate for years." Here is what the man of "marvelous intellect" says as to that, and Browne volunteers it himself. In answer to a question he says:

I will suggest to you, Mr. Austrian, that I never knew Senator Lorimer except to see him and by reputation; a mere passing acquaintance; that is, HARDLY A SPEAKING ACQUAINTANCE, prior to possibly the expiration of the first third of the session.

That is what "Marvelous Intellect" Browne swears to—that he knew him merely to see him, "HARDLY HAD A SPEAKING ACQUAINTANCE;" and yet the sitting Member tells us with a good deal of passion—I have the speech here—that he and Browne had been "intimate for years," and that he recalled a conversation which he once had with "marvelous-intellect" Browne, wherein Browne told him he believed every word in the Bible from cover to cover. That is the sitting Member's version of the relationship; but Browne says he "knew him only to see him and by reputation—HARDLY A SPEAKING ACQUAINTANCE."

BROWNE IN CONSTANT CONFERENCE WITH THE SITTING MEMBER.

So, Mr. President, we have now the situation. Browne was approached, first, by Shanahan and, later, by Shurtleff to do all he could to get votes for the sitting Member. Then he had a meeting with the sitting Member. After he had agreed to get all the votes he could for the sitting Member, Browne testifies that he was in constant conference with the sitting Member.

Q. And then you conferred with him frequently, did you not?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Every day?—A. I presume every night. The conferences were at night mostly. Every night during the stay in Springfield.

Q. Yes. And those conferences lasted some hours, didn't they?—A. Sometimes they did, and sometimes there WERE A DOZEN OF THEM IN AN EVENING.

Q. And you kept Senator LORIMER posted as to your movements with reference to his candidacy, did you?—A. WE ALL KEPT EACH OTHER POSTED, just as any other campaign committee would do.

I ask the Senate to remember this thing when I come to a discussion of the law of agency in election cases. I am not going over it again, but it fixes the agency; and I have read decisions here which show that in law the sitting Member is bound by the acts of his agent, just as he would be if it involved the title to land, only more so.

Q. Well, I am asking you whether you kept him posted as to your movements with reference to his candidacy?—A. I have answered that.

Q. Well, did you keep him posted?—A. WE ALL KEPT EACH OTHER POSTED.

By the way, the "Marvelous Intellect" Browne might have used a little bit better grammar.

Q. What I want to know is, did you tell Mr. LORIMER, the candidate for United States Senator, as to what you were doing toward furthering his candidacy?—A. I presume I did.

Q. Did you tell him from time to time who, if anyone, had pledged his vote for Mr. LORIMER to you?—A. Well, now, as to whether I went over the list and told him specifically the ones at any one time, I can't tell you. I PRESUME, HOWEVER, THAT I DID, but I did assure him; I did finally assure him that there would be 30 Brown Democrats vote for him.

Mr. President, the sitting Member on the day before yesterday, in an effective climax, declared that Browne did not deliver those Democratic votes, but that "they delivered Browne." That was important and effective, but, unfortunately for the sitting Member, here is the record. What does Browne swear? Browne did not think he was being "delivered;" he did not consider himself that insignificant. Here is what Browne says:

A. I stated to Mr. Shurtleff, and I stated afterwards to Mr. LORIMER, that I would not consent to having a single one of the Democratic votes that I had any influence with cast for Senator LORIMER unless his election was an assured thing.

How could he consent? The sitting Member says that Browne had nothing to do with it, that Browne was "delivered," instead of delivering.

That I would not have those votes cast away absolutely. I told him and I told them both that I should rely upon their words, their words as men, to see to it that no roll call was started for the election of Mr. LORIMER for Senator until enough votes, all told, were secured.

Q. Was your consent asked?—A. I was consulted, or consulted myself with every one of the men that did vote for him. No; I will take that back. Not with every one. There was, perhaps, oh, maybe 30 or 35 per cent of them, possibly, I did not see personally at all, but that other members that were with me in the movement saw for me or took it upon themselves to see.

Remember this is the man who the sitting Member says was "delivered," instead of doing the delivering.

Q. Mr. Browne, when did you start to ascertain and round up, if I may use the expression, these 30 Browne Democrats whom you later told Mr. LORIMER would vote for him?—A. Oh, a short time after Mr. Shurtleff broached the subject to me, a few days afterwards.

So, Mr. President, the election came about. Meyers, Terrill, Groves, Link, White, Beckemeyer, and Holstlaw swore they were corruptly approached. It is of no use recounting the testimony that all but Meyers, Terrill, and Groves accepted the offer and got the bribe money.

Mr. FRAZIER. If it will not disturb the Senator, while he is on the testimony of minority leader Lee O'Neil Browne——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; it will not disburb me at all.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to call the Senator's attention to that part of the testimony of Lee O'Neil Browne, in which he is asked for the reason which induced him to change his vote and to secure the change of the votes of his followers in the legislature from the Democratic nominee, Mr. Stringer, to Mr. LORIMER, a Republican. In that testimony—and I call the Senator's attention to this piece of evidence—Mr. Browne was asked——

Mr. OWEN. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. FRAZIER. From page 656 of the record. Mr. Browne was first asked the question as to why he changed and with whom he consulted. He stated that his consultation was with Mr. Shurtleff, the speaker. Then he was asked as to whom he consulted of the leading Democrats in Illinois before he, the minority leader of the Democrats in the legislature, changed and secured the change of his followers from the Democratic nominee to this Republican. In answer to this question, Mr. Browne made this statement:

Q. When Mr. Shurtleff came to you and suggested to you the proposition to see whether or not there could be an arrangement or agreement by which the Democrats, or certain Democrats in the legislature, could be induced to vote for Mr. LORIMER, I believe you stated, upon yesterday that you told him you would take the matter under advisement?—A. Yes.

Q. And thereupon you did advise with certain friends, political friends or otherwise, outside of the legislature?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you any objection to telling some with whom you advised with respect to that matter?

His answer is:

A. No; I advised with my partner at home, my law partner, for one; I advised with a man by the name of—well, no, I did not advise with him before—I had decided, but I think I talked the matter over with an old partner of mine, a man I was in business with the first time, a man by the name of Ayers. I do not now recollect—although he was a Republican.

Being pressed further to name some influential Democrat in the State of Illinois with whom he, as minority leader of the Democratic Party in the legislature, consulted before he made this momentous change, by which he and his followers abandoned the Democratic nominee and voted for a Republican, he is asked:

Q. Did you advise with any one or number of people in Chicago with reference to the course you would take?—A. I received communications from a large number.

Q. Can you recall any?—A. I can recall one especially now. A man who used to be a very prominent man in my country, who is a prominent business man, James McQuay, of the Garden City Sand Co.

Q. Did you advise with anybody else in Chicago, any politicians or statesmen?—A. I do not now recall that I did.

So, it seems that Mr. Browne made this momentous change by which he and his 30 Democratic followers abandoned the Democratic nominee and voted for Mr. LORIMER, after having advised only with his old partner, who was a Republican, and with a man engaged in the sand business.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes. That was the man; that was the "marvelous intellect," according to the Senator from Kentucky, who was "delivered," instead of being the deliverer, according to the sitting Member.

"Oh, what a tangled web we weave,
When first we practice to"—deliver.

THE STRANGE ST. LOUIS "POLITICAL CONFERENCE."

Mr. President, the transaction occurred, the distribution day came, and Mr. Browne meets these men at St. Louis—all of them but White; and the reason he did not meet White at St. Louis was because he had seen him in Chicago on the 16th day of June and paid him the bulk of White's first installment four days before he went to St. Louis.

I insist that every Senator who intends to vote to support this title shall give the country his opinion as to the reason that Browne gives for going to St. Louis. I will not read it but I will state it—and if I do not state it accurately I again ask any Senator to correct me now.

Browne says that he went to St. Louis on the 21st of July, taking a long, hot, arduous trip to meet these men who, with the exception of Shephard and Clark, swear they got $1,000 each from him there; that he went there and met them there for the purpose of talking over politics.

Browne says that the reason of his visit to St. Louis and the meeting of these men was that he intended again to be a candidate for minority leader and that he wanted to talk with his followers, and that was his only reason for going to St. Louis.

Now, mark that. He went July 21 to St. Louis to see these men about a minority leadership which was more than a year and a half in the future, about a minority leadership in a legislature to which Browne himself had not yet been elected. What does the Senate think of that—a year and six months off? He went to see them there for that purpose, although he had seen all of them within less than three or four weeks.

Browne went there, he took that extraordinary journey, and saw them about "politics," although he had been constantly in their company for four or five months in the legislative session. He asked Beckemeyer to meet him in St. Louis on this important mission of talking politics, although he had seen Beckemeyer at Starving Rock only a few days before. Is that credible? Is there an intellect here that can accept that explanation?

But that is not all, Mr. President. Browne could not remember a word of that notable conversation. The only thing that he could remember was that he talked with Mike Link about pacing horses, and yet the Senator from Kentucky assures us in his speech that Browne is a man of "marvelous intellect." Browne takes this improbable trip, this stupendously foolish trip, to see men about a campaign that was a year and a half off, although he had seen the same men within three weeks. He made a trip through the dirt and the dust and the heat of midsummer to talk "politics" with them, and then can not remember a word that he said to them.

Now I call attention to a point which, if this were a court and we were arguing the report of the master in chancery, this "marvelous intellect's" testimony would be utterly discredited. Now, mark you, Browne made this important trip and then could not remember a word of the conversation. His memory is horribly bad or horribly convenient as to this important conference.

"MARVELOUS INTELLECT" BROWNE'S MARVELOUS MEMORY.

Yet, if you will turn to page 627, you will find that Mr. Browne, who could not remember one word of the conversation that he went 260 miles to have, can remember how late, TO A MINUTE, a train was during the session of the legislature, and that was much longer ago, as the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] suggests.

This "marvelous intellect," as the Senator from Kentucky calls him, who could not recall one word of the conversation which was exceedingly important to himself and for which he made the trip to St. Louis, was yet able not only to remember the very minute to which a train was late, but also the order in which the hotel guests registered. Now, I want to read that to the Senate:

The WITNESS. The 24th day of May, 1909, was on Monday—

This was about the busiest period of Browne's life, and he could have forgotten things then, if ever—

The WITNESS. The 24th day of May, 1909, was on Monday. I came to Springfield the day before, Sunday, the 23d, and registered at the St. Nicholas Hotel and occupied my usual quarters. I did not see Mr. White during the day of May 24. The Alton train, known as the "Kansas City hummer" or "K. C. hummer," is due in Springfield at 11.15 at night. That is the train people interested in legislative matters and members that come by the Alton usually come on. On the night of May 24 Mr. Thomas Dawson came down on that train. I met him in the lobby of the hotel when he came in. The train was late that night and, as I have discovered, did not get to Springfield until, as I remember, 11.41.

He was the leader of the faction arranging for an election one year and a half in the future, and yet he can not remember a word of his conversation down in St. Louis with these men whom he had called down there; and yet he had such a marvelously accurate memory that he remembers how late the "K. C. hummer" was, even to the exact minute.

I talked with Mr. Dawson some time in the lobby of the hotel, asking him to do something for me, which he did there in the lobby, speaking to a certain person there for me; all of this before he registered.

See how precise Browne's memory is now when he wants to remember—

Thereafter he registered and was assigned to a room at the St. Nicholas Hotel. Mr. White did not register until after Mr. Dawson did, his name appearing immediately after Mr. Dawson's, so that Mr. White could not have had a room that night at the St. Nicholas Hotel before he registered, and he could not have registered before midnight.

So we have Mr. Browne, making this trip for an important reason, not being able to remember a word of the conversation, and yet being able to remember the order in which men signed their names on a hotel register and the exact minute to which a train was late. It looks as if "Marvelous Intellect" Browne "made a sinner of his memory," doesn't it?

Another thing, Mr. President, that Senators must take into consideration; for if you will break down this point in Browne's testimony, if you show that it is Browne who is lying, then you establish everything that all the rest of them say about Browne and this whole affair. He called these men together in St. Louis about a campaign 18 months away, and yet never met them together again!

The next incident is Mr. Browne's statement of Mr. White borrowing money from him. I want the particular attention of the Senate to this incident, because in a moment I shall show manufactured testimony to support Mr. Browne's testimony. Mr. Browne says that instead of giving this money to White in Chicago, he loaned him $25, and locates the loan as having been made in the lobby of the Briggs Hotel. I merely mention that at this point so that Senators may remember it when I come to the examination of the made-up testimony to support this man.

"JACK POT" WILSON BROWNE'S AGENT.

The next point, Mr. President, that shows Mr. Browne to be willfully and deliberately lying is his statement that Wilson was not his agent in Wilson's trip to St. Louis, that Wilson did not go for him, and that Browne himself did not intend to go to St. Louis the second time.

Mr. President, that that is not true is proven by the fact that the notices signed by Wilson asking these bribe takers to meet him at St. Louis July 15 were made up and sent by Mike Giblin. Who was Mike Giblin? Secretary to Lee O'Neil Browne. The second point is Browne's letter to White concerning this very meeting. Remember, now, Browne is testifying that Wilson did not go to St. Louis for him, and that he (Browne) did not intend to go to St. Louis himself the second time, on July 15—the occasion of the second corrupt payment. Yet he writes to White as follows:

OTTAWA, ILL., July 16, 1909.

Hon. CHARLES A. WHITE, O'Fallon, Ill.

FRIEND CHARLIE: Thank you very much for your prompt recognition of my request in the Doyle matter. You have certainly been one of my good old friends since we have become acquainted. I feel sure that the friendship will last just as long as you and I do. I was awfully sorry that I was unable to be with you yesterday forenoon in St. Louis. I was taken very ill in Chicago Monday night with an attack of ptomaine poisoning and have had a pretty serious time of it. I DID NOT DARE TO ATTEMPT THE TRIP. I hope everything is all right with you and SATISFACTORY.

And yet this man Browne, who wrote that letter to White, testified that he did not intend to go to St. Louis at all and that Wilson did not go for and instead of Browne.

The next thing in the case of Mr. Browne is his speech in the assembly before he voted for the sitting Member. From it I will read two extracts, the first directed to the point made by the sitting Member the day before yesterday that Browne did not "deliver" his followers, but that his followers "delivered" Browne."

I have read from the testimony of Mr. Browne. As to his opinion upon that, I now read from his speech:

Were I an individual only, and did not I stand here upon the floor on this side of the house as the leader, if you please, by election of the minority, so called, my course to-day would be easy. But when you are attempting to influence or lead a number of men along a certain line by advice, by encouragement, if you are a man worthy of the name and consider and think of the welfare of your fellow human beings at the same time you do of your own, then I say that you realize the position that I am in to-day and the responsibility that I feel at this moment in facing the condition that we are facing here.

Does that look like a man who was being "delivered?" And then a little later on, and I relate this circumstance in order to point out another dramatic thing that occurred; he is closing his speech now and he says:

You can not cash theories; you can not cash dreams.

A little later Representative English took the floor and made a speech, and here is what Representative English, a Democrat, said in answer to that speech of Browne:

I do not expect to influence the election of a Senator, cried Mr. English. That is not my purpose. It is up to every one of you to search your conscience before you vote to-day. We have been told that we can state, without criticism, to our constituents, the reasons for the action here to-day. I want to ask you Democrats, do you expect to tell the whole reason?

[Representative Abrahams: "Yes."]

If you do your people will retire you into that oblivion where you rightfully belong. The history of every past amalgamation of Democrats and Republicans is that the Democrats were handed the hot end of the poker afterwards.

"YOU CAN NOT CASH DREAMS;" "YOU CAN CASH VOTES."

Representative English continues:

You can say that this talk of principles can not be cashed, and that dreams can not be cashed. What, then, can be "cashed" on the floor of this assembly? Nothing but votes, I take it.

That is what Representative English, Democrat, said in answer to the speech of Representative Lee O'Neil Browne.

Then it appears that Mr. Browne got very angry and said to Mr. English, "If you will repeat that outside this chamber, well, one of us will never make any more statements like it." But that was the end of it.

It does not appear that Mr. Browne's honor was so wounded that he remembered the circumstance after the general assembly adjourned that day. He refrained because he was inside the chamber. He said, "Just you repeat that outside;" but when Browne got outside he never did a thing to English, who said, "You can not cash dreams, BUT YOU CAN CASH VOTES."

I think it is Tennyson who mentions something about "The jingling of the guinea helps the hurt that honor feels." Anyhow, Browne's wounded honor must have healed quickly, for Browne didn't do a thing to English when both did get "outside."

Browne denies bribery. This is the man whom the upholders of this title rely upon to overthrow the testimony of Meyers, of Link, of Beckemeyer, of White, and of all the rest. I have shown you that in his testimony himself he plainly commits falsehood, and yet Senators are appealed to to believe this testimony as against the testimony of five or six other people.

But what do you expect? Do you expect a man of the "marvelous intellect" of Browne, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] describes him, to admit, to confess? It would appear that Senators will not be satisfied unless everybody confesses. But that would not do any good, according to the Senators who are upholding this election, because the more men that confess the worse they are denounced as scoundrels. As I said yesterday, are you expecting nobody to confess to receiving bribes except saints?

But there is one point, Mr. President, that is overlooked. I have searched this record carefully and I can not find where Browne denies that he had that belt with $30,000 in it around him. So far as the record goes, that statement of White's is uncontradicted. I may be making a mistake about that, and if I am I want some person to call my attention to it.

Undoubtedly, if the question had been put to Browne, he would have denied that he had a belt with $30,000 around him. He denied everything else. But it is one of those slips that is always made by the most cunning mind, and even by the most "marvelous intellects." And here it stands.

This is the man who swears that he did all he could to get all his followers to vote for the sitting Member—a Republican. They had not voted for a Republican before, except Wilson, and suddenly, in the flash of an eye, on May 26 they all plumped their votes for the sitting Member.

THE AMAZING COMPARISON OF BROWNE TO LINCOLN.

We heard the other day that that is nothing unusual in Illinois. It was said that Abraham Lincoln signalized his entrance into public life by doing the same thing down at Springfield, when Lyman Trumbull was elected; and the inference was that Lincoln and Browne were practicing the same politics, and that therefore Democrats could excuse Lee O'Neil Browne—this twentieth century Abraham Lincoln—for leading his followers to vote for a Republican if Republicans could excuse Abraham Lincoln for leading his followers to vote for a Democrat.

Yet what were the facts? Abraham Lincoln had been a member of that legislature. He had had his great debate with Douglas. He was the choice of the Republican members of that legislature for Senator. And so after considering the matter he resigned from the legislature in order to be a candidate. The Democrats, by the same expedient that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] referred to the other day as having been practiced by the Republicans in the case of Logan, elected a Democrat to succeed Abraham Lincoln in the legislature.

The other candidate was Shields, a pro-Douglas Democrat, and the governor was Matthewson, a pro-Douglas Democrat. There were five men in that legislature who were Democrats but they were "anti-Nebraska bill" Democrats, anti-Douglas Democrats.

Douglas on his third report on his Nebraska bill had inserted a repeal of the Missouri Compromise. That became the great issue—the flaming issue before the people. It rent the Democratic Party asunder. Abraham Lincoln had his great debate with Douglas upon that issue very largely.

It was a question that moved men more profoundly than any other question until Sumter was fired upon; and when Shields was a candidate, being a Douglas man, being a "pro-Nebraska bill" Democrat, being a Democrat in favor of the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, John M. Palmer and four other Democrats would not vote for him because, while they were Democrats, they were as much "anti-Nebraska bill" Democrats as Abraham Lincoln himself was an "anti-Nebraska bill" Whig.

And so, suddenly, Mr. President, the Douglas supporters, withdrawing Shields, advanced Gov. Matthewson, who had kept his views in the background, but who was known to be under the influence of Senator Douglas, and therefore a supporter of the repeal of the Missouri Compromise.

Lyman Trumbull was a Democrat; as the Senator from Texas says, "a bolting Democrat;" but he was a Democrat, who, like John M. Palmer, was an "anti-Nebraska bill" Democrat, an anti-Douglas Democrat, who was against the repeal of the Missouri Compromise. That was the reason why Lyman Trumbull was acceptable to John M. Palmer and his other four members of that legislature.

So, when it appeared to Abraham Lincoln that he could not himself be elected; when it appeared to Abraham Lincoln that a Douglas Democrat—that is, a man who was in favor of the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, probably would be elected, then, in order to save the great principle for which he labored to the end of his life, and finally for which he died, Abraham Lincoln told his followers to vote for Lyman Trumbull, "anti-Nebraska bill" Democrat, who was against the repeal of the Missouri Compromise.

That was the circumstance of that transaction, one of the mightiest issues that ever went before the people of this or any other country. And yet we are told that this is an example, an illustration, of the same thing Lee O'Neil Browne did in the case before us.

THE HISTORIC ELECTION OF JUDGE DAVID DAVIS.

What does the Senate think of it? What does the country think of it? I will not take time to go into the case of the election of Judge Davis, except to sketch it very briefly. In that case Logan was the Republican candidate and John M. Palmer was the Democratic candidate. In that legislature there were 15 Independents.

Those Independents would not vote either for John M. Palmer, the Democratic candidate, or for John A. Logan, the Republican candidate. They insisted on voting for a man of their own, but they could not agree. The Independents in the senate insisted on voting for Gen. Anderson. The Independents in the house insisted on voting for Judge David Davis.

Judge David Davis at that time was on the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States. He had split off from the Republican Party on the issue of the impeachment of President Johnson. He was at that time classed as an "Independent," although he was on the Supreme Bench of the United States.

And so the Independents finally came together on Judge David Davis. The Democrats not being able to get their own man, Palmer, found this Justice of the National Supreme Court from the State of Illinois, who had split off from the Republican Party and had become an "Independent" perfectly acceptable. Mind you, the Democrats could not get a majority without the Independents and the Independents with the Democrats made a majority of four.

Those were the circumstances under which that great jurist was transferred from the Supreme Court of the United States to this body. It was the beginning of the great independent movement in American politics. It was a time when men were beginning to forget the passions of the war. It was a time when men were looking to that period, which now has developed so splendidly, when men should not think that if a man belongs to the other party he is either a scoundrel or a traitor.

That was the beginning of the amelioration of political feeling in the United States. That is what made Judge David Davis Senator. Yet we are told that the election of Davis is an illustration of what occurred in the election of the sitting Member May 26, 1909.

Mr. President, now we come to Wilson—"Jack Pot" Wilson.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the Senator from Indiana, before he leaves the testimony of Witness Browne, will show to the Senate the record, because it has been disputed, that Browne and Shurtleff had suites together; that LORIMER occupied the Shurtleff suite; and that for weeks and weeks there they conferred together with these men—Browne and these other parties, who admit they were bribed. Yet Mr. LORIMER asks the Senate to believe that he had no connection with and no knowledge of it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If true, that is an extremely important point. I do not recall that. I am obliged to the Senator from Arkansas for calling my attention to it. It was there that the nightly conferences took place.

Mr. DAVIS. For weeks; and further, Mr. President, it seems to me that in the speech of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] the other day he dodged that question by saying that the place where he met the members was in the speaker's room in the capitol building, which is entirely proper. But the complaint which has been made against the meeting of these members in the speaker's room referred to the rooms in the hotel at night, where they met constantly at night for weeks and weeks, and not to the room in the capitol building.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The speaker's room was Shurtleff's apartment at the hotel?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; and Browne had an apartment adjoining it, with the door open between them, and LORIMER consulted with Shurtleff and these conferences continued for weeks.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is very important, and I am very much obliged to the Senator from Arkansas for calling attention to it.

"THE JACK POT"—THE WITCHES' CALDRON OF AMERICAN POLITICS.

I wish to hurry on. I know I am taking too much time. I come to Wilson, "Jack Pot" Wilson, as he will evermore be known. We have heard a great deal about the "jack pot." There was nothing about a "jack pot" new or novel. It seems to me I remember something about it in Shakespeare's witches caldron:

Double, double, toil and trouble;
Fire burn and jack pot bubble.
* * * *
When shall we three—

Wilson, Broderick, Browne, the modern witches of Macbeth—

When shall we three meet again,
In thunder, lightning, or in rain?
When the hurly-burly's done,
When the battle's fought and won.
That will be ere the set of sun—

And, Mr. President, it was. "The hurly-burly was done," "the battle was fought and won"—all "ere set of sun," on May 26, 1909.

Where the place?

Says one witch.

Upon the heath,

Says the other.

There to meet with Macbeth,

Says the third.

And at the next boiling of that ancient "jack pot," where they put the ingredients in—

For a spell of powerful trouble—

One of them gives the whole snap away by declaring:

"And everyone shall share in the gains"—the jack pot—

Quoth Heccate, "Oh, it's now new, you see."

Well, we will examine the jack pot, and the first thing is this, Mr. President: The Senator from Michigan, in that learned and illuminating report of his, says that the "jack pot" furnished a subject that did not appear to touch the case at hand; none of the subcommittee's business to examine into that; and he had authority for that because the attorney for the sitting Member also says substantially in the record: I object to any testimony about the "jack pot." What has that got to do with the case?

The testimony that establishes the existence of this jack pot is THE SAME TESTIMONY BY WHICH THIS BRIBERY IS PROVED. If you believe the "jack pot"—and that is conceded—then how can you fail to believe the distribution of this bribery money? They are established by the same testimony. They were distributed to the same persons by the same persons. In fact, if there were two "jack pots," they were the very Siamese twins of corruption so closely are they related.

Now, the whole case of the upholders of this title, as I said yesterday, has been put upon this "third degree," and yesterday I showed that Beckemeyer swore he was never under duress. I showed that Link himself had asked the officer to go with him, and I read to the Senate the testimony about that absurd, grotesque claim that these men were "compelled to commit perjury," as the majority report says; "were driven" to commit perjury by the "third degree," applied by the officers of justice.

"JACK POT" WILSON'S "THIRD DEGREE."

Wilson was in the same predicament. Let us see what Wilson's "third degree" was. Senators have said to me, although I could not understand why, that they are going to vote to uphold this title because they did not believe the testimony of Beckemeyer and Link and the rest of them for the reason of this "third degree."

We destroyed the "third degree" yesterday, Mr. President, and I presented, I want to say to Senators who were not here yesterday, a telegram, in response to an inquiry from District Attorney Wayman—the Senators did not know this, I think—that Officer Keeley, the man whom we have heard denounced here as the instrument of the "third degree," has been indicted and CONVICTED by a jury in Cook County, Chicago, Ill., because Keeley swore to the very things that Senators have told us here on this floor that Keeley did and said.

What was Wilson's experience with the "third degree?" Here it is, page 733. Mark you, there was the same reason in the case of Wilson for applying the "third degree" that there was in the others. Yet here is his experience:

You were called before the grand jury, were you not?

By the way, Wilson had been testifying to some hearsay about the "third degree" on the other grafters, and it appears that the committee let his hearsay in, although they would not let in any hearsay as to Luke's confession and Beckemeyer's declaration against interest.

Let us see what experience you had. You were called before the grand jury, were you not?
Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.
Mr. AUSTRIAN. You testified?
Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.
Mr. AUSTRIAN. After you testified you waited a few minutes and then left the building, did you not?
Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.
Mr. AUSTRIAN. That was all the third degree you had, was it not?
Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

So that is Wilson. This Wilson went to St. Louis for the second distribution. Browne says that Wilson did not go at his (Browne's) request, and that Browne himself did not intend to go. Yet Browne writes a letter to White which shows that that was not true. Also, Wilson finally testifies that the notice that he sent to these members to meet him in St. Louis were sent and made out by Mike Giblin, Browne's secretary.

So Wilson went to St. Louis July 15 and made the distribution. We have all gone over that testimony. But there is one thing. Wilson does admit that he called Shephard into the bathroom, where the rest of the men got their cash; but Wilson corroborates Shephard by saying that he called Shephard into the bathroom to ask about the name of the mysterious lady whom Shephard had dined with in Springfield two months before.

But Wilson—mark you, Mr. President—did not testify until in December. Shephard had already testified, and here I pause to ask the Senate to examine this fact that appears upon the record, that Broderick, Browne, and Wilson, bribe givers, could not be found for some time by the sergeant at arms of the committee.

I understand from a member of the subcommittee that the sergeant at arms searched Broderick's house; that Browne strangely was absent for days; and finally Wilson could not be located at all when this investigation was going on. They put his old father on the stand, and he said he did not know where Wilson was. He had something the matter with his eyes—Wilson had—and instead of getting an oculist in Chicago he went to that city so celebrated for its oculists rather than for something else, and had his eyes treated in Milwaukee. From Wilson's testimony we must believe that its "oculists have made Milwaukee famous." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, that is what kept poor Wilson away—eyes. So we learn when finally he was secured for this committee during the investigation. But it appears further from his own testimony that the reason he did not appear before the subcommittee was that he did not know that it was meeting, and that he was suffering from nervous prostration—"my nerves were shattered," he says.

The reason, of course, Wilson did not know it was meeting was because he had not read the newspapers; and the reason that he had not read the newspapers was of course that he had eye trouble which detained him in Milwaukee.

THE NERVOUS PROSTRATION OF "JACK POT" WILSON.

Wilson said he had nervous prostration. I am going to read you some amusing testimony in a moment. George Ade and all the rest of our humorists, including Kin Hubbard, are left far behind as masters of humor as compared with "Jack Pot Wilson" and Judge Haney in the questions and answers I will read in a moment. Wilson said that during the time that the sergeant at arms was trying to find him he was going away this time for his nerves; he seemed to have mingled eye and nerve trouble. And this time, in order to cure his nerves, HE WENT TO CANADA.

It is well known, Mr. President, that Canada is the best place in the world for anybody suffering from nervous prostration. [Laughter.] So there is where "Jack Pot Wilson" went, but not at all to avoid this committee. No, indeed. We are assured of that, because the Senator from Michigan, after Wilson had delivered this touching testimony, was careful to ask him, "You did not go away in order to avoid the subcommittee, did you?" "Oh, bless your soul, no," says Wilson. "Certainly not."

Mr. President, let us read some of Mr. Wilson's testimony, and it is Wilson's word and Browne's word that you are dependent on when you vote to uphold this seat. We might as well have a little fun out of this transaction. Let us give some of Wilson's account. Here it is.

Mr. President, it is with hesitation that I recite this tale of woe. This is Mr. Wilson's own statement:

Senator FRAZIER. Where did you go then when you left Chicago?

Mr. WILSON. I took the train and went to Detroit, where I stayed for two days. You may ask me—I might start out in this way: I had been to Dr. Snyder, of Milwaukee, for a month before the primaries, up to the 1st of September, and during that time I would receive telephones and messages and people would come up to see me, and so forth, so that I virtually did not get the rest that I should have gotten under the treatment.

By the way, I should remark that Wilson says his nervous prostration was caused by two weeks' campaign in the primary. Think of what many Senators have gone through many times, and what we, who have been in the harness, know of campaigning. Yet two weeks' campaign before the primaries, Wilson says, "shattered my nerves."

Wilson continues:

You know how you will be disturbed. So I was going back again to be treated afterwards. He told me to come back. But he had gone to Europe in the meantime. He left some time in September, probably; I think he left the 17th or 18th of September. Consequently I could not go there, so I was going to go to Mount Clemens, thinking probably the water and everything would help me out. My nerves were all shattered to pieces. I had gone through a campaign of two weeks, and the primaries were coming on over there where I had been tied up for a month, AND MY NERVES WERE WRECKED. In fact——

Senator FRAZIER (interposing). I am not so much interested in your nerves as I am in where you were. Just tell us that.

Mr. WILSON. I met a friend of mine there, and he asked me where I was going. I told him I was going to Mount Clemens. He said, "If I were you, I would not go there, because you can not get any rest there. There are more people there than you will meet around your own home in Chicago." He said, "I am going to take a trip, and you can find some quiet places there. I am going on a ways, but you can get some place where you can rest." So I took a trip with him. The first place I stopped at was St. Thomas. He went on then; I WENT ON THEN TO TORONTO.

THE HEALTHFUL CLIMATE OF TORONTO, CANADA.

Of course he would not see anybody in Toronto at all. He would see people every place else, but not in Toronto, Canada. Wilson continues:

He went on to Montreal, and I met him then coming back, and he stopped at Toronto for a day. He came in Saturday night and he left on Monday night. I had been taking treatment with the medicines I had—

In Toronto, Canada.

My eyes and health were getting along much better—

In Toronto, Canada.

In fact, I gained 12 pounds while I had been there—

In Toronto, Canada.

Judge Hanecy sees the enormous importance of the gain accomplished by this nerve-wrecked person, who did not appear before the committee, and here is what he testified to:

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything else of this witness?

Mr. HANECY. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HANECY. How much did you weigh before you had this trouble with your eyes?

Think of this before a Senate investigating committee!

Mr. WILSON. In the beginning I weighed 200 pounds before all this trouble came about.

Mr. HANECY. How much did you lose during the time?

Mr. WILSON. I lost 30 pounds.

Mr. HANECY. At what time?

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think that is really material?

Mr. HANECY. I do not think anything was material except the question of whether he paid any money or not, but it does throw some light on the question that this honorable committee seemed to think was quite important in the light that he had at that time—that is, the actual condition of this witness's health when this honorable committee sat in Chicago.

The CHAIRMAN. He stated he did not absent himself for the purpose of avoiding the committee.

Mr. HANECY. I want to show, in addition to that, that he lost 30 pounds.

Senator GAMBLE. And in the meantime, while he was away, he gained 12 pounds?

Now, Mr. President, Wilson also denies that he gave this money. That is all he does; he just denies it. He admitted he had been in St. Louis; he admits he met these men there; and what excuse does he give for making that trip down there, Mr. President? For the purpose of seeing them concerning a banquet for Lee O'Neil Browne.

But Browne testifies he told them he (Browne) did not want any banquet. Yet Wilson swears that he goes to St. Louis, two hundred and sixty some miles, in July to see five men about a banquet for Lee O'Neil Browne, although Wilson had seen those very men not three weeks before. Is that credible? Does anybody believe that?

And, Mr. President, in a moment, when I get through with the manufactured testimony, I shall point out that this man Wilson, who says that he went down there to see about a banquet for Lee O'Neil Browne, which of course he could have written about just as easily, sent manufactured and fictitious letters in September, 1910, after this investigation began, to Beckemeyer, Link, and others, dated in July, 1909; that he dated them a year before they actually were sent in order to manufacture an excuse for his being in St. Louis.

Now, those letters are in the record. Wayman put into the record a letter from Wilson to Link and a letter from Wilson to Beckemeyer written a year after their date in order to give an excuse as to why Wilson met them in St. Louis. Does any Senator believe that? Why were those letters faked? Why were they falsified if there was nothing wrong about this transaction? That is pretty serious business. I guess I had better put those letters in now. Remember that these letters were sent nearly a year after the time they were dated.

[Exhibit 1–P, K. F. L., 10/1/10.]

CHICAGO, June 26, 1909.

Hon. M. S. LINK, Mitchell, Ill.

DEAR MIKE: Dr. Allison was speaking to me in regard to seeing some of the boys relative to giving Lee a banquet in his home town, Ottawa. I expect to be in St. Louis some time in the near future in connection with our submerged-land committee. As soon as I know just when I will be there, will wire you, and, if possible, would like to meet you there. In the meantime should you come to Chicago, advise me in advance and I will meet you.

With best wishes to you, I am,

Yours, very truly,

BOB.

CHICAGO, June 26, 1909.

Hon. H. J. C. BECKEMEYER, Carlyle, Ill.

FRIEND BECKEMEYER: Doc. Allison was speaking to me regarding getting up a banquet for Lee in his home town, Ottawa, and asked that I take matter up with some of the boys. I expect to go to St. Louis in the future in connection with our submerged-land committee, and will advise you in advance as to when I will be there, and would like for you to meet me.

With best wishes, I am,

Very truly, yours,

ROBERT E. WILSON.

So, then, Mr. President, it is the word of Wilson, who avoided the committee; the word of Wilson, who made this distribution; the word of Wilson, who sent fictitious letters dated a year before they were actually sent, in order to furnish an excuse, against the testimony of the rest of the men in this case—against all the circumstances in the whole case.

THE MANUFACTURED TESTIMONY.

Now, Mr. President, we have disposed of these witnesses, and I come to what, to my mind, is nearly the most convincing thing in this whole matter—the manufactured testimony of Stermer, Zentner, and Simmons. If Senators believe that the testimony of these witnesses was manufactured, it was manufactured for a serious purpose.

First of all, as to Stermer. Stermer was the assistant manager of the Briggs House. He testifies that he knew Browne intimately for eight years. He testifies that Browne lived at the Briggs House. That is the first thing. Fix that carefully in your mind. Second, that he met White in July; and two or three weeks after he met White, Browne, Zentner, and White took a trip across the lake.

This was the "music and flowers" trip to which Browne refers in his letter to his "old pal" White. They were gone two or three days. They got back from that trip, Zentner, White, and Browne, on the morning of the 19th day of August. And coming back from that trip with Browne, his intimate friend White that night, in his cups, exposed his plot against Browne to Stermer and Zentner, although he had only known Stermer and Zentner for two or three weeks and Stermer had known Browne for eight years and Zentner had known Browne for two or three years.

Stermer says that White told him and Zentner what he (White) was going to do to Browne and others.

Now, that talk took place in August. It was pretty serious; it was a warning of all that followed. It was a statement in advance, in August, 1909, of everything that White intended to do.

And yet Stermer, the assistant manager of the Briggs House, the intimate friend of Browne for eight years, never mentioned a word of plot to Browne or anybody else until April 30, 1910, EIGHT MONTHS AFTERWARDS.

Is that credible? Suppose some one were to tell one of us Senators of a plot that involved the honor of a close friend, and that close friend lived in the same hotel with us, would we delay or neglect telling him for eight months? Not only that, Mr. President, but Stermer says that Zentner wanted to tell Browne and that Stermer would not let him do it.

Now, Mr. President, that is not all. It appears that Stermer did not tell of this dastardly "plot" until April 30, 1910, and then he told Browne for the first time. Three weeks after he told Browne this statement that Stermer makes as his testimony was written out. Stermer himself testifies to that fact.

STERMER'S PRECISION OF MEMORY.

Now, then, Mr. President, this man Stermer, clearly not a man of great intelligence, who did not mention that conversation with White to his dear friend Browne for eight months, and then had it written out, yet gives it in the first Browne trial in a certain peculiar form, and when he was called before the subcommittee and is asked to tell the story, he gives the same thing over again, word for word, substantially.

Most Senators here are lawyers. Did any Senator here who has practiced in the courts ever see an example of manufactured testimony so absolutely convincing as this? I defy anyone to produce from the reports or textbooks manufactured testimony which shows on its face as much as this that it was manufactured.

And what was it manufactured for? Only for one purpose, and that was to discredit White's story. The same is true of Zentner, who swears that he had known Browne two years and White only a short time. It is exactly the same thing.

There is not, Mr. President, a circumstance in any case I ever knew of more condemning than the testimony of Stermer and Zentner.

Before proceeding further, I desire merely to call the careful attention of Senators to the difference between the testimony of Stermer on the first trial and Stermer before the committee; and the same of Zentner.

Here is Stermer's story as told in the Browne trial, and as told before the subcommittee months afterwards. Remember that it is Stermer's statement of White's conversation a year and more before; a story which Stermer admits was "written out."

COMPARISON OF STERMER'S TESTIMONY AT THE BROWNE TRIAL IN AUGUST, 1910, AND BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE IN OCTOBER, 1910.

TRIAL.

[Exhibit 1–W. K. F. L. 10/5/10.]

Q. At that time and place and in that conversation did Charles A. White say this, or this in substance: That he was going to take a big trip in the fall and winter; that he was going to his home at O'Fallon, then down to New Orleans, then to Cuba, and up to New York; that he was going to have a big time in New York and then go back home again; and then did either yourself or Zentner say to White, "You must have a lot of money to spend for anything like that?" Did White then say, No, that he did not have a lot of money, but that he was going to get, and was going to get it without working; and then did Mr. Zentner ask White how he was going to do that, and did White then say, "Well, that Lorimer crowd and our old pal Browne, too, have got to come across good and hard when I say the word, and I am going to say it?" And then did you say to White, "Have you got anything on him?" And did White say, "No; I ain't. I got the worst of it down there in Springfield, but that makes no difference. I voted for LORIMER, and I am a Democrat, and I can say that I got money for voting for LORIMER. Do you suppose they could stand for that game? I guess they will cough up when I say the word to them." And then did you say to White or did Zentner say to White, "God, you would not treat Browne that way, would you?" and did White say, "I am looking out for White, and besides, Browne would not have to pay. That bunch behind him would pay that, and it would not hurt Browne." Did that conversation, or that in substance, occur at that time and place?—A. In substance; yes.

COMMITTEE.

Q. Will you just repeat the conversation once more?—A. He said he was going to take a big trip in the fall and winter; that first he was going home, to his home in O'Fallon, and from there he was going to New Orleans, from New Orleans to Cuba, from Cuba to New York City, where he expected to have a big time, and then he would come back home again. One of us asked him, or said to him, rather, that he must have a lot of money to take a trip of that kind. He said that he didn't have the money, but he was going to get it, and he said he was going to get it without working for it, too. Mr. Zentner asked him how he was going to do that. "Well," he says, "That Lorimer crowd and our old friend, Browne, has got to 'come across' good and strong with me when I say the word, and I am going to say it, too." Mr. Zentner asked him if he had anything on him, or them, rather. He says, "No, he hadn't." He said he got the worst of it at Springfield, but that didn't make no difference, he was a Democrat, and had voted for LORIMER, and he could say that he got money for it. He said, "Do you think they could stand for that game?" Mr. Zentner said, "My God, you wouldn't treat Browne that way, would you?" "Well," he said, "I am looking out for White, and besides," he said, "Browne wouldn't have to pay; the bunch back of him would have to do that; it wouldn't hurt Browne." That is about all that was said at that time.

Q. I will ask you to look at what purports to be your testimony, in reply to this same question, at the last trial of Lee O'Neil Browne, and ask you whether or not that is correct, and if it is, I will ask you to read it into the record.

The WITNESS. Do you want all of this?

Mr. AUSTRIAN. Is that correct?

Senator BURROWS. Well, he wants to know if he will read it through.

Mr. AUSTRIAN. Read it through. That is your testimony on this point, this exact conversation. Was that your testimony in reply to this same question?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. AUSTRIAN. I desire to offer it in evidence.

The WITNESS. As near as I can tell; there may have been one or two words different, as I think at this time. Does that make any difference? In substance it is the same.

I have made a comparison as to the differences in these two statements, and I here present to the Senate these differences. Senators can judge for themselves how practically verbatim Stermer's story is on both occasions; and I repeat for the third time, for it is so important. This story that Stermer tells us was not mentioned by him for more than eight months after he says he heard it; that three weeks after he did mention it it was "written out." And now observe that Stermer repeats this "written out" story substantially word for word. The intellect of man does not work that way.

As I have remarked, precisely the same thing is true of Zentner. I will print in parallel columns the same story as told by Zentner in the Browne trial and before the subcommittee:

COMPARISON OF ZENTNER'S TESTIMONY AT THE BROWNE TRIAL IN AUGUST, 1910, AND BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE IN OCTOBER, 1910.

TRIAL.

[Exhibit 1–X. K. F. L. 10/5/10.]

[From the testimony of Fred Zentner, pages 1387 and 1388, volume 3, record in People v. Browne.]

Q. And at that time and place did Charles A. White say to you that he was going to have a big trip in the fall and winter; that he was going to his home in O'Fallon, and then to New Orleans, then to Cuba, and then up to New York; that he was going to have a large time in New York and then come home again; and did you say to him at that time and place in that conversation, "You must have a lot of money to take a trip like that," and did White say to you, "I don't have to have a lot of money, but I am going to get it and I am going to get it without work," and did you say to him at that time, "What do you mean?" And did White say to you, "Well, that Lorimer bunch and Browne have got to come across"? Did you then say to White, "What do you mean by that?" And did White say to you, "I got the worst of it at Springfield; I voted for LORIMER and I am a Democrat. If I say I got money for voting for him I guess they will come over, won't they?" And did you say at that time and place, "My God, White! you wouldn't do that to Browne, would you?" And did White, in response thereto, say, "I am looking out for Charlie, and besides, Browne won't have to stand for it?" Did that conversation occur at that time and place, or that conversation in substance?—A. Yes, sir.

COMMITTEE.

Q. Now, will you tell this committee exactly that conversation, as you remember it, and as you have testified to it on the two Browne trials?—A. The entire conversation?

Q. Yes, sir.—A. We were talking about this trip that we just returned from, from Michigan. We had been over to Michigan, and the little experiences, numerous experiences that happened on this trip, we were relating them to Mr. Stermer, and Mr. Browne said, or Mr. White said, then, he was going to take a trip that fall; he was going to his home in O'Fallon, down to New Orleans, over to Cuba, and up to New York, where he was going to have a good time, and then he was going home, and one of us asked him, we said, "You must have quite a lot of money to make a trip like that haven't you, Mr. White?" He said, "No; I haven't, but I am going to get it, and I am going to get it without working, too." I asked him then, I said, "How are you going to do that?" Well, he said, "You know that Lorimer crowd and their old pal Browne will have to 'come across' when I say the word, and I am going to say it, too." I asked him then what he meant; I said, "What do you mean?" "Well," he said, "I got the worst of it down at Springfield. I am a Democrat and I voted for LORIMER, and I can say I got money for it, can't I? Can they stand for that kind of game?" I said, "God, you wouldn't treat Browne that way?" White said, "No; I am looking out for White, and besides Browne wouldn't have to stand for it, anyway; it would be the bunch behind him." And that was about all the conversation. About 1 o'clock they closed the bar—promptly at 1—and we went out in the lobby of the hotel then and left Mr. Stermer.

You will see that, like Stermer, Zentner repeats his tale practically word for word. That Senators may have this more clearly, I read the differences in Zentner's testimony at the Browne trial and before the subcommittee, just as I have read the differences in the testimony of Stermer:

TRIAL.	COMMITTEE.
have a big trip in the fall and winter.	take a trip that fall.
going to have a large time in New York.	where he was going to have a good time.
I don't have to have a lot of money.	No; I haven't.
What do you mean?	How are you going to do that?
come across.	come across when I say the word, and I am going to say it too.
I guess they will come over, won't they?	I can say I got money for it, can't I? Can they stand for that kind of a game?
	it would be the bunch behind him.

And here is another point. Stermer fixes the 19th day of August, six months after that time. How? He says he knows that is the date because Zentner six months afterwards had a ticket for a trip on the lake good for August 19, six months before. I want to read that:

Q. That is the only way you know?—A. The date; yes.
Q. And that is what you base it on; he had a ticket to go across the lake?—A. Going over; yes.
Q. And you asked him that in May of this year, 1910; is that correct?—A. Let me see; that was in May, yes.
Q. Of this year?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you and Mr. Zentner had never discussed the date of this conversation, from the time it happened up until after May, 1910; is that correct?—A. From that time up until May; yes, sir.
Q. And still you are willing to testify to this committee that that conversation, if one occurred, occurred on the 19th of August, 1909, are you?—A. Yes, sir.

And the reason given was that six months afterwards Zentner had a ticket for that very day. Now, that is asking too much for human intelligence to credit.

THE CONVENIENT AND MYSTERIOUS SIMMONS.

But worse than that, Mr. President and Senators, is the manufactured testimony of Simmons. It is short, and I ask you all, before you vote, to read it. This man Simmons, it appears, was a race-horse man at one time. That is nothing against him, no doubt, but consider it in connection with his testimony.

He says he had a telephone call from the Briggs House; he says he does not know who from. He went in response to this telephone call to the Briggs House. He did not meet the man who called him. He did not see the man who he supposed called him for three months afterwards.

Now, this man Simmons swears that he never saw Browne or White before in his life. He just happened to be called there by a mysterious telephone call at that particular time. And yet, never having seen Browne or White before, he swears that he saw Browne and heard White ask Browne to loan him some money; he saw Browne take out a roll of bills; he saw the denominations of the bills—five-dollar bills—and saw that he gave White $25; he heard every word of the conversation.

Happening to be called there by telephone, Simmons did not know from whom, he arrived just at the opportune time. That supports Browne and disputes White. Now, this man Simmons, having seen and heard all this, never mentioned it until April, 1910, and then he remembered every detail of it. Does anybody doubt that that testimony was manufactured; and if so, what for?

Mr. President, there has been one peculiar note to this debate, one that I can not explain. There has been denunciation for the officers of justice in Cook County and in Sangamon County and every place else because they made these men confess. There is tearful sympathy for Link and Beckemeyer and Wilson, bribe takers and bribe givers, because they were treated so badly by the officers of justice.

At one moment the committee melts with compassion for these bribe takers after they had been treated hardly by the officers of justice, and in the other moment they are denounced because they confessed to having taken bribes.

THE POLITICAL FATE OF THOSE INVOLVED IN THIS ELECTION.

But, Mr. President, what were we told the other day? I want to call particular attention to this. We were first informed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] that these men have been reelected. Then we were so told by other Senators. I could not see that it had anything to do with this case. But since Senators enlarge upon it, we must go into it, I suppose.

Very well, I want to show you how they were reelected. Browne refers to it in his testimony where he says that White had written to him to see that the other candidate did not employ the "plumping system." It appears that in Illinois under the constitution in order to insure a minority representation any voter may vote for one of three candidates or one and a half votes for two candidates or plump 3 votes for one candidate.

Now, Mr. President, I have taken the trouble to get these votes. It appears that in Browne's district Linds, Republican, got 10,000 and some votes; Scanlan, 12,000; that is one-half each; Browne, Democrat, 14,000—that would be less than 5,000 men voting for Browne—Doyle, Democrat 9,000; McDonald, Socialist, 2,700. I will put into the RECORD the votes all the candidates in the Wilson and in the Browne and in the Broderick districts got, so that Senators may see for themselves what an indorsement this meant.

Total vote in sixth district (Wilson's district), 77,192; Hagan, Republican, 17,407; Anderson, Republican, 13,344; Wilson, Democrat, 28,555; Hays, Prohibitionist, 10,016; Hardy, Socialist, 7,870.

There was no other Democratic nominee except Wilson; therefore he got three votes, while the Republican votes were divided between Hagan and Anderson, making it possible to elect Wilson.

Total vote in thirty-ninth district (Browne's district), 50,092; Linds, Republican, 10,687; Scanlan, Republican, 12,727; Browne, Democrat, 14,083; Doyle, Democrat, 9,879; McDonald, Socialist, 2,716.

The Browne Democrats plumped 3 votes for him instead of dividing between him and Doyle, which elected Browne. So we see what the boast of the people's "vindication" of those men amounts to.

What about the reverse of that proposition? What about the men who were defeated? I have taken the trouble to find that out.

The following senators who voted for the sitting Member failed to run for renomination:

Republicans: Downing, Billings, McCormick; Democrats: Jandus, Rainey.

The following representatives failed to run for renomination:

Republicans: Behrens, Black, Glade, Kowlaski, Lawrence, Lederer, McLean, McMahon, Sollitt, York; Democrats: Beckemeyer, Blair, Cermak, Corcoran, Espey, Forst, Geshewich, Link, Luke, O'Neil, Poulton, Staymates, Tippitt, White, F. J. Wilson.

Behrens and Black, Republicans, had Federal appointments; Lederer and Sollitt, Republicans, ran for the senate and were defeated; and McLean, Republican, was elected to the senate.

Forst, Democrat, was elected to the senate; Gesgewick, Luke, and O'Neil were dead; and F. J. Wilson ran for alderman and was elected.

The following senators who voted for the sitting Member ran and were defeated:

Cruikshank, defeated at primaries; Breidt, defeated at election.

The following representatives who voted for the sitting Member were defeated at election:

Republicans: Fieldstack, Gillespie, Shumacher; Democrats: Burns, De Wolf, Kannally, Riley.

The following representatives who voted for the sitting Member were defeated at the primaries:

Republicans: Beck, Brownback, Burgett, Bush, Durfee, Kittleman, Lane, Logan, Parker, Price, Stearns, Troyer, Zinger, Zipf; Democrats: Abrahams, Allison, Joe Clark, Lantz, McCollum, Murray, O'Brien, Shephard.

Stearns was defeated at primaries, and ran independent and was beaten.

Now, Mr. President, I do not know that that is so important. I mention it only because we have been told that Browne and Wilson and Broderick have been "vindicated" by their constituents by reelection. It is fair to know, then, that these men who were not even charged with bribes, except Shephard and the rest, but who voted for the sitting Member, when they ran were defeated by their constituents either at the primaries or at the polls.

Now, Mr. President, that concludes the testimony, and I once more come to a discussion of the law. First, we have shown the money paid to Broderick and the money traced; the money paid to White and the money traced; the money paid to Beckemeyer and the money traced; the money paid to Luke and the money traced; the money paid to Link was not discovered in his possession; the money paid to Clark was covered up by the Powers funeral certificate; the money paid to Shephard was not found in his possession, but he visited a safety-deposit box the very day he got it. It was said by White or Beckemeyer that Wilson had a $500 bill which he said he was instructed to give to Shephard.

IV. THE STATUTE AND THE RULINGS.

The election, Mr. President, as we all know, occurred under the statute. I beg the Senate's pardon for taking its time on the law after the exhaustive discussion that has been had, but still I shall attempt in a very few minutes to show that by the committee precedents the theory that has been here advanced can not be supported.

The statute says:

The joint assembly shall then proceed to choose by a viva voce vote of each member present—

Not a secret ballot, you see—a person for Senator and the person who receives a majority of all the votes of the joint assembly, a majority of all the members elected to both houses being present and voting, shall be declared duly elected.

So we start out with the important thing, the determination of a quorum by the statute.

Now, then, what has been the construction of that statute by the Senate committee in the past? It was stated that unless the sitting Member knows of the bribery, countenances it or practices it, then enough votes must be tainted in order to destroy his honest majority. How many would be enough, Mr. President?

Ordinarily one would think enough to destroy the majority votes cast for the Senator. But the suggestion has been advanced and supported with much argument that if you deduct the corrupt votes from all those cast for the winning candidate you must also deduct them from the whole quorum.

First of all, Mr. President, let us see what has been the ruling of the Senate upon this in the Payne case in the views signed by Senators HOAR and FRYE.

If six only of Mr. Payne's votes in the caucus were procured by bribery, the result of the election of Senator was clearly brought about by that means.

Now, Mr. President, that point was not dissented from by the committee in the report of the majority, and in all the separate views that statement of Senators HOAR and FRYE was not disputed. The question, of course, never got to a vote, because Senators HOAR and FRYE thought we ought to investigate, and Senator PUGH and the rest of the majority thought there was no ground for an investigation. But on this statement of the law as applied to that caucus there was no dissent in the committee. I believe that will be conceded.

Now, Mr. President, let us see what that means. This was the case of a caucus. There were 79 Democrats who attended that caucus. Of this a majority, of course, was 40. Mr. Payne got 46; that is, he got 6 more than a majority, and if 7 were corrupt, says this report—6 they have got it, but that is a typographical error—the election was invalid.

Yet upon the theory now advanced for the first time, if 7 were corrupt in the Payne case the election still was valid, because 79 attended the caucus; 7 corrupt—deduct 7 from 79 and there were 72 "honest men," as the Senator from Texas says, in the caucus, of which a majority was 37.

Now, then, Payne got 46. Deduct 7 corrupt votes from 46 and it leaves Payne 39 "honest men," to use the language of the Senator from Texas. But 39 is a majority of 2 over 37 necessary to a choice, and 37 is a majority of 72.

Mr. BAILEY. Not the committee.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, well, I say this statement of the law by Senator HOAR and Senator FRYE was not disputed or dissented from by any member of the committee. Yet, according to the theory of the Senator from Texas, Payne was elected anyhow.

Now, let us take the Clark case. In the Clark case it is said by the committee:

He received 54 votes and there were 39 against him, leaving him an apparent majority of 15. If he attained through illegal and corrupt practices 8 votes which would otherwise have been cast against him, he was not legally elected.

It is said that the statement I have read from the Clark case was a statement merely of the chairman, but upon this point also there was no dissent. Yet, Mr. President, if the theory which the Senator from Texas advanced is correct, Clark would have been elected.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I simply want to illustrate the Senator's method of argumentation. He says there was no dissent by the committee in the Payne case.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. From that point.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course the committee seldoms discusses the views of the minority. The minority very frequently discuss the views of the committee; but if the Senator is right in saying there was no dissent on the law, neither was there any dissent on the facts, and yet the Senator works out the facts so that Payne would not be elected according to Senator HOAR, and yet Payne, as the record shows, continued to serve his term out as a Senator in this body.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is true; but that was because the Senate voted that there should be no investigation. Is not that true?

Mr. BAILEY. But if the Senate was concluded and the committee was concluded by Senator HOAR's argument on one point, it must be deemed to have been concluded on the other. There was no more special dissent from his mathematics than there was from his law. If we must accept the law as he laid it down we must accept the facts on the same theory, because the committee did not controvert those facts.

I want to remind the Senator, however, who again ventures the explanation that this is a mistake, that that same mistake, as I observed on another occasion, is repeated in another paragraph of the views filed by Senator HOAR.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think myself it is probably the mistake of a stenographer. I have been searching for the original manuscript. The Senator, however, will agree that that is not material, because the point is there.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the mathematics is as bad as the law in that case.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I call the attention of the Senator from Texas to the fact that the point of divergence of the committee in the Payne case was whether there should be any investigation or not. Senators HOAR and FRYE said there should be, because the facts stated by Mr. Butterworth and Mr. Little, taken in connection with the representations by the legislature, were such as to demand an investigation; but the other Senators said that that was not the case; that it was a thing which occurred in caucus, and they could not go into it. On the law there was no disagreement.

Pass that, Mr. President, and come down to the Clark case. There is no mistake of language in the Clark case; and yet, under the theory of the Senator from Texas, Clark would have been elected. Clark resigned, but he never would have resigned if he had heard of the theory of the Senator from Texas, because under that theory Clark was legally elected. In the Clark case there were 93 votes. Of those, 47 were necessary to a choice under the statute. There were 54 votes for Clark; that is, 7 majority for Clark. The committee's language is:

If he obtained through illegal and corrupt practices 8 votes, which would otherwise have been cast against him, he was not legally elected.

But according to the theory of the Senator from Texas he was legally elected, because deduct 8 corrupt votes from 93 votes, the whole quorum of the general assembly, and it leaves 85 "honest men," to use the phrase of the Senator from Texas. Of that number, 43 is necessary to a choice under the statute.

Now, deduct 8 corrupt votes from 54 votes cast for Mr. Clark, and it leaves 46 "honest men" voting for Mr. Clark. Forty-three was a majority of the honest quorum. So, according to the theory of the Senator from Texas, there was a legal majority of 3 for Clark. The same is true in the Powell Clayton case.

So we have the Clayton case, we have the Clark case, we have the Payne case—all of them holding that you can not deduct votes from the quorum as well as from the majority of votes cast; all of them holding directly and specifically against the position that has been advanced here, I believe, for the first time in the history of the Senate—advanced by the supporters of this election. Under the Clayton case, under the Payne case, and under the Clark case—there are the figures; there is the language of the committee—if any Senator believes that seven votes in the case before us were tainted this election is invalid.

Mr. President, I want to put this illustration. Perhaps the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] the other day put it still better in another form. It illustrates beyond any possibility of doubt that the novel theory of the Senator from Texas can not be sustained.

The Senator says that if seven votes were corrupt they must be deducted from the whole quorum of the general assembly, as well as from the votes cast for the sitting Member; which, of course, would still elect him, as it would have elected Clark and as it would have elected Payne. Suppose these seven votes had not been purchased or tainted; suppose that an emissary of the sitting Member had captured seven of these voters and locked them up until after the election occurred—will anybody say that the election would have been valid?

Yet, according to the theory of the Senator from Texas, it would be valid. They were not there; they were not a part of the general assembly; and they have no right to be counted, because they were not there. They therefore would be deducted from the whole amount of the general number of the votes cast in the general assembly, on the one hand, and from the number of votes cast for the sitting Member, on the other hand; and yet will any Senator say that if these seven voters had been captured, locked up, and kept away this election would have been valid? Why, certainly not, Mr. President; and yet that is not nearly as bad a case as where they were corrupted.

THE THEORY OF THE UPHOLDERS OF THIS ELECTION APPLIED TO A JURY.

There is still another thing. I should like to have the attention of all Senators who are lawyers upon this point as a test of the theory. I hold in my hand, Mr. President, and insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, a list of the States in which less than a full jury of 12 can report a verdict.

In many of the States three-fourths are enough—that is, nine; two-thirds in some are enough—that is, eight men out of the jury; in some States it is only in civil suits, while in others it is the same in criminal suits.

Arizona.—Three-fourths in civil and misdemeanor cases. (1891, chap. 5.)
California.—Three-fourths in civil cases. (C. C. P., 1897, sec. 618.)
Colorado.—Three-fourths in civil cases. (Unconstitutional, 28 Colo., 129; 1899, chap. 3.)
Idaho.—Three-fourths in civil cases. Five-sixths majority in misdemeanors. (Const., Art. I, sec. 7; 1891, p. 165.)
Kentucky.—Three-fourths in civil cases. (Stats., 1894, sec. 2268.)
Louisiana.—Three-fourths in crimes not capital. (Const., sec. 116.)
Montana.—Two-thirds in crimes not felonies (P. C., 2142); two-thirds in civil actions. (C. C. P., sec. 1084.)

Minnesota.—Legislature may provide for verdict by five-sixths of jury after six hours' deliberation. (Const., Art. I, sec. 4.)
Missouri.—Three-fourths in courts of record; two-thirds in other courts. (Civil cases, 1899, p. 381.)
Nevada.—Three-fourths in civil cases. (C. L., 1900, sec. 3270.)
Oklahoma.—In civil cases, and in criminal cases less than felonies, three-fourths of the whole number of jurors concurring shall have power to render a verdict. (Const., Art. II, sec. 19.)
South Dakota.—Three-fourths in civil cases. (Ann. S., 1899, sec. 6268.)
Texas.—In trials of civil cases, and in trials of criminal cases below the grade of felony in the district courts, nine members of the jury, concurring, may render a verdict. (Const., Art. V, sec. 13.)
Utah.—Three-fourths in civil cases. (Const., Art. I, sec. 10.)
Washington.—Ten of twelve jurors may render verdict in civil cases. (Ballinger's S., sec. 5011.)
Wyoming.—Three-fourths in civil cases. (R. S., 1899, sec. 3651.)

Mr. President, suppose that in a State where 9 out of 12 men can return a verdict it is discovered that 3 of them have been bribed; will any lawyer say that that verdict should be upheld? Yet it must be, according to this theory, and three bribed votes might be taken from the whole poll of the jury as well as from the ones that were cast and the verdict would stand.

Take it in those States where two-thirds of a jury—eight—may render a verdict. Suppose it were discovered that four had been bribed; would a verdict stand upon the ground that there were enough honest votes on that jury? Absurd! And yet is that nearly so grave a matter as the election of a Senator of the United States?

THE KNOWLEDGE AND RESPONSIBILITY OF THE SITTING MEMBER.

Now the question arises, did the sitting Member know? Into that, Mr. President, I do not intend to go. I have tried to handle this case with charity, and I do not intend to go into that except as the law goes into it; and upon that, Mr. President, I cite the English cases on the law of agency already read to the Senate. I believe that these authorities are unquestioned on the law of agency. They are recent authorities, not only on the law of agency, but on the law of agency in elections, and I will read some of them again:

If it were shown that the agent of the member bribed, even without the authority, and contrary to the express orders, of the member, his seat was forfeited—not by way of punishment to the member, but in order to avoid the danger that would exist if persons subordinate to the candidate during an election were led away, by their desire to benefit their superior, into illegal acts, the precise extent of which it was difficult to prove, but a single one of which, if proved, it was the policy of the law to hold, would have the effect of avoiding the proceeding. That a member was thus answerable for his agent at common law—his agent in the sense of conducting the election, not merely in the sense of being authorized to bribe—is perfectly clear. It was so laid down as clear by Lord Tenterden, before the act of the 17th and 18th Vict., c. 102, s. 36.

Now I ask the attention of the Senate to this statement of the law of agency—

That section where it speaks of agents must be construed by the light of the common law, and must be read as including agents authorized in the conduct of the election or to canvass, and not merely agents authorized to bribe.

Again, in the Blackburn case, the case from which I read the other day:

It was proved that on the 12th of October, that is about a month before the election, a circular was issued by an association in the town called the Conservative Association, addressed to "every manager, overlooker, and tradesman, and any other person having influence" in the town of Blackburn, requesting them to "secure in the municipal elections, as well as the parliamentary, the success" of the respondents; and it went on to say, "we venture to urge upon you most strongly the necessity of vigorous personal effort to secure the return."

Mr. Justice Willes said:

This circular must be taken as being the act of the respondents just as much as if each of them had written a letter to this effect.

I ask the attention of Senators who have any doubt as to whether the sitting Member is held by the law, to the following:

No matter how well the member may have conducted himself in the election, no matter how clear his character may be from any imputation of corrupt practice in the matter, yet if an authorized agent of his, a person who has been set in motion by him to conduct the election, or canvass voters on his behalf, is, in the course of his agency, guilty of corrupt practices, an election obtained under such circumstances can not be maintained. As it has been expressed from early time, that no person can win and wear a prize upon whose behalf the contest has not been legitimately and fairly carried on.

* * * * * * *

The amount of the injury done by the agent, if the injury has been done of the character which I have described, is immaterial.

* * * * * * *

It is not by way of punishment to the principal that the election is held void; it is not because the majority has been swayed or even affected by the malpractice that the election is held void, but it is because malpractices designated as corrupt by the common law and by the legislature in the corrupt practices act are so odious and are so dangerous that it is thought better to hold void an election where either such practices have generally prevailed, whether traceable to a member or his agents or not, or where a single instance of such corrupt practice has been distinctly traced to the member or to an agent of the member.

I defy any Senator to produce one authority which shows that the sitting Member is not held and bound by the acts of Browne, the agent.

CHANGE IN REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

But, Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] referred to a report of the committee and caused me to refer to the first report of the committee. In so grave a matter as an election case it would be my duty in any event to refer to it, but the Senator from New York made me refer to it.

The theory is now advanced that you have got to deduct the corrupt vote from the total vote cast, as well as from the vote cast for the successful candidate. Mr. President, I read the following paragraph from the original report of the committee, but which was not reported, and I call particular attention to it.

This is from the report which the majority of this committee at first approved, on Saturday, December 17, 1910, and would have reported, but which, for some reason, was not made on Tuesday, December 20, 1910, when the report before us was authorized, which on Wednesday, December 21, was substituted for the first report.

The majority for Senator LORIMER in the joint assembly of the two houses of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois was 14. Unless, therefore, 7 or more of these votes were obtained by corrupt means Mr. LORIMER has a good title to the seat he occupies in the Senate.

Mr. President, that was the first report prepared by the committee at the time we first met—Saturday, December 17. It appears to have been the opinion of the committee on that date that if 7 votes were corruptly cast the election was invalid. But now the committee takes a radically different position.

Mr. President, I do not think it is even necessary for me to summarize the facts. We know that at least 7 votes were tainted—four voters got bribes and three gave the bribes. The law is clear in the Caldwell case, in the Payne case, and in the Clark case, that these 7 corrupt votes vitiate this election.

I have discharged my duty, Mr. President, and discharged it without ill will. I have borne none. I have not felt the fervor of advocacy, but I have felt the earnestness of a judge acting under oath in determining this deeply solemn and destiny-freighted question.

The matter of cowardice was mentioned the other day. Mr. President, it has not been an easy thing, it has not been a pleasant thing, to be compelled to take a position against the validity of the election of the sitting Member or any other man. I appeal to no man to meet this case with courage. I take it we all have courage equally; but if it took courage to do one thing more than another, it required courage to take a position against the validity of an election which would unseat a Member of this body.

CONKLING IN THE CALDWELL CASE.

Mr. Conkling made that plea in the Caldwell case. He was quoted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]; but I wondered when the Senator from Michigan closed by quoting the appeal of the powerful Conkling, in which Conkling begged his colleagues to act under the law and not abandon it, in which he begged them to be brave and stand against public clamor, and not yield to it—I wondered why the Senator from Michigan did not tell this body what position Conkling took in the Caldwell case.

It was perhaps the greatest speech in the life of that amazing intellect. I believe, with one exception, it is considered Roscoe Conkling's masterpiece. It is weighty with learning, and yet it has the wings of an eloquence which only Roscoe Conkling could command, while its wit and its brightness make the reading of that speech as engaging an occupation for an hour as the reading of poetry or a novel.

Yet Roscoe Conkling in the Caldwell case took the position that the Senate could not go into the question of bribery of a legislature in the election of a Member of this body. Roscoe Conkling gave all his unusual ability and learning, all his overwhelming and dominant character, to try to persuade or coerce the Senate into holding that it was not any of our business whether anybody was bribed or not.

Why did not the Senator tell what Conkling's position was in that case? The older Senators will remember that from the time Roscoe Conkling took that position in that speech, which lasted two or three days on this floor, from that time on he began to sway and finally fell from the pedestal of confidence that the American people theretofore had in his judgment as a public man. That speech was the first, I believe, to destroy the public opinion of this Nation in Roscoe Conkling's soundness of judgment on public questions, a thing he never could recover.

It was only fair when the Senator from Michigan quoted, in the end of his speech, the eloquent words of Conkling, that he should have told us that Conkling spent all of that eloquence and all of that learning in trying to establish the proposition that we had no business to go into the bribery of an election to a seat in this body.

Oh, Mr. President, Conkling appealed to us to stand by the law then. Allen G. Thurman, sitting, I believe, about where the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] sits now, said substantially, at least it was his vigorously stated position: Yes, we will appeal to the law, but we are the Senate of the United States, and we have a right to go into the bribery, if any, by which this election was secured. Allen G. Thurman said that, in his opinion, the election was invalid on account of bribery. Conkling was opposed by Morton and Thurman, and most of the stronger, if less brilliant, men of his time. So Conkling's theory did not prevail, and Caldwell resigned his seat.

In the Caldwell case the Senate was again appealed to on the ground of Caldwell's blameless life, of his long period of years of toil and honorable business dealings; but that availed nothing, Mr. President, with the great judges of those earlier days. Judgment, Mr. President! What saith Holy Writ? "Thou shalt not wrest judgment."

OUR OWN RECORD TO THE REPUBLIC AND TO OUR CHILDREN.

We have not only a duty to perform; we have a record of our own to hand down, a record of our own vote—our own record to the Republic and to our children. It has to go down to our children and our children's children. How shall we hand down the record of our vote to our children and our children's children? For, Mr. President, the record is here, the testimony is here, the law is here, and they will last forever.

A pretty grave business—the validity of an election. It involves the life of the Nation. It involves the perpetuity of institutions which Senators whom I see before me went into the flaming rim of battle to give their lives for if necessary.

The name of Lincoln has been used in this case. It is fortunate. How would Lincoln look upon a question of this kind? None, I believe, had arisen up to his day. They have developed since. They seem to be the fruit of the commercialism of our time.

Washington's Birthday was day before yesterday. What do Washington and Lincoln mean to us? Our institutions, Mr. President, our free Government; which one did more than any other man to found, and the other did more than any other man to preserve. And yet our Government and our institutions are the things which really are at issue here.

We forget it in times of peace, but hundreds of thousands of lives have been yielded up, rivers of blood have flowed in order to give us the opportunity to vote, to have a Senate, to have a Government, and to have a flag. And shall that be treated lightly? Shall we dispose of it upon a false and simulated sympathy? Or shall we guard elections in this country, and especially to this body, as the very soul of American liberty?

Mr. President, way back in the time of the prophets the profound evil of bribery was known. What says the ancient Scriptures:

> The congregation of hypocrites shall be desolate, and fire shall consume the tabernacles of bribery.

And so it was. The peoples and the institutions of which that prophecy was uttered did die of fire, and their congregations of hypocrisy were desolate. It was true of Rome. It came well-nigh being true of England, but she saved herself.

Mr. President, the deepest students, and the most sympathetic with our institutions, more and more are asking the question, What is going to become of the American experiment for liberty? Is it to succeed or is it to fail? And there have not been wanting the ablest minds that doubted its success, because they have thought that the love of money and the love of office and finally the vice of bribery might undermine us.

I confess that to me it has been for years a serious matter what our future holds for us. Let us safeguard it, Senators, by our votes. And when, Mr. President, in that future, American institutions ask of the sentinel upon their walls, "Watchman, what of the night?" let us pray that that watchman shall not answer back in the words of the Hebrew prophet of old, "The congregation of hypocrites is desolate and fire has consumed the tabernacles of bribery."

No! Mr. President, let us hope and pray and vote that when the question is asked, "Watchman, what of the night?" the answer shall be, "Lo, the morn appeareth." [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Applause in the galleries is not permitted.

GOVERNMENT OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 836), which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

In compliance with the following resolution of the Senate of December 21, 1910—

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby requested to furnish to the Senate for its use, if he does not deem it incompatible with public interest, the following information, with departmental classifications of the same:

First. The total number of appointments which are made by the President upon nomination to and confirmation by the Senate.

Second. The total number of appointments which are made by the President, but which do not require nomination to and confirmation by the Senate.

Third. The total number of officers and employees of the Government subject to civil-service regulations, specifying classification and number of postmasters.

Fourth. The total number of officers and employees subject to removal by the President without action on the part of Congress.

Fifth. Total number of officers and employees of the United States Government, exclusive of enlisted men and officers of the Army and Navy—

I transmit herewith reports from the heads of the several executive departments and independent bureaus of the Government giving the information requested.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 24, 1911.

During the reading of the message,

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary is reading a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have not yielded the floor, but I will yield while the message is being read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would not have handed down the message but that the Senator from Indiana had resumed his seat before the Chair handed down the message.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I have not sat down at all, I beg pardon of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have not been in my seat at all. However, I will still hold the floor.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the message.

CONSTITUTION OF NEW MEXICO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 835), which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, etc., passed June 20, 1910, provides that when the constitution, for the adoption of which provision is made in the act, shall have been duly ratified by the people of New Mexico in the manner provided in the statute, a certified copy of the same will be submitted to the President of the United States and to Congress for approval, and that if Congress and the President approve of such constitution, or if the President approve the same and Congress fails to disapprove the same during the next regular session thereof, then that the President shall certify said facts to the governor of New Mexico, who shall proceed to issue his proclamation for the election of State and county officers, etc.

The constitution prepared in accordance with the act of Congress has been duly ratified by the people of New Mexico, and a certified copy of the same has been submitted to me and also to the Congress for approval, in conformity with the provisions of the act. Inasmuch as the enabling act requires affirmative action by the President, I transmit herewith a copy of the constitution, which, I am advised, has also been separately submitted to Congress, according to the provisions of the act, by the authorities of New Mexico, and to which I have given my formal approval.

I recommend the approval of the same by the Congress.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 24, 1911.

SHERIDAN RAILWAY & LIGHT CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 9003) to authorize the Sheridan Railway & Light Co. to construct and operate railway, telegraph, telephone, electric power, and trolley lines through the Fort Mackenzie Military Reservation, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House and request a conference with that body on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, the Chair to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. WARREN, Mr. BULKELEY, and Mr. TALIAFERRO.

FORT D. A. RUSSELL MILITARY RESERVATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 9904) granting certain rights of way on the Fort D. A. Russell Military Reservation at Cheyenne, Wyo., for railroad and county road purposes.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives and request a conference with that body on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. WARREN, Mr. BULKELEY, and Mr. TALIAFERRO.

DELAWARE RIVER BRIDGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives returning to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 10632) to authorize the North Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Delaware & Bound Brook Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Delaware River from Lower Makefield Township, Bucks County, Pa., to Ewing Township, Mercer County, N. J.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY DIRECT VOTE.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order, which is the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 134) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the joint resolution of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. KEAN. On which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I had intended to say a few words at the conclusion of this debate, but there seems to be a general desire to take a vote on the amendment and I will therefore withhold my remarks and permit the vote to be taken.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The pending amendment, as I understand, is the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I am in favor of the joint resolution of the Senator from Idaho providing for the election of Senators by direct vote of the people. In accordance with the action of the Republican State convention of Michigan, we are pledged to that course, and in good faith I propose to execute that promise so far as it lies in my power so to do.

I regret exceedingly that it seems necessary to complicate the question in order to bring this matter before the Senate. It would have been better to have confined the resolution to the direct election of Senators without complicating the question with other constitutional safeguards of incalculable importance to the American people. I am very anxious, Mr. President, that this joint resolution shall be passed by Congress.

I would cast no vote which in any manner could be construed as hostile to it. But mindful of the fact that this joint resolution must receive the sanction of two-thirds of the States, and believing that its purpose would be defeated if any other complication is to be introduced into it save the one providing for the direct election of Senators, and for the purpose of facilitating the disposition of this matter in a way which seems best calculated to finally obtain the result to which we are pledged, I shall vote for the amendment striking out of this joint resolution every other provision save the direct election of Senators. We can not afford to involve this question with sectional or race problems. Unrelated in any manner to the popular election of Senators by the people, a rider of this character would befog the question and introduce into the controversy matters of the most serious concern. We must deal fairly with the people and scorn the temptation to defeat this measure by indirection.

If the amendment should be rejected, I shall vote for the passage of the joint resolution presented by the Senator from Idaho, even with the race rider attached; but I shall call the attention of the legislature of my State to its far-reaching importance, glaring defects, and gross injustice to our countrymen. I simply desire now to make plain the fact that I favor the election of Senators by the people, and if I felt that my associates on this side of the Chamber were planning in any way to throttle that ultimate purpose, I would not for one moment identify myself with such an unworthy cause.

Mr. President, having confidence in the patriotism and the honor of my associates and believing that we will be permitted to take a vote upon the main question after this amendment shall have been disposed of, I shall vote to strip this question of every subterfuge, in order that it may be submitted to the people as they desire, and without further delay.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the joint resolution of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PERCY (when Mr. MONEY's name was called). The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] is absent because of sickness. He is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If present, the Senator from Mississippi would vote "nay."

Mr. BACON (when Mr. TERRELL's name was called). My colleague [Mr. TERRELL] is necessarily detained from the Chamber by personal illness. On this vote he is paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. If they were both present, my colleague would vote "nay," and I understand the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], as stated by the junior Senator from that State, and I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 50, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—50.

Beveridge	Crawford	Hale	Piles
Bradley	Cullom	Heyburn	Richardson
Brandegee	Curtis	Jones	Root
Briggs	Depew	Kean	Scott
Bulkeley	Dick	Lodge	Smith, Mich.

Brown	Gronna	Shively	Watson
Chamberlain	Johnston	Simmons
Clapp	La Follette	Smith, Md.
Culberson	Martin	Smith, S. C.

NOT VOTING—4.

Aldrich	Money	Terrell	Warren

So Mr. SUTHERLAND's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, as I have previously stated in the course of this debate, I am in favor of the adoption of the joint resolution as it came from the committee, and if the measure were presented to the Senate in that shape I would certainly give it my support and my vote. As I have further stated in the progress of this debate, if the amendment just acted upon should be adopted, I would not vote for the joint resolution; and I still adhere to that determination.

I had no anticipation that this matter was coming up this afternoon. I had supposed that we would proceed with the Lorimer matter. I was surprised, really, when that was set aside and we proceeded to the consideration of this question.

I desire to have an opportunity to give some reasons, very briefly, why I do not now give this measure my support. I would be very glad if I could have some other opportunity to do so than the present, for the reason stated, that I had no anticipation it was coming up this afternoon. I have some matters that are not now within my reach that I wish to use in that presentation.

I will say to the Senate in all candor and frankness that in so doing, if I may have their indulgence, I will not detain them at very great length, and will in no manner attempt to interfere with the desire of the Senate to finally pass upon the measure.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I desire, if I can, of course, to convenience the Senator from Georgia as to the time in which he shall make his remarks, but I should like, if we could, in view of the crowded condition of the Calendar of Business, to have a time fixed when we could dispose of the joint resolution.

With that purpose in view, I ask unanimous consent that upon Monday next, at 2 o'clock, when this matter comes up in the ordinary course of business, we shall take up the joint resolution and dispose of it during that day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the joint resolution be taken up at 2 o'clock on Monday, and that it be proceeded with until disposed of. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I understand that such an arrangement would take a great deal of time. If we are to dispose of this and one or two other matters it can only be done, in my judgment, by agreeing on a time for a vote on the bill and amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. Without debate.

Mr. LODGE. Without debate. I suggest that on Tuesday next at 2 o'clock, without further debate, we proceed to vote, in succession, on the constitutional amendment, the Lorimer case, and the tariff board bill.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Massachusetts knows that no such agreement as that last will be made, for I have told him so.

Mr. LODGE. I was not aware that the Senator had told me so.

Mr. BAILEY. I told the Senator when it was reported.

Mr. LODGE. The objection, as I understand, is to the tariff board bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course.

Mr. LODGE. Very well, Mr. President.

Mr. BAILEY. If we will agree to omit that——

Mr. LODGE. I can not omit that.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I renew the request that we proceed to vote at 2 o'clock on Tuesday next on the joint resolution amending the Constitution and on the resolution touching the seat of the junior Senator from Illinois.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumes that the Senator from Idaho yields for this purpose.

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. On what day?

Mr. BAILEY. On Tuesday was the request.

Mr. HALE. Will not the Senator vary it only as to the matter of time, and instead of saying at 2 o'clock say Tuesday morning immediately after the reading of the Journal? That gives us so much more advantage for the day.

Mr. LODGE. I think this is a matter where we ought all of us to make concessions to get these votes. I proposed an agreement on all three matters, two of which I am not interested in getting a vote on and one of which I am interested in getting a vote on. I think they had better go together.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Massachusetts certainly does not couple the questions involving a seat in this Chamber, a mere legislative matter, as I understand, which we decide as judges, and which I understand all Senators want to have disposed of, with an agreement with respect to a purely administrative matter. It surprises me, I may be permitted to say, beyond expression. The Senator from Massachusetts, of course, does not want to put himself in the attitude of preventing an agreement with respect to these two propositions by coupling with it one totally unrelated to it, to which he knows objection will be made.

Mr. LODGE. So far as I am personally concerned, I desire to get a vote on all of them, and I have no desire to interfere with getting a vote on any one.

Mr. BAILEY. That is right.

Mr. LODGE. I made the proposition, I will say frankly, because from what had been said to me this afternoon I believed that in that way we could get unanimous consent for all. If it can not be done, I have made my effort and I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will omit the last, the rest may be agreed upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks, the Senator from Idaho consenting that the request be first put before his, that on Tuesday, immediately after the reading of the Journal, without further debate, the vote shall be taken upon the constitutional amendment, and following that a vote be taken upon resolution 315 disposing of the Lorimer case. Is there objection?

Mr. STONE. I object to the last proposition embraced in the request——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. STONE. That is, to vote on the election of Mr. LORIMER. If I may be permitted, I should like to say that I do not think these two ought to be coupled any more than the Tariff Board bill should be coupled with the other two. I have no objection whatever to having as early a vote as possible on the Lorimer case. I give absolute assurance that I have no wish to unduly delay that vote. But I have already given notice of a purpose to speak to that resolution, and possibly other Senators may desire to speak, not at length but briefly.

Mr. President, I could not consent to put these two together and have perhaps the entire intervening time consumed in the discussion of the constitutional amendment. I object to the request therefore for that reason, and I make a request for unanimous consent that we take the vote immediately after the reading of the Journal on Tuesday upon the constitutional amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Say Monday. The Senator from Idaho has already preferred the request for Monday.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I shall have to object to Monday. It will be impossible for me to be here on that day.

Mr. STONE. I will put it Tuesday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Idaho. The Senator from Idaho consents to the Chair putting the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will change the date to Tuesday, if it will suit better. I would prefer Monday, but if there is objection to it, of course, I will yield to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho, as the Chair now understands, requests that a vote upon the constitutional amendment be taken immediately after the reading of the Journal on Tuesday next.

Mr. HALE. Without further debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without further debate.

Mr. NELSON. Unless opportunity is given to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and others who feel disposed to be heard before the vote is taken upon the joint resolution, I shall object; but if opportunity is given to the Senator from Georgia and others who want to be heard, I will agree to the time. Otherwise, I will not agree to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can not——

Mr. NELSON. I will object to it in its present form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very good. Objection is made.

Mr. BACON. I will state for the benefit of my friend from Minnesota that I have no objection to that time being fixed. I have not any very extended speech to make, and I have no doubt I will find an opportunity between now and Tuesday to give the reasons why I shall vote against the joint resolution in its present shape as amended.

Mr. NELSON. Very well, if the Senator from Georgia has no objection to the request, I withdraw my objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota withdraws his objection. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KEAN. Let it be again stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That on Tuesday, immediately after the reading of the Journal, and without further debate, a vote shall be taken upon the constitutional amendment, Senate joint resolution 134. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of objecting to the proposition, but as I understand it the joint resolution can not be debated at the time the vote is to be taken.

Mr. HALE. Not on that day.

Mr. DAVIS. Not on Tuesday?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can not be debated at that hour. At that hour debate is closed, and nothing is in order but voting on the joint resolution. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, I make a request for unanimous consent for Wednesday morning. I am thinking also of appropriation bills and other matters, but I think that business can be done if the Senate will agree to my request. I ask that on Wednesday morning upon the reading of the Journal, without further debate, a vote be taken upon what is known as the Lorimer case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate resolution No. 315.

Mr. HALE. Yes. I think, Mr. President, that with that matter solved and out of the way, as we have already disposed of the question of time upon the other contested matter, we will be in a condition next week to pass all of the appropriation bills. I should hope that all Senators will agree to this proposition. It gives plenty of time between now and Wednesday morning for any Senator who desires to debate this question to do it. Senators understand that the unvarying courtesy of the Senate is that when a Senator desires to speak upon a matter that is pending no objection is made. The Senator from Missouri has never——

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. STONE. After consultation with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], as far as I am concerned, giving notice to that effect, if I may be permitted to submit such remarks as I desire to-morrow morning after the routine business, I can have no objection to the request.

Mr. HALE. There will be no objection to that, I am sure.

Mr. STONE. I give that notice, then.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand what the notice was.

Mr. STONE. I consent, as far as I am concerned, to the request of the Senator from Maine that, by unanimous consent, we agree to vote on the Lorimer case upon Wednesday, with the understanding that to-morrow morning, after the routine business, I may be permitted to submit such remarks as I care to make on that case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from Maine is that immediately upon the reading of the Journal on Wednesday next, without further debate, the vote be taken upon Senate resolution No. 315, known as the Lorimer resolution. Is there objection? The Chair hears——

Mr. BACON. I make no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears none, and the order——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, wait.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that there was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to be heard.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to have an opportunity to be heard in regard to this matter at 2 o'clock on Monday. Beyond that I shall not venture to interpose any objection, nor shall I detain the Senate at any great length in regard to the matter at that time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not going to raise any objection except to say that I want an opportunity for just a very few moments before the case is submitted to the Senate, because of the rather direct and personal allusions made to some remarks of mine. I do not want to have the matter foreclosed so that I may not have an opportunity. If the business is going to be so crowded that I may not have such an opportunity before the time suggested, I would not feel like consenting to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota object?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I object until that matter is clearly settled.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest then that we agree that before we adjourn on Wednesday a vote be taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, before adjournment, a vote be taken upon Senate resolution No. 315. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVIS. I object.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object to the fixing of any time to vote upon the Lorimer case at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want to say in this connection, Mr. President, that I may be entirely willing to consent, so far as I am concerned, to a vote being taken if it is proposed at a later time, but I have very sufficient reason for asking that this matter shall not be closed at this time. I do not care to state more than that now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. BACON. I wanted to suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] that as the matter to which he wishes to address himself will not be disposed of until Wednesday, he may have an opportunity to speak on Tuesday. As the matter to which I wish to speak will be closed on Tuesday, I wish to ask him to let me take the time at 2 o'clock on Monday and transfer his notice to Tuesday.

Mr. OWEN. I would be very glad to acquiesce in that suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator modifies his notice accordingly.

Mr. BACON. With the permission of the Senate, I will briefly and somewhat informally endeavor at 2 o'clock on Monday to give to the Senate the reasons why I can not vote for the amended joint resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that Order of Business 1075, known as the Sulloway pension bill, be made the unfinished business to follow the vote on the constitutional amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to give notice to the Senate that I will ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill on Monday morning next, after the routine morning business.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Massachusetts withhold his motion?

Mr. LODGE. I will withhold it for a moment.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I withhold the motion and yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask that Senate resolution No. 315 be now laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution No. 315:

Resolved, That WILLIAM LORIMER was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Illinois.

Mr. BURROWS. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that resolution.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan moves the consideration of the resolution just read.

The motion was agreed to.

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

Mr. BURROWS. From the Committee on Finance I report back the bill (H. R. 32216) to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes, without amendment and also without recommendation. In connection therewith I also report the hearings had before the committee and ask that they be printed for the use of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request as to printing?

Mr. SMOOT. I should also like to have the report printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the printing of the report.

Mr. BAILEY. There is no report.

Mr. SMOOT. I mean the hearings before the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator said "report."

Mr. BURROWS. There is no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the hearings will be printed as a public document (S. Doc. No. 834), as requested by the Senator from Utah. The bill will go to the calendar.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I could not concur in the action which has been reported to the Senate, because I felt that the committee was in duty bound to report this important matter back with some positive recommendation, either that it should pass or that it should not pass. Personally I preferred a recommendation that it should not pass, and I desire very briefly to record my reason for opposing this agreement between the United States and Canada.

In the first place I believe that the best interest of our people requires that their Government shall accord to all countries the same privileges, and I am persuaded that by extending special favors to some countries we shall inevitably provoke the hostility of other countries. But, sir, if I did not object to these trade agreements upon a general principle, I could not support the particular one now presented for our consideration, because, in my judgment, it shamefully sacrifices the interest of the American farmer to promote the interest of the American manufacturer. I could justify this criticism by specifying a number of items in each of the three schedules which have been made the subject of this agreement, but I will not at this juncture occupy so much of the Senate's time as that would require, and I will content myself with two which illustrate this policy and condemn this whole arrangement.

The duty on wheat is entirely removed, but a duty on flour is left. The civilized people among whom I live eat flour, not wheat, and therefore this does not help them. The duty on cattle is repealed, but a duty is left on meat; and it will not make living cheaper to take the duty off the cattle, which the butchers and packers buy from the people, and still leave a duty on the meat, which the people buy from the butchers and packers.

Mr. President, I am not unmindful of the fact that this agreement removes the duty on print paper and wood pulp, from the importation of which the Government now collects nearly $500,000 of annual revenue; and I have been informed by the business manager of a great newspaper that this provision is worth $5,000,000 to the newspapers of this country. I might be glad to relieve them of this burden if they were not able to bear it; but, sir, before I ever vote to take the tax off wood pulp and print paper imported by a very small and prosperous class, I demand that it shall be taken from the bread and meat, which the industrious laborers of this Republic need to preserve their health and strength. Never, sir, will I give my consent to the enactment of a law which relieves the few who are rich and leaves the burdens on the millions who are poor.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, concurring most heartily with what the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has said, I wish to say further that I should have been better content if the Committee on Finance had submitted a report with a recommendation which represented the real sentiment of the committee. I do not improperly betray any secret of the committee when I say that a large majority was opposed to the reciprocity agreement and to reporting it favorably; but while that was the clear sentiment of the committee, and I have no doubt it is at this moment, so much clamor has arisen and so much charge that the committee intended to suppress the consideration of the reciprocity measure and to keep it from the Senate, that to meet that objection at last it was agreed, contrary to the majority feeling of the committee, that the bill should be reported and put upon the calendar for the action of the Senate; and, Mr. President, it is my understanding that it will take its course in accordance with the feeling and the desire of the Senate, whatever that may be. If the Senate, as is the case with a great many other measures that are reported and sent to the calendar, does not choose to take up the measure, that is a clear right of the Senate; and for anybody or any authority to claim the power to drive the Senate to do anything with regard to this measure would be an assumption of power unwarranted either now or at any time whatever.

I am willing that this bill shall be left just as the committee has left it—upon the calendar—to await such action or such nonaction as the Senate may desire.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, like the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], I did not concur in the action of the committee. I believed the bill ought to have been reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it pass.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] says that a large majority of the committee voted to report the bill without recommendation. Mr. President, the majority was not very large, as I view majorities, but fearing that I might trench upon the proprieties by stating in public the action of the committee, I refrain from further observations upon that head.

Mr. President, I am for this bill, and if those opposing it shall consent to have it considered during this session, I will support it. I regard it as an act of wise and progressive statesmanship, and it challenges my unqualified approval. Perhaps I ought to modify that expression. When I say "my unqualified approval," it is not the kind of agreement that I would have made if I had had the making of it. I would have admitted flour and meat and other necessaries free, as well as wheat and cattle, and, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] suggests to me, I would have insisted upon the admission free of duty of farming implements as well.

But, Mr. President, this bill is a step, as I view it, in the right direction in true economic legislation. I do not believe the passage of it would injure the farmers of the United States, nor do I intend by my vote or by what I may say when this bill is considered to impress the farmers of the United States that a protective tariff is necessary for them or beneficial to their interests.

I think, sir, that is all I care to say at this time.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. BAILEY and Mr. YOUNG addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield, and to whom?

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me just a moment, I simply want to say, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] that he will vote for the bill if those opposed to it will permit it to come to a vote, that so far as I am concerned I am ready to vote on it the hour after the Lorimer case is disposed of, and I will vote on it the more readily because I know that if it happens to pass, it will produce a political result in which I have great interest, for if it is true that this bill will reduce the cost of living, that reduction is going to come out of the farmers that live along the Canadian border, and as they have been furnishing the Republican majorities with which those States have been carried, I will feel a satisfaction in seeing them settle it with their friends. [Laughter.]

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 1 hour and 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 25, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 24, 1911.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HELEN S. HOGAN.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution (H. Con. Res. 62), which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate be, and hereby are, directed to erase their signatures to the bill (H. R. 25081) for the relief of Helen S. Hogan, and that the said bill be reenrolled with the words "act of February 24" changed to "act of February 25."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—NATIONAL M'KINLEY BIRTHPLACE MEMORIAL.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, reference of the bill (H. R. 32907) to incorporate the National McKinley Birthplace Memorial Association will be changed from the Committee on the Library to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, in the early part of the present session several measures were placed on the files of this House, to each of which my name was attached as the introducer. To say the least, some of them are rather startling in character. They are numbered and entitled, respectively, H. J. Res. 244, designating the 25th day of April in each and every year "American Day;" H. R. 27838, to construct a national auto highway along or near to the thirty-fifth parallel of north latitude from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean; and H. R. 27839, for the establishment of an experimental auto-coach rural service. Mr. Speaker, I of course appreciate the humor contained in these measures and if it were a matter merely personal to myself I would be inclined to view it in the manner in which the House evidently views it after hearing the disclosure of the titles. They were introduced, Mr. Speaker, without my knowledge or consent. I had intended to take no notice of them, but the newspapers of the country saw fit to comment on them, some newspapers treating them humorously, others critically, and still others in a strain that was rather caustic. I would still adhere to my determination to take no notice of them and to let them lie in the oblivion and contempt to which such legislation ought to be consigned, but I feel it is a matter of public interest which should not be ignored. I may at the same time take the opportunity to remark that the loose and informal way in which legislation is initiated in this House by the mere dropping of bills into a basket on the Clerk's desk renders it the easiest thing in the world for anybody to introduce anything in the shape of legislation with anybody's name attached to it. This legislation is printed at Government expense. However, I am not concerned about that now. My purpose to-day, Mr. Speaker, is to arrest the attention of the House for the purpose of clearing off the reflection, not upon me personally, but upon the House of Representatives as a body. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move that these measures introduced, as I have stated, without my consent, without my knowledge, bearing attached to them as introducer my name, unauthorized and unwarranted, be stricken from the files of this House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey, that there be stricken from the files of the House the bills H. R. 27839, for the establishment of an experimental auto-post-coach rural service; H. R. 27838, to construct a national auto highway along or near the thirty-fifth parallel of north latitude, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, and House joint resolution 244, designating the 25th day of April in each and every year "America Day."

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

VACANCY, BOARD OF REGENTS, SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House reconsider the vote whereby Senate joint resolution 145 was passed yesterday. There was a mistake in the joint resolution. It was a resolution appointing a member of the board of regents of the Smithsonian Institution and John B. Henderson, jr., was designated as "of Virginia." Under the law a Virginian could not be appointed to the class of regents in which there is now a vacancy; in any event Mr. Henderson is a resident of the city of Washington. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby the resolution was passed be reconsidered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the vote whereby Senate joint resolution 145 was agreed to be reconsidered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DALZELL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the Senate be requested to return the joint resolution to the House so that it can be amended.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear what the gentleman says.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated it, but the Clerk will read the title of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 145, providing for the filling of a vacancy which will occur on March 1, 1911, in the board of regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Senate be requested to return the joint resolution to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate be requested to return the joint resolution to the House.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

HENRY HALTEMAN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 20603) for the relief of Henry Halteman, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 28632, the river and harbor bill, and ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up the following conference report on the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 28632) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order upon the report.

The Clerk began reading the statement.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the report and the statement have been published in the RECORD of this morning, on page 3366, and is before all the Members of the House and is probably familiar to all present, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the statement be discontinued and that the conference report be adopted.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman separate his request that the reading of the statement be dispensed with from the other?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Illinois reserved points of order upon the report.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the unanimous report of the conferees be adopted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the points of order.

Mr. MANN. Well, the report is subject to a point of order, as far as that is concerned, in reference to the agreement on amendment No. 10, but I do not know that I would care to insist upon the point of order if we can have a statement in reference to that provision. The conferees have attempted to amend it, I see.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That is in regard to water-power development on the Coosa River?

Mr. MANN. The Coosa River lock and dam.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire any further statement than that given in the RECORD of this morning on page 3368? The amendment of the Senate as amended in conference comes strictly within the general dam act.

Mr. MANN. Apparently not.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. It not only allows the act to be altered or amended, but if at any time, in the interest of navigation, it becomes necessary to remove the power works, then such removal shall be done at the expense of the contracting parties and not at the expense of the Government.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to agree to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF TIME ON DESERT-LAND ENTRIES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 10318) authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to grant further extension of time within which to make proof on desert-land entries, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the Senate amendment was concurred in.

PENSIONS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that pension bills on the Private Calendar in order for to-day be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] asks unanimous consent that business in order to-day upon the Private Calendar be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

PLACING PRIVATE BILLS ON CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY], I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the following order, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Pending which motion, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order (No. 24), which the clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That after Monday, February 27, 1911, and during the balance of this session, it shall be in order to place on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Does that mean claims bills?

The SPEAKER. All bills in order on the Private Calendar for unanimous consent.

Mr. PRINCE. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

So the order was agreed to.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw report on the bill H. R. 5196, a bill to establish a fish-cultural station in the County of Hickman, in the State of Tennessee, for the purpose of making an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILSON] asks unanimous consent to withdraw the report on the bill H. R. 5196, for the purpose of making an additional report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] asks unanimous consent that business in order to-day on the Private Calendar be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does that refer to pension claims alone?

The SPEAKER. It includes all bills on the calendar, as the Chair understands.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I object, unless it refers just to those private claims. Did the gentleman make his request to include just pensions?

Mr. SULLOWAY. I said pensions.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] modify his request, and ask that pension bills in order to-day be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SULLOWAY. I do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MILITARY RECORDS OF CERTAIN SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House House joint resolution No. 276, modifying certain laws relating to military records of certain soldiers and sailors, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] is recognized.

The Clerk will report the first bill.

AARON WAKEFIELD.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10605) to amend the military record of Aaron T. Wakefield.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to so amend the military record of Aaron T. Wakefield, late of Company K, Fifteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, as to indicate that he received an honorable discharge.

With the committee amendment, as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That in the administration of the pension laws Aaron Wakefield shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from Company K, Fifteenth Regiment Maine Infantry Volunteers, on the 17th day of September, 1864."

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Is that a pension bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands it is. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of Aaron Wakefield."

OMNIBUS PENSION BILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 32822) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. HAMLIN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to announce the death of Henry Feltholl. I have just been informed that he died recently.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill by striking out that paragraph. That is at the bottom of page 30.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 10691) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SULLOWAY, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the above bills were passed was laid on the table.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and move a suspension of the rules for its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to suspend the rules and agree to the following resolution, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 32909, entitled "A bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes."

That the first reading of the bill in the Committee of the Whole House shall be by title and not otherwise;

Second, the consideration under the five-minute rule shall begin immediately after the title shall have been read, and the following portions only of the bill shall be open to consideration under the five-minute rule:

(a) The appropriation to enable the President to secure information under section 2 of the last tariff act, page 2.

(b) The appropriation for the investigation of departmental methods, pages 2 and 3.

(c) The appropriation for raising and removing the wreck of the battleship Maine (p. 118).

(d) The appropriation for rearranging and reconstructing the Hall of the House of Representatives (p. 211).

(e) The appropriation for canal fortifications (p. 229).

(f) And any original propositions that are germane and authorized by law not included in said bill.

Third. That upon the conclusion of the foregoing items in Committee of the Whole the committee shall rise and report the bill with all amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands a second. Under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to 20 minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I think that all Members of the House will recognize the fact, by merely turning to the last page of this bill, which is page 232, that if it is to pass the House in time for any consideration whatever in the other body, some arrangement must be made for its consideration in some manner other than under the ordinary or regular rules of the House.

In the first place, let me say, Mr. Speaker, that, realizing that there would be more or less congestion in the House during the closing weeks of the session, and that it would not be possible to pass this bill in the House under the ordinary rules, the subcommittee having in charge the preparation of this bill have devoted more time and more care to the investigation of the estimates and to their recommendations to the full committee than has ever been done by a subcommittee on the sundry civil bill since I have been a member of the committee.

Ordinarily the hearings at a short session do not cover a great many pages; but you will observe that the hearings on this sundry civil bill, including the index, which contains only a few pages, cover 967 pages. That is exclusive of the hearings on canal fortifications and also exclusive of the hearings on the canal estimates.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no time to yield just now. I will yield in a moment. So that this proposition excepts for consideration the items that are controverted or that in any way involve the question of politics or the adoption of new policies.

The first item excepted is the appropriation for the investigation by the President authorized in the last paragraph with respect to the cost of production at home and abroad. The second is in respect to the appropriation of $75,000 for the investigation into the departmental methods. Then the question of additional appropriation, which is very large, very much beyond what was stated would be necessary, the appropriation for the raising or removing of the wreck of the battleship Maine.

Also the appropriation for the fortification of the canal, which involves the inauguration of an entirely new policy, and which proposition ought to be considered fully and with great care by the House.

The propositions mainly that are to be reported back to the House with a recommendation that they do pass are the public-building items. In respect to these items I will say to the House that every dollar of money estimated by the Treasury Department as being possible for them to spend in the next fiscal year is carried in this bill and recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

The same is true of the river and harbor revised estimates of the War Department. All that the department has estimated can be expended in the next fiscal year is recommended in this bill.

The other parts of the bill to be reported back to the House with a favorable recommendation are the annual appropriations for the various departments of the Government, including the field service.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I see on page 109 the gentleman's committee has transferred the entire expense of the President's automobiles, carriages, and horses to the Quartermaster General of the Army and makes the Army carry that expense hereafter?

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon, that is not the appropriation. It does not impose any expense on the War Department. It merely enables the Executive to tear down the old stable he has there now and keep the horses at the quartermaster's stable. It does not provide for maintenance of the horses, but simply to keep them in the quartermaster's stable.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for me to read the provision?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will.

Mr. Hull of Iowa (reading):

The Quartermaster General of the Army shall hereafter provide suitable accommodations for and maintenance of the horses, carriages, and other vehicles of the President, etc.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is not the purpose of that provision at all. It is not for the maintenance of the horses; it is the maintenance of the shed or the stable in which the horses are to be kept, and the reason for that is the fact that the stable has been condemned by the veterinarians, and the War Department has consented because they have more space in the barn than the quartermaster needs; the War Department has consented that the automobiles and horses of the Executive may be housed in that department stable. That is the only change authorized.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman consent to strike out the words "and maintenance of"?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman thinks it is necessary, yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman state how much time was devoted to this bill by the full committee, a bill carrying $140,000,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. About twice as much time as is usually devoted to it—three hours.

Mr. HARRISON. Three hours to a bill appropriating $140,000,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. And now the gentleman comes in here and asks us to pass this bill practically under suspension of the rules, when only three hours have been devoted to it by the Appropriation Committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman misstates what I said. The subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on this bill devoted to it more than eight weeks.

Mr. HARRISON. But the full committee has only given it three hours' consideration.

Mr. TAWNEY. The full committee is always in touch with the subcommittee.

Mr. HARRISON. I think it is too much power put in the hands of a few men.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. If this rule is adopted, no points of order will lie against items in the bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. No.

Mr. LENROOT. There is new legislation in the bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. There is no original legislation in the bill except that where appropriations have already been made; there are no original propositions.

Mr. LENROOT. I noticed one on page 91, for instance, relating to the Interstate Commerce Commission, changing the method of the election of the chairman of the commission.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I will say to the gentleman that does relate to administration, and the reason for it was this: The two men who had conducted the investigations or negotiations between railroad employees and their employers were the former chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Chief of the Bureau of Labor. The chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission has been promoted and is now chief justice of the Commerce Court. He is acquainted with the representatives of labor organizations and is acquainted with the questions that arise, and this change is for the purpose of enabling the President of the United States and the labor organizations to get the benefit of his experience and knowledge with respect to negotiations for the settlement of controversies of that kind. That is the only reason for that change.

Mr. KEIFER. Do we understand that the excepted matters that are subject to consideration under the five-minute rule are also subject to the points of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. Points of order may be made. They are all subject to the rules that apply in the Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, subject to points of order, and subject to amendment as well.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. When the resolution was read, as I understood, there was put into this category of questions that might be considered the items which propose to re-form this House of Representatives and to appropriate $360,000 for that purpose.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is excepted.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I am glad of that. I do not want that change made.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, before I reserve the balance of my time I desire to say one other thing, and that is that the provision under F is for the purpose of enabling the Members of the House to offer in Committee of the Whole propositions that are germane and authorized by law, but not included in this bill. I will say that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] came to me a moment ago and requested the opportunity to offer an amendment to the appropriation for the immigrant station at the city of Baltimore. The appropriation that stands in the bill is $10,000. The appropriation as recommended by the committee and which was sent to the Printing Office was $110,000, so that original propositions that are germane to this bill and not included in it may be included. It is doubtless true that in several other cases the committee has omitted entirely items that Members think ought to be carried in this bill, and that have heretofore been carried in the bill, and they will have the opportunity of offering amendments of that character to the bill.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Will it be possible to offer an amendment to strike out a part of an appropriation?

Mr. TAWNEY. Of these excepted items, yes.

Mr. PEARRE. Will the gentleman offer that amendment with regard to the immigration station at Baltimore?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. TALBOTT. The gentleman from Minnesota will accept that amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make an inquiry on the line of the one that has just been made; it is just a question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no power in the premises.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am sure the gentleman from Minnesota will answer the question which I propose to put.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will wait until I take the floor again I will be very glad to answer his question. Possibly the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] can answer it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the House should understand exactly the meaning of the proposed rule. This bill carries $140,000,000 of appropriations, and under the operation of this resolution, if it be adopted, the House will have an opportunity to consider items which carry $4,075,000. The other items, carrying $136,000,000, will be passed by the House without even being read for the information of the Members. It is true, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] has said, that the subcommittee which had charge of this bill devoted perhaps more time to its consideration and preparation than had been devoted ever before in the history of the Congress. Through the unfortunate illness of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], he was unable to be present during the greater part of the consideration of the bill, so that so far as the minority is concerned but one Member of the minority has had the full and complete opportunity to know everything about the provisions contained in the bill.

This bill was reported to the House yesterday. It appears in print available for the use of Members of the House for the first time this morning, and before an opportunity is given to Members of the House to ascertain the provisions that are in the bill it is proposed that they vote in favor of a resolution that will prevent the bill being read for their information, or, after they have had an opportunity to ascertain what it contains, in any way attempt to modify the provisions, with the exception of the six provisions enumerated in this resolution. There are some circumstances, Mr. Speaker, under which I should be willing to pass a bill carrying these great sums in such a manner, but the situation does not exist at present which requires any such action on the part of this House. I shall not assume the responsibility of asking this House upon my assertion that items are proper and correct to pass a bill with $136,000,000 of appropriations in it, with which the Members are not familiar and have had no opportunity to familiarize.

It may be that if this House had had some time, ample time, to scrutinize this bill and to determine for itself whether the items were satisfactory, if the exigencies of the case demanded it, I should support a motion to pass the bill under suspension of the rules, but no such emergency exists at present.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that I went to the committee room of the Committee on Appropriations to get a copy of the hearings upon the bill in order that I might familiarize myself with the contents of the bill, and they were not printed and were not ready. That was day before yesterday.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The uniform practice has been not to make the hearings public until the committee has acted upon the bill, and as the bill was not acted upon by the committee until yesterday, it would account for the inability of the gentleman to obtain copies of the hearings until yesterday.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I inquire of the gentleman if it would be possible and practicable to start in with the discussion of this bill, and after it had been under discussion in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, if it should develop the necessity of such a rule, we could then determine whether we should pass it? But we should not pass it before we know what is in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A stronger reason for my objection exists than that stated by the gentleman from Georgia. There is no disposition upon this side of the House unnecessarily to occupy time upon this bill. The naval appropriation bill was passed in two days without any attempt to waste time or delay it. Never in my experience in the House was the naval bill considered and enacted so quickly. There is no necessity for this bill reaching the Senate before Monday. This House can afford to sit late to-night, early to-morrow, late to-morrow evening, and, if necessary, part of Sunday and on Monday in a proper consideration of this bill. It did sit for two nights, or a greater part of them, to prevent the consideration of a bill.

There is no good reason why it should not spend at least an equal amount of time in the consideration of a bill of so much importance to the House and to the country, and so far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I shall not support this resolution, because I would not, I repeat, assume the responsibility of asking Members of this House to vote to appropriate of the public revenues $136,000,000 for services that they have not had an opportunity to inquire into or exercise any judgment upon. It seems to me, so far as I am aware, there is no disposition to occupy time in general debate upon this bill, and much of it will be passed over without any controversy, but I believe it is an important matter that the House should have an opportunity properly to consider the various items and to determine their action upon this bill. How much time have I used, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, it so happens that I have very little personal knowledge of the hearings or items in this bill, due to my absence from Washington on account of illness, but had I been in attendance at every hearing and had I intimate knowledge of every item of the bill, I would not want to be one of five men to assume the responsibility at this time of asking the House to take our judgment and pass the bill practically without consideration. There is no bill that is brought before Congress that covers such a multitude of subjects or needs more careful scrutiny than the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Its very name indicates its character. It starts with the reindeer in Alaska and winds up with the Samoan chiefs in the middle of the Pacific and misses practically nothing in between. In order that the House may have some little idea of some of the numerous items that are carried in this bill relating to subjects of importance, while the discussion was going on I hastily jotted down a few of the things that are covered—for instance, appropriations for Alaska, armories and arsenals, Lighthouse Service, the newly created Bureau of Mines, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Customs Service, Revenue-Cutter Service, Immigration Service, Bureau of Fisheries, Geological Survey, Government Printing Office, internal revenue, Department of Justice, Life-Saving Service, military posts, national homes, marine hospitals, public land. I had only time to get down that far.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And the Panama Canal.

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably. Part of the Panama Canal is exempted under the rule, but only that part relating to fortifications.

Now, this is only a quick summary of a few items, and, as stated by my colleague, here is a bill carrying $141,000,000, and the House is to be given an opportunity to express its judgment upon $4,000,000 of it—certainly a very "generous" proposition!

I do not believe, and I do not believe the history of past Congresses warrants the notion, that we must pass this bill in this way in order to pass it at all. Take the short sessions of previous Congresses and you will see that this bill has been brought in just about this time in the session. We can, by attending to our business here, cutting out useless talk, cutting out general debate, and remaining in session during the day, to-night for several hours, to-morrow and to-morrow night for several hours, and, if necessary, as stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], some of Sunday, we can present this bill to the Senate by Monday morning in ample time for consideration there.

There is no disposition on the part of this side of the House to unnecessarily delay matters, but it is asking too much of the House that the judgment of five men should be taken in the appropriation of $141,000,000. It is true the whole Committee on Appropriations considered the matter, but they considered it to this extent, which is usual, of new legislation which was in the bill and as to some of the major items, but it is impossible for that committee, with the work that it has, to go into a detailed examination of a bill of this kind, and only the subcommittee can do it.

I have not had time to count the number of instances of new legislation contained in this bill, but there are quite a number of them, justifiable in my judgment, and yet I am not so sure that my judgment is always right that I am willing to ask this House to accept it on matters not within the regular business of an appropriation bill; and yet that is the proposition presented by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]. Let us turn in diligently and perform our duties here. If it so happens we do not get through in time the fault will not be ours, but let us not shirk our duties and pass the bill without consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will vote down this gag rule. Democrats are not trying to delay legislation at the end of this session. They are willing to cooperate with the other side of the Chamber to secure the proper and orderly passage of the proper bills through this House. The offering of this rule shows more clearly than anything else could do the fault of the system of investigation by the Appropriations Committee of this House—I mean investigation by subcommittee. Only two Democrats have had any opportunity to investigate these appropriations. Here is a bill of 232 pages carrying $140,000,000. Only two Democrats have had any opportunity to examine into the features of that bill. To be sure they are two of the best fighting Democrats in the House, but it is not fair to ask them to assume complete responsibility for their party in the premises.

This bill is one of those that excites most controversy year after year. It usually takes from 10 days to two weeks to pass it through the House. The Committee on Appropriations in full committee devoted but three hours to the consideration of the bill. This does not reflect in any way upon the members of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, but, at least, we might be given an opportunity to express a difference of judgment, if any there be, as to these appropriations.

Gentlemen in this House who have been fighting for a liberalization of the rules to diffuse the powers of this assembly among the respective Members of the House should vote against a rule which places the most important function of the House of Representatives in the hands of five Members. Why, Mr. Speaker, the hearings, even, have not been printed. There is not a Member of this House who has had an opportunity to examine into this bill outside the members of this committee.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that all of the hearings have been printed in considerable number, and they are accessible to every Member of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. When were they printed, may I ask? This morning only.

Mr. MACON. The bill itself was filed in this House only yesterday evening.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] well says, the bill itself was filed in this House only yesterday evening; and I protest against this endeavor to ram down the throats of the House of Representatives the most important appropriation bill of the session and pass it under a suspension of the rules. I hope the House will vote it down.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, in justice to the Committee on Appropriations and its members I am impelled to make a statement in reply to my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON]. All of the minority members of the Committee on Appropriations have had a full opportunity not only to know but to take part in the investigation of all of the bills in the Committee on Appropriations. While certain of the Members are specificially assigned to that work, the others are not excluded from it, and I am constrained to say, after an experience of six years, that to make the thorough and exhaustive examination and investigation required in the preparation of these bills I have come to the conclusion that, with more than five men designated to conduct the investigation, the hearings, as will be disclosed from an examination of hearings conducted where more than five men are assigned to that work, inevitably contain more of discussion between the investigators than they contain of replies from the men under examination. [Laughter.] I believe I should make this statement to correct an erroneous impression resulting from the statements of my colleague.

I yield, Mr. Speaker, the balance of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]. How much time is it, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Four minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I am not at this time in favor of this resolution, first, because I do not believe it is necessary in order to dispose of the business before the House and to pass this bill; nor am I willing to vote for a resolution which, if adopted, will prevent the consideration and discussion of many important items in this bill.

The gentleman from Minnesota says that in order to prevent an extra session it is necessary to adopt this resolution. This is another reason that we hear this morning why there shall be an extra session. We have seen in the newspapers and heard it stated as coming from high authority that we are to have an extra session in order to accomplish something else—in order to have considered and passed the Canadian reciprocity tariff bill.

For one, while I do not want to have an extra session, I want to state that if we shall have an extra session, as one Democrat I propose to vote and insist upon voting for a general reduction of the tariff between all the nations of the world before we proceed to take up any special legislation with respect to the tariff with any particular nation of the world. [Applause.]

I am opposed to this resolution which proposes that this bill shall be considered in this way, because this bill finds its way into the House about two days later than is usually the case with the sundry civil bill at a short session, and it is not necessary now to adopt such a measure in order to complete the public business.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. If I have time; yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the President calls an extra session, will it not be tacitly understood that he intends to sign the tariff bill that we shall pass?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not think it can be understood as to just what the President will do, judging from recent expressions that, it is said, have come from the White House.

Now, there are many important matters in this bill. I am willing to stay here, and I am confident many Members of both sides of the House are willing to stay here and devote all the time that may be necessary to the consideration of this bill and to pass it decently and in order and not pass it in the manner proposed by this resolution. Let us undertake to pass it in the usual way, and if we find we have not time and can not do so, then we can resort to drastic methods and not resort to them now, when, at the beginning of the consideration of this bill we have not had time to read the bill or consider it at all and when the Members have not had sufficient time to examine the hearings taken before the committee which reported it. Let us not blindly proceed to consider the most important appropriation bill that the Congress is called on to enact and pass a law appropriating one hundred and forty odd millions of dollars without the bill even being read or it being suggested that it can be amended or without the opportunity to strike out items which are embraced in it contrary to the rules of the House and which may be subject to a point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit me?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. That statement is not exactly correct.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. What statement?

Mr. TAWNEY. That no opportunity will be given for the consideration of any items in the bill or points of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I know what the rule is.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman did not state it, if he knows it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It is not necessary for me to state what every man in the House knows, unless it is the gentleman from Minnesota. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I said that this bill, excepting the items provided for in this resolution, appropriates some $136,000,000, and that there is to be no opportunity to consider any part of the bill except the items provided for in the resolution. That is what I stated, and the gentleman knows I knew it, and he knows that everybody else who has paid any attention to the reading of the resolution knew it, and it was unnecessary for him to make any such unwarranted suggestion as that.

That is all I desire to say. I will not vote for this rule now. In order to carry on the public business, in order to avert an extra session, I may vote for a rule at a later time in the session, which may be necessary to pass this bill; but I will not vote for it now.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. It might be profitable for us to stay here two or three nights to consider this bill.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CLAYTON. And I judge that the opposition would be willing to spend two or three nights in the high patriotic endeavor properly to consider a legislative measure of this importance and to save money to the people.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I think so, when they remained here two nights, and forced others to remain, in an effort to prevent the payment of just claims due to the creditors of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to use only four minutes of my time, and I will ask the Speaker to notify me when that time is consumed.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the first 61 pages of this bill cover items authorizing appropriations for the purchase of sites and the construction of public buildings. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is opposed to this rule, because, as he says, it affords no opportunity for making points of order. I do not know whether he has reference to the items in this bill which are subject to points of order, placed there at his request, but nevertheless it is true that there are some items here which increase the limits of cost where the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, after consideration, recommends such action on the part of the Committee on Appropriations, because of mistakes that were made in previous bills.

But, Mr. Speaker, they talk about jamming the bill through the House of Representatives. Unless some such measure as this is agreed to, it will be jammed through the other House of Congress without any consideration whatever. We know the character of amendments usually put on this bill in the other branch of Congress, and there will be no opportunity for consideration of such amendments at this session of Congress unless some such measure as this is agreed to.

Many Members in this House will recollect the scene witnessed on the floor of this House when, a few years ago, the House of Representatives was held up by one Senator for the purpose of coercing the House into an agreement in favor of an appropriation that nobody denies was unjust and unnecessary and unauthorized by law.

It is for the purpose of saving some time to the House for the consideration of the Senate amendments, not only on this bill, but on other House bills, that I have offered this provision.

And I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is not the first time that it has been proposed to pass the sundry civil bill under a suspension of the rules. It has been done frequently without any opportunity whatever given to the House for the consideration of controverted matters, such as is proposed in this rule. Every item of difference of any consequence carried in this bill is excepted in the rule or in the resolution which I offered. The time for consideration of these items is not limited under the five-minute rule, except as the rules of the House limit their consideration. The public building items, the appropriation for the Treasury Department, the collecting of revenues, the appropriation for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the appropriation for the Government Printing Office, the appropriation for the Soldiers' Home, the appropriation for the Interior Department, including the Land Service, the appropriation for the War Department, the appropriation for the Interstate Commerce Commission are all appropriations that pertain to the administrative affairs of the Government. There is nothing new in that, as I said before, except where some legislation was necessary in the administration of the appropriation, which necessity has arisen as a result of the experience of the department.

If we are going to consider this bill under the ordinary rules of the House, if we pass it at all, it will be too late for the House to give any consideration whatever to the propositions that we know are now pending and ready to be placed on it when it reaches the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this bill must pass both Houses and the conference report be agreed to in both Houses by a week from to-night or it can not pass at this session, because it takes all of Friday night to enroll the bill and have it signed by the President by noon of Saturday. If that be true, and this resolution be not adopted, it is beyond hope that this bill can get to the Senate to-morrow night. Unless this bill goes to the Senate to-morrow night it is practically impossible for the Senate committee to consider this bill and pass the bill through the Senate and give any substantial time for the conferees.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Not now; I will later. If this bill has no time for consideration in the conference committee, it will mean the loss of millions in all probability to the people. That is our uniform experience, that we must have some time to thrash these matters out in conference, running into 250 or 300 amendments, if millions are not to be wasted.

These gentlemen who have been on this subcommittee complain that the House has not had adequate time to consider these questions. The gentleman from New York said that his colleague from New York and the gentleman from Kentucky were two of the ablest Members on the Democratic side. I say that they are two of the ablest Members on either side, and that their fidelity can not be questioned. [Applause.] Every Democratic Member of the whole committee has had an opportunity to attend these eight weeks of hearings.

Day before yesterday the bill was in the committee room for the observation of every Democratic Member of the committee, and has been there ever since. Yesterday it was considered by the whole committee, and yet all these gentlemen who are talking about gag law fail to point out one single item that needs consideration in this House that is not embraced in the resolution offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]. Every man who votes against this resolution votes to bind and tie the hands of the House conferees and jeopardize millions of the public money, when he knows that every item in this bill has been carefully scrutinized by economic, prudent, able, careful Democrats, who would not report in favor of the expenditure of money needlessly. This resolution is therefore a resolution not only for economy of time but for economy of money. This resolution provides for the orderly transaction of business and not for a hasty and ill-considered action. It is somewhat amusing that gentlemen who but the other day were willing to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of a great tariff measure, to cut off every single amendment, and to put the bill upon its passage without reading are now shocked at a gag rule that takes up for specific consideration every proposition known to be in dispute in this bill and allows it to be fully fought out upon the floor of the House, and only asks that those measures, those provisions that have not been criticized be passed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman know that, for instance, items relating to the Geological Survey are always a matter of dispute and amendment on this floor?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I know that in this bill so completely is everything asked by the Geological Survey granted that the old fight is not in the bill this year.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, but sometimes the position of men is not determined by the department.

Mr. TAWNEY. If my colleague will permit me, I will say the controversy heretofore has been over appropriations for the Technological Branch of the Geological Survey, which has now been transferred to the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. SHERLEY. Neither of the gentlemen means to say to this House that only the items contained in this rule are the items about which there is controversy.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I want to say right in that connection that I was one of those who went through this bill and conscientiously picked out the items that we thought would be in serious dispute in this House and put them into this resolution, and not one of the gentlemen familiar with this bill has undertaken to state to the committee a single matter that was in dispute in the committee or that he thought would be in dispute in the House and not excepted in this resolution.

The SPEAKER. All time has expired. The question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 137, noes 108.

So (two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the motion was rejected.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 32909, the sundry civil appropriation bill. Pending that motion, I ask the gentleman from New York if we can agree upon any time for general debate?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No one, so far as I am aware, desires any time on this side.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed in ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be closed in committee in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that I believe we can expedite the consideration of the bill by dispensing with the reading of some of the items relating to public buildings.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am going to ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill entirely.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that, but should we not ask unanimous consent now to dispense with the reading of some particular items?

Mr. TAWNEY. We can do that in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection and it is so ordered. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. MANN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 32909) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, reference has been made in debate on the resolution that has just been under consideration to the amount carried in this bill. The aggregate amount is $141,115,030.62. The total estimates, including the regular estimates and the supplemental estimates, for appropriations under the sundry civil bill aggregate $155,576,633.99. The committee has reduced the estimates in the aggregate $14,461,503.37. The aggregate of this bill is in excess of the current sundry civil law. That excess, however, consists of two items. There is carried in this bill $16,579,725 more on account of public buildings than was carried in the current sundry civil act. The appropriations carried in this bill for the Isthmian Canal are in the aggregate $45,560,000, as against $37,885,000 carried in the current law. The appropriations for fortifying the canal are $3,000,000, which makes the total of $10,705,000 carried in this bill on account of the Panama Canal greater than the appropriations carried in the current law.

Now, it is not necessary, Mr. Chairman, for me to go into any lengthy explanation of any of the items of the bill inasmuch as the bill will be read under the five-minute rule. Every paragraph and any item can be fully explained when it is reached. I want to call the attention, however, of the committee to the fact that the committee, as a result of a very careful investigation of the estimates and scrutiny of the demands of the departments, has reduced the estimates more than $14,000,000. The committee also in the investigation of the estimates went to the Panama Canal and personally conducted hearings on the estimates there on the ground, as has been the custom of the committee for four years now, or almost ever since the beginning of the canal construction; and I hope before the adjournment of this Congress that some provision will be made to enable Members of the House who are now members and will be members of the Committee on Appropriations in the next Congress to visit the canal and there personally examine the estimates for canal appropriations for the fiscal year 1913. I am convinced after several visits there for that purpose that the result is a saving to the people of the United States in the expenditures that are going on on that zone. Two years ago, or a year ago last November, the committee visited the canal and investigated the canal estimates for expenditures for the fiscal year 1911. As a result of that visit the estimates for the canal were reduced over $11,000,000, and I express the hope now that opportunity will be given to Members of the House who will have this subject under consideration in the next Congress to visit the canal for the purpose of investigating canal estimates. I do not wish to occupy any more time, and I ask for a reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE.

To enable the President to secure information to assist him in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by section 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenues, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, and the officers of the Government in administering the customs laws, including such investigations of the cost of production of commodities, covering cost of material, fabrication, and every other element of such cost of production, as are authorized by said act, and including the employment of such persons as may be required for those purposes; and to enable him to do any and all things in connection therewith authorized by law, $400,000, to continue available until the close of the fiscal year 1913, together with the balance unexpended July 1 next of the appropriation made for these purposes for the fiscal year 1911.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The paragraph is subject to the point of order because of the words contained in lines 14 and 15—

To continue available until the close of the fiscal year 1913.

This is one of the annual appropriation bills, and it provides the money for the support of the Government for the next fiscal year. Under the covering-in act any money appropriated for the service of the Government for a fiscal year remaining unexpended at the expiration of two years must be covered into the Treasury. The attempt to continue this appropriation available during the fiscal year 1913 is in fact to extend the appropriation made at this time beyond the two years fixed in the covering-in act. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, as this is a bill making annual appropriations for the support of the Government there is no authority that I have been able to find which justifies the appropriation for some future period beyond the fiscal year for which the appropriation is to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York contend this would be in contravention of the covering-in act?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The effect of it is.

The CHAIRMAN. In what respect, the Chair would ask?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It extends the time within which the appropriation will be available one year. Under the covering-in act an appropriation for a fiscal year is available two years beyond the expiration of the fiscal year.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will my colleague permit me to ask him a question there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. If your contention is right, then the covering-in act would prevent permanent appropriations such as are made at every session of Congress, because these permanent appropriations are made for an indefinite period of time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not aware of any permanent appropriations that are made at every session of Congress. Permanent appropriations are made, and they continue available under the express terms of the covering-in act.

Mr. TAWNEY. I meant the continuing appropriations that are made by Congress every session. I did not mean permanent annual appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We reappropriate. We have the authority to reappropriate, and in that way it becomes a new enactment. But this does one of two things—it either changes the law by curtailing the time for which the appropriation was made available under the covering-in act or else it extends it beyond the time it is made available during the covering-in act. Under the covering-in act the appropriation for the fiscal year 1912 is available for two years after the expiration of that year. This purports to limit it to one year.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, no. The gentleman misapprehends the meaning of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I may misapprehend what you intended to do, but I do not misapprehend the effect of this language.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think the gentleman does.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And if it does not do that, Mr. Chairman, it does extend an appropriation made in this bill for the next fiscal year beyond the two years in which it must be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will my colleague yield? I would like to ask him when this covering-in act takes effect, whether from the date of the passage of this bill or from the time the appropriation under it becomes available?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Neither.

Mr. GOULDEN. I wanted to find out when the two years began and when they would end.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It does not begin at either time suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The covering-in act is in force all the time, and it applies to the appropriation at the time it becomes available. All of this appropriation is available the 1st of July, 1911.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If the gentleman will pardon an interruption, the covering-in act provides simply this: An appropriation for a fiscal year can only be used for expenses or contracts or obligations of that fiscal year. Until the passage of the covering-in act they could pay on contracts made within the fiscal year or the expenses of the fiscal year for any number of years in advance. The covering-in act simply provided that after the expiration of two years from the end of the fiscal year, if the appropriation was for the fiscal year, the money should be covered into the Treasury. That is what is known as the covering-in act. So it is to begin from the end of the period for which the appropriation is made. And in this case the appropriation is made for the next two years, and therefore would be two years from the end of the period for which the appropriation was made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is contrary to the practice of the House which has existed from the foundation of the Government and which has become as firmly fixed as one of its rules.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The words "to be available until expended" have appeared in nearly every appropriation and appear probably 50 times in this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And they continued in it because nobody has taken them out on points of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. You said it was contrary to the practice of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is clearly a violation of the rule. I call the attention of the Chair to a decision in volume 4 of Hinds's Precedents, to the effect that the general appropriation bills, except deficiencies, provide for the next fiscal year. While there is no written rule of the House limiting the appropriations carried in the bill for the next fiscal year, the uniform practice of the House since the foundation of the Government has confined these appropriations to one fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] inform the Chair, under the covering-in act, if this appropriation were only made available for the next fiscal year, when the covering-in act would require the unexpended balance to be covered back into the Treasury in the general fund?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the covering-in act provides——

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from New York will permit me——

Mr. FITZGERALD. All unexpended balances that shall have remained on the books of the Treasury for two years——

Mr. TAWNEY. For two fiscal years——

Mr. FITZGERALD. For two fiscal years, shall be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury.

Mr. TAWNEY. But there will be no balance in this until the end of the second fiscal year. The money is appropriated for two years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the construction of the gentleman from Minnesota it would be possible in this bill to appropriate for three fiscal years, and as there would be no balance at the end of any fiscal year but the third the covering-in act would not apply until the end of the fifth year.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from New York or the gentleman from Minnesota able to inform the Chair whether an appropriation made for the next fiscal year under the covering-in act would be covered into the surplus fund on July 1, 1913, or on July 1, 1914?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would be July 1, 1914.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It would if the appropriation was for one fiscal year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. July 1, 1914.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Three years from July 1 next. If this were an ordinary fiscal-year appropriation, the balance would be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I submit that, from the admission of the gentleman, this is, in effect, an amendment of the covering-in act, because that act makes the appropriation available only for the fiscal year 1913.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The item in the bill makes the appropriation continue available until the close of the fiscal year 1913. The covering-in act referred to, section 5 of a bill enacted in 1874 (18 Stat. L., p. 110 of pt. 3), provides that—

> From and after the 1st day of July, 1874, and each year thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause all unexpended balances of appropriations which shall have remained upon the books of the Treasury for two fiscal years to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury.

Then certain exceptions are provided for which do not include the item in this bill.

It will be noted that the law only requires that "unexpended balances of appropriations which shall have remained upon the books of the Treasury for two fiscal years" shall be carried to the surplus fund. That law will still operate if this item is enacted into law. The Chair can not see how it changes that law in the slightest degree.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the Chairman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Part of this section refers to an unexpended balance which may exist on July 1 next, which it is undertaken to reappropriate and make available until 1913. Now, if this section should be enacted into law, at what period of time would the covering-in act affect such unexpended balance of July 1?

The CHAIRMAN. The item in the bill is merely a reappropriation of an unexpended balance, and it has been repeatedly held that the House, even over the objection of a point of order, could appropriate an unexpended balance as an appropriation. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "to continue available until the close of the fiscal year 1913," in lines 14 and 15, and the words "four hundred," in line 13, and insert in place of "four hundred" the words "two hundred and fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> On page 2, line 13, strike out the words "four hundred" and insert "two hundred and fifty."
> And in lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "to continue available until the close of the fiscal year 1913."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish the House to understand exactly what is proposed to be done at this point. This so-called Tariff Board appeared before the Committee on Appropriations in defense of its estimates, and in the hearings it was disclosed that the board believed it could expend $250,000 during the next fiscal year. At some place undisclosed and which the chairman of this so-called board could not exactly fix, the suggestion originated that the appropriation should be made available for two fiscal years, and that $150,000 additional be appropriated for the fiscal year 1913. It appeared from the hearings that the commission is expending now at the rate of $150,000 a year, and hopes to be able to expend $250,000 next year, if it obtains the money. To me it seems to be absolutely indefensible for the House to attempt to forestall action in the next House regarding any of the branches of the public service, so as to provide now the funds necessary, rather than wait until the proper time to provide them. Congress might just as well appropriate all the money needed for the fiscal year 1913 at this time and relieve the next House from the necessity and trouble of providing the funds to conduct the Government.

It will be interesting, however, Mr. Chairman, to ascertain just what this so-called tariff board is doing. The act under which the appropriation is made is to enable the President to secure information to assist him in the discharge of his duties. It would naturally be assumed that in the selection of a tariff board men would be selected who would be able to furnish the President with information to assist him in the discharge of his duties under the so-called maximum and minimum provisions of the Payne tariff act. One of the very first things done by this commission, however, was to employ an expert at the rate of $500 a month for the purpose of making for the commission a descriptive study of the iron and steel industry in general as related to the tariff, and from the technical point of view of the iron and steel man to analyze and criticise the items of the tariff and their classification, showing how far, if at all, the present classification is out of date, considered from the point of view of modern industry, and the relation of one item to another in the tariff.

So that after having appropriated $250,000 to enable the President to employ persons to assist him in obtaining information regarding items in the tariff bill, the gentlemen appointed by the President for this purpose find it necessary to employ other gentlemen to make a careful study of the meaning of the various provisions of the tariff bill for their benefit, so that they may be instructed as to the proper manner in which to take up the duty of obtaining information for the President.

And if this were to be carried to its logical conclusion, and if this expert, being familiar with the iron and steel business from the standpoint of modern industry, would believe it necessary to have somebody instruct him as to the meaning and the reason for the classification and arrangement of the items in the steel schedule under the tariff from the standpoint of tariff makers, it would be perfectly proper to give him an assistant to instruct him, so that he might instruct the commission, so that the commission might give the President information and enable him to make suitable recommendation to Congress on the tariff.

Mr. SIMS. So that we might ignore them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, the commission, without having done any work at all which has been of any benefit to anyone in connection with the revision of the tariff, has in its employ 66 men, with compensation aggregating $12,000 a month.

Most of us would imagine that with such an organization and such a force at the end of seven or eight months it would have been possible for this board or body to submit some intelligent report to the Committee on Ways and Means when it had under consideration the so-called reciprocity agreement. My information is that the committee desired any information that was in the possession of this board, but it had none which it could furnish to the committee for use in its work in connection with that bill.

This appropriation might more properly be designated "an appropriation to enable the administration to obtain, if possible, information which would aid it in the coming national campaign."

Apparently the Executive is not at all informed upon the question of the tariff. The board which he selects is unable to make an intelligent investigation until some one writes out a descriptive analysis of what the items in the tariff law mean.

After seven or eight months the commission, although it took up the investigation of the print-paper and wood-pulp tariffs, which had been exhaustively and thoroughly investigated by the committee presided over by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], was unable to furnish any information whatever to the Committee on Ways and Means.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the administration should be satisfied with wasting half a million dollars in this way in two years without attempting to fasten this so-called body on the people for an additional year to run beyond the presidential campaign. The compensations fixed for the various employees of this commission are far in excess of the compensation fixed for any similar employment in any other department of the Government. The amendment which I propose simply tests the sincerity of the gentlemen who are advocating this item and will give to the commission all the money requested for the next fiscal year, and which will avoid the indefensible, unusual, and unheard-of practice of attempting to circumvent the result of the last election by taking from the coming Congress the power to determine whether any money shall be appropriated for a particular service.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman state whether there is any precedent for such a course?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have been unable to find any similar situation. Some gentlemen justify it on the ground that as this is the policy of the administration they have a right now to provide the funds to enable the policy to be carried out regardless of whether it should be determined in the next Congress to have it carried out. I submit that it can hardly be defended on that ground; otherwise every appropriation carried in all the appropriation acts should be for the service not only during the next year, but during the following year.

There is no excuse and no explanation except perhaps one, and that is that there is such gross ignorance on the part of the administration about matters relating to the tariff that even though the country will not agree with the administration when the next election is held, it may be of some value to complete the education of some gentlemen which has already been initiated by the Congress.

Somebody else may suggest some other explanation, but when the President is given $250,000 to employ persons to assist him to obtain information to enable him to perform his duties, and he selects gentlemen for that purpose, and they employ at least two men at a compensation of $500 a month for the purpose of informing them as to the meaning of the tariff law about which they are to furnish information to the President, it seems quite apparent to me that the so-called tariff-board system will not work out as some gentlemen had hoped.

Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I not only believe that the board is illegal as at present constituted, because it violates the antiboard council provision enacted at the instance of the gentleman from Minnesota, but, as has been demonstrated, it is wholly worthless. I see the gentleman from Connecticut is honoring me with his attention. Although this tariff board has been at work some months on the wood-pulp and print-paper schedule, is it not a fact that the Committee on Ways and Means was unable to obtain any information from it of any value?

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman desire my views on the subject?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not desire the gentleman's views now. The gentleman can take his own time to express his views.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL rose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield to the gentleman from New York for a question.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman think that $400,000 is too much for two years?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. The gentleman who appeared before the committee stated that they were now expending at the rate of about $150,000 a year. They believe that they could use $250,000 the next year, and that probably they would require $150,000 for the following year.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. When the tariff commission bill was up for consideration it was stated that $250,000 would not be nearly enough to pay the expenses of the board, and it seems to me that the committee is economical in making it $400,000 for two years, for this commission is doing the same work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Emery testified before the committee "we are convinced that $250,000 is all we ought to expend during the coming fiscal year."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to answer one statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and that is the charge that this board is illegal, that it has been created in violation of section 9 of the sundry civil act approved March 4, 1909. That act prohibits the expenditure of money on account of any commission, board, or other similar body not authorized by law; but this is an appropriation to enable the President of the United States to make certain investigations, which investigations are authorized by law, and to employ certain persons for the purpose of aiding him in the making of these investigations. He is at liberty to call the people employed by him whatever he may see fit to call them. He may constitute them in any kind of an organization he may see fit or deem advisable. The creation or existence of this board under the general authority of the tariff act is in no sense a violation of that provision, and the gentleman from New York knows it, or he would have made a point of order against the paragraph on that ground.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that I have not the slightest hesitation in expressing my views concerning this matter. As I look at it, this is the situation: The administration and one branch of the legislative part of the Government in the next two years will be politically antagonizing the other branch of the legislative part of this Government. I hold this opinion. I believe that it is courtesy for the Democratic House of Representatives to give to the officials of the Republican administration such facilities as are necessary for them to carry out their views in accordance with previous legislation; and at the same time, I believe it is due to the Democratic House of Representatives that they should have a free hand in carrying out their views as to certain matters concerning which legislation must be had; and I have suggested once or twice before on this floor that I thought the Democratic Ways and Means Committee should come before Congress and ask that provision be made for such necessary expenses. I am opposed absolutely, from start to finish, to the tariff propositions which I think the gentleman advocates, and will advocate in the next two years, and yet I am ready to vote to give them such facilities as will be necessary to carry out their ideas, believing that the whole country will choose between the respective policies and decide for legislation in the future, and for many years in the future, after this experiment has been tried, in favor of the views that I hold.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. What would the gentleman think of his Democratic colleagues if they acted upon the assumption that he would not vote as he has just stated he would?

Mr. HILL. I do not know. I do not know that I quite understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman says that he, as a Republican, would always be willing to help to provide the Democrats with the facilities to carry out their theory.

Mr. HILL. I think your party is entitled to that.

Mr. SHERLEY. What would the gentleman think of us if, because we did not believe that the gentleman would do what he said he would do, we should undertake by legislation to handle the matter ourselves?

Mr. HILL. Oh, I do not look at it in that way.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the Republican Party is undertaking to do things on the assumption that we will not do them.

Mr. HILL. I think the administration, in maintaining its political views, has just as much right to consideration as the Democratic Party has in antagonizing them.

Mr. SHERLEY. Undoubtedly; but here is the proposition: This Republican majority in this House is doing an unprecedented thing in making an appropriation for two years, on the theory that the next House being Democratic would not do something.

Mr. HILL. I do not look at it in that way at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. And I will say that we are also likely to do another unprecedented thing——

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, I would not attempt to limit his party's ability in that regard.

Mr. TAWNEY. And that is that in the general deficiency appropriation bill there will be carried an item appropriating the amount which the chairman of the Democratic Committee on Ways and Means of the next House has asked for, for the purpose of enabling that committee to conduct its investigations.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is not unprecedented in any sense.

Mr. HILL. I am in favor of both propositions.

Mr. TAWNEY. So am I.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] will allow me to make one suggestion before he proceeds to address the committee, as I suppose he has the privilege of closing debate, I simply want to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it is worth while to contrast conduct at times. A year ago when this appropriation bill was before this House that side of the Chamber voted practically solidly not to allow the President to make these investigations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has not the result justified our action in what has been done in that regard?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But the gentleman from Kentucky resents the aspersion that that side of the House would vote against it next year, whereas they are on record only a year ago as practically solidly voting against this appropriation. Now, what is the Republican attitude? The Republican attitude is that we want this money in the hands of these men authorized by the Payne law. We concede, however, that it is a partisan body, but we want the people to have full information, and so we put in the deficiency bill this year an appropriation to enable the Democratic Ways and Means Committee of the next House to obtain their side of this question. In other words, our attitude has been the same from the beginning, of appropriating money for a tariff board to obtain information, which we believe will be fair and impartial and which you might think will be partisan, and then we vote money for your agency to obtain information from your standpoint. But when the vote came in the House a year ago you said we should not have the money to make the investigation through the President of the United States and you did vote against it. A few days ago, notwithstanding the unanimous report from the Committee on Ways and Means in favor of a tariff board, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the prospective chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the next House, headed a fight and led nearly all the Members upon that side of the House to follow him against the leader of the Democratic side of the House, in opposing any tariff board at all.

With this vote of a year ago against the appropriation, with this vote the other day against the existence of a tariff board, we hope we are not characterized as having unkindly feelings to the gentleman when we assume that if he gets a chance no money will be appropriated for this subject when they are in the majority.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In a moment—we are willing to give the money, and we have put in the deficiency bill money to make the investigation from their standpoint, but as long as you have captured only one of the two Houses of Congress——

Mr. FITZGERALD. We did not have a chance at the other last year.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. All right; we will give you a chance and all you want before we get through.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We will carry the whole works before we are through.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. When you carry the whole works you will be in full possession of the Government, and not until then.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman is going to provide money for the Democratic Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. With pleasure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Thirteen or fourteen thousand dollars?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. All they asked.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what was asked?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the administration takes this appropriation, together with that made heretofore, $650,000, does not the gentleman think that is really an indication of the difference of intelligence on the tariff question between the two sides of the House? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will say, in my judgment, the information obtained by the gentleman's committee will come high at the price proposed. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not nearly so high in proportion as we pay to educate that side.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman one question, because he has asked me one.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I will answer.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I want to ask the gentleman, in view of his denunciation of this commission, in view of his vote a year ago, in view of his position on the Tariff Board at the time the bill was up at this session of Congress, if he does think we have good reason to believe that as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations he will not advocate appropriations next year for a tariff board? I would be glad to have that answered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, the gentleman, of course, is leaving Congress and can assume anything——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am not assuming anything——

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). Or some things I am not in a position to do, but let me say this: If in the next session the President of the United States should submit an estimate for an appropriation to enable him to obtain information to perform any part of his public duties——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And you pass upon what are his public duties——

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). And suggests as to the advisability of an appropriation, I should not feel justified in withholding from him moneys to enable him to perform those duties.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Never since the foundation of the Republic, so far as I know, has the President ever submitted a formal estimate to Congress, and, therefore, the gentleman says he would do it if something that is never done is done.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kentucky will permit me, I move that all debate on this paragraph be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say I desire to make some remarks on this question and want at least 10 minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then make it 15 minutes, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] can have 10, and we can have five on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] moves that debate close in 15 minutes, of which time the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] shall have five and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] 10. Is there objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. I said five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and five minutes on this side.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have at least 10 minutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 29708. An act to constitute Birmingham, in the State of Alabama, a subport of entry.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 31856) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 7031) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HEYBURN, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill

(S. 5432) to authorize the city of Seattle, Wash., to purchase certain lands for the protection of the source of its water supply.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 32341) to authorize the St. Paul Railway Promotion Co., a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near Nininger, Minn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution (H. Con. Res. 62):

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate be, and hereby are, directed to erase their signatures to the bill (H. R. 25081) for the relief of Helen S. Hogan, and that the said bill be reenrolled with the words "act of February 26" changed to "act of February 25."

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move, then, that the debate close at 2 o'clock, with the understanding that the gentleman from Alabama have 10 minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky have 5, and the balance of the time be used on this side.

Mr. HARRISON. Reserving the right to object, I would ask the chairman of the committee if he will not amend his request for unanimous consent and allow me five minutes also?

Mr. TAWNEY. No.

Mr. HARRISON. I object, then.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then I move that all debate be closed on this paragraph at 2 o'clock.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman will save time to allow the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this paragraph close at 2 o'clock. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HARRISON. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 57.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is recognized. The time for debate is limited to 2 o'clock.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is sometimes well to review recent history, and the most recent history of the Republican Party in this Congress is the repudiation of this board by the passage of a law to create another board to supersede it and by remarks of the leaders on that side in most severe arraignment and condemnation of the present existing board.

During the consideration of the reciprocity treaty Republican after Republican declared that this board had been absolutely useless; that it had failed to reply to requests for information; and that no information had been obtained from it; and that so far as they could judge its work was without value to the country.

I am willing to discount somewhat what they said. I know they were under great stress in finding such a division in their party; I realize that they were having trouble to keep their allegiance to their President and what they believe to be their allegiance to their party policies.

I have no special criticism of this board. What I resent, and I believe every sincere man ought to resent, is the proposition that there shall be contained in this bill an appropriation covering two years, and containing more than $150,000 more than the commission itself says it can use during the coming year. Why, this House, so far as it has taken any position, has by the passage of the recent act creating a new commission, assumed that the present commission will not be in existence even a year from now, let alone two years from now.

And yet they come in now with an appropriation that undertakes to make available more than $150,000 more than could be properly used during the current year. I agree with the position of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL]. I would hate service in this House upon any other conditions. I believe the present minority, as a majority, would deal as I believe the present majority would deal with the minority, in good faith. I do not believe that this House has a right to assume, and speaking for myself, as only I have a right to speak, I say the assumption is entirely unwarranted that the next Congress will refuse to give to the President of the United States what facilities he may need to carry out his constitutional duties and obligations. I say that by the creation, as far as this body can create, of a new board, you yourselves have signified that you do not believe the present commission will be in existence even a year from now, and yet you ask us to vote $400,000 for two years, and, taking the statements of Republican leaders on that side as to the value of this board, it is $400,000 wasted money. I do not believe that. I believe the board is better than it is credited with being by Republicans. But if we are to accept the statements made on the floor, if we are to use the rule of the gentleman from Iowa, then we shall stand committed to the proposition that the present commission is worthless, and that any appropriation of money for it is wasted. I would gladly vote for $250,000 for the commission for the ensuing year, or for all that it can properly use or would use, but I object to this attempt indirectly to tie the hands of the next House. I say it is an insult to the patriotism of that body and is not warranted by any facts in the previous history of the Government; and when partisan politics runs to that extreme, it is, indeed, a sad situation for the country at large. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, a year ago when this proposition was before the House, or a proposition similar to this, to make a blanket appropriation for a tariff board, to be appointed by the President without authority of law, I voted against it. Some months ago, when the Ways and Means Committee brought before this House a bill to establish a tariff board by law, I voted for it.

Now I desire to say to the House that my reason for voting against the one proposition and voting in favor of the other was that I was opposed to this proposition a year ago—and I am equally opposed to it to-day—for the fundamental reason, based on foundation principles, that the Constitution of the United States vests the power to levy taxes in the Congress of the United States, and that no tariff can be constitutional that is not levied for the purpose of raising taxes, and therefore in my judgment this House should not only control the raising of revenue, but should absolutely control the instrumentality by which revenue bills are written. And I do not think that it is proper as a governmental question for us to appropriate money to enable the President of the United States to employ persons to advise the Congress of the United States how to enact tariff legislation. That is what this proposition means.

Now, I am free to say that I believe there is no committee of this House that needs information in reference to the subject matter on which it works or upon which it desires information more than the Committee on Ways and Means. I do not entirely agree as to the wisdom of the bill that I voted for here a few months ago. I thought it was too expensive a proposition. But I voted for it because it proposed to select certain experts to obtain information that would be under the control of this House. I would like very much now to see a permanent board of experts under the control of this House, who would hold their offices year in and year out, and gather information for the benefit of the Committee on Ways and Means. But I am absolutely opposed to the proposition now before the House. It gives to the President the power to assemble the facts and communicate to Congress only such of those facts as he desires to communicate. You know as well as I that if you have got a grand piece of legislation here that depends on the accuracy and integrity of the facts presented to Congress and place the power to control the promulgation of those facts in the hands of the Executive, then, to a large extent, the Executive will have the power to control the legislation, and therefore I do not think it is an act of discourtesy to the President to vote down this appropriation. I do not think it is a question of not carrying out an Executive function, because there is not one line of law in the statute books of the United States that authorizes this appropriation. The provision that was passed on the tariff bill that was enacted 18 months ago provided for the employment of certain persons for the purpose of advising the President as to whether——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HILL. Then you would not concur with your colleague from Kentucky in the view that it would be improper or discourteous to vote down a further appropriation a year from now?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not agree with him on that at all.

Mr. HILL. I understood you to say that awhile ago.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think this proposition is fundamentally wrong.

Mr. PICKETT. The gentleman from Kentucky did not state that he regarded this as coming within the official duties of the President, but he just made an application.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. HILL. I am heartily in favor of giving the advocates of both views on the pending question all the money they need within the next two years to carry out their ideas and then let the country decide.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I say that this proposition is not a question for the country to decide. I say that the President of the United States has no authority to place his views before this Congress in the way of shaping tariff legislation, except in so far as he desires to advise us in an annual message to Congress, whether tariff legislation is needed or not.

But I want to say this further: The gentleman has said that the Committee on Appropriations have offered this side of the House such appropriations as were wanted for tariff investigations. Well, that is not literally so. Assuming that there is going to be no extra session of Congress, a committee on this side of the House is charged with the responsibility of preparing tariff legislation. Now, we do not ask you to take away the clerk of the committee who holds until December, or the statistician of the committee who holds until December, or the stenographic clerk of the committee who holds until December.

All we have asked on the deficiency bill is that between now and December you provide us a sufficient appropriation to let us have a clerk to the committee, a statistician to the committee, and a stenographic clerk to the committee to help us in our work. That has nothing to do with the proposition that is before this House. Of course, if we have an extra session of Congress, we can organize our committee, we can vote it what money we want. We are not asking you to give us any money for independent investigation. Under the law the Republican side of this House now controls the great committees of the House. The Democratic Party, which is charged with responsibility for the legislation of this House after the 4th of March, has directed this side of the House to go to work and prepare bills that will save the time of this House after December. Instead of taking the time to write those bills after we come here then, and keeping you in a late session next year, they have directed us to prepare these bills during the vacation, and we merely ask the Appropriations Committee to provide us with the clerks that you yourselves have to-day. And I want to say to you that if you have any criticism on that proposition on that side of the House, strike it out and we will pay the expense out of our own pocket.

Mr. HILL. I do not believe there is a man on this side who criticizes it. The only criticism is to say, Why do you not ask for all you want?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that is all we do want, to be candid with the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. Then there is no criticism on that side, if you have all you want.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We went into a very thorough investigation of this tariff question 18 months ago. The witnesses that appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means then were impartially examined on both sides. If we should go into any further hearings, I do not know that we would develop any further light on the question now, because the testimony before us is only 18 months old. On that testimony, when the Payne tariff bill was written, a revenue tariff bill could have been written as well as the Payne tariff bill. We simply propose to take that testimony and the statistics and evidence that were before you gentlemen when you wrote the Payne tariff bill, and write a tariff bill in accordance with our principles.

Now, I do not want to ask of this Congress the expenditure of a dollar of public money unnecessarily, and I do not think we are doing so when we ask merely that we may organize the personnel of our committee. When we ask to organize it to-day instead of next December, I do not think that has anything in the world to do with this appropriation. I am opposed to this appropriation now. I was last year, and I would be next year, because I feel that it is fundamentally wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the remark of the prospective leader of the majority in the Sixty-second Congress are a sufficient justification for the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations in appropriating $400,000, or the amount necessary to enable the President of the United States to continue the investigation into tariff matters during the remainder of his administration. I do not intend to occupy any time in discussing the necessity for this, because the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has conclusively shown that necessity by the statement that under no circumstances would he now, or in the next Congress, favor an appropriation to enable the President to make this investigation. I therefore call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 51, noes 81.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the first paragraph on page 2.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the President to continue, by the employment of accountants and experts from official and private life, to more effectively inquire into the methods of transacting the public business of the Government in the several executive departments and other Government establishments, with the view of inaugurating new or changing old methods of transacting such public business so as to attain greater efficiency and economy therein, and to ascertain and recommend to Congress what changes in law may be necessary to carry into effect such results of his inquiry as can not be carried into effect by Executive action alone, and for each and every purpose necessary hereunder, including the employment of personal services at Washington, D. C., or elsewhere, $75,000. And a report hereunder shall be submitted to Congress at the first regular session of the Sixty-second Congress and not later than December 31, 1911, which said report shall set forth the progress made, the results attained, and such recommendations therein as may be deemed advisable.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph just read on the ground that it is unauthorized and a change of existing law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to reserve his point of order.

Mr. MACON. I will reserve the point of order if the gentleman desires to debate it, but I was trying to save time by making instead of reserving it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, we appropriated $100,000 for the present fiscal year, and I was of the opinion that that should complete the work and that no further appropriation would be justified. On the explanation given before the committee I believe that unless this money be appropriated that the money heretofore expended will be wasted. I believe that the result of the investigation now being made will undoubtedly be of great benefit to the Government. This is the situation and what is being done. There is an entire lack of standardization in the requisitions, supplies, and services for the Government service. An attempt is being made, first, to enable every department and bureau of the Government to be in a position to state what its available balances are; secondly, to enable some one to ascertain from mere inspection of vouchers whether articles purchased have been purchased and paid for at a reasonable price; thirdly, to have some uniform system of purchase and some uniform method by which all of the various branches of the Government will pay the same price for the same articles under similar conditions.

I was convinced, although I approached the subject somewhat prejudiced against this appropriation, that the continuation of the investigation really would result in a vast improvement in the departmental service. I will suggest to the gentleman from Arkansas that, in my opinion, it will be of great advantage to us to have the work completed by the time the next regular session of Congress convenes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman feel that it will pay for itself?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do. At the outset I was under the impression that it was ill-advised, but they have got to the point where, unless this appropriation is made, the expenditure of the $100,000 already made will have been wasted. The groundwork established is such that valuable information and some economies will be effected which will be impossible unless this appropriation is made.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much money has hitherto been spent?

Mr. FITZGERALD. $100,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Is there an additional board provided for in the legislative bill making the same kind of investigation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The appropriation for investigating and effecting economies in the Treasury Department did result in a substantial reduction of appropriations to the service this year, and it was the work undertaken in that department last year that finally induced this side of the House to permit the appropriation to be made for this year.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman believe that this appropriation will complete the work?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not sure that it will. It is difficult to say; but I believe from information given to the committee that the money will be well expended and furnish the next Congress information that will be of great value if an attempt is made to thoroughly investigate the public service of the various departments.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. As the gentleman is convinced of the wisdom of providing for this board, what does he think about having a different board investigating the same question in one department?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, we would like to know what is going on over on the other side; we can not hear a word.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It would not influence the gentleman if he did.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. KENDALL. The committee is in order, but the gentleman from South Carolina does not speak above a whisper.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, what I am saying is there is a provision in this bill making an appropriation for some business men to show the executive department how to do business. I asked the gentleman from New York, who seems to be convinced that this is a wise provision, if this board is provided to investigate all the departments, what he thought about having a separate board to examine into the Treasury Department alone. We have in the legislative bill an appropriation of $75,000 to pay some business men to teach the Treasury Department how to do business. Now, I think this one board ought to examine all of the departments, because if it is valuable, as the gentleman from New York seems to think it is, the work ought to be uniform.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the persons employed under this authorization are not confining themselves to any particular department, but are trying to standardize methods in all of the departments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that it be extended for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I want to inquire if this board will make them buy at the same price. I have had one or two instances where one department bought the same kind of goods much cheaper than another department.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from New York that that is cured by a provision in the sundry civil appropriation bill for 1909, which authorizes the creation of this purchasing board. Purchases are no longer made under the old system.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. But this is since 1909. It was only last year, and one department bought very much cheaper than another.

Mr. TAWNEY. Miscellaneous supplies?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Typewriters.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Of the same kind?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Arkansas is going to make the point of order against this provision I wish he would make it. In my judgment it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I am entitled to a word or two in reply to the gentleman from New York. I have never understood it was wise to send a good dollar out in search of a bad one, and I do not believe it is wise in this instance to send 75,000 good dollars out in search of the 100,000 bad dollars, so far as their further usefulness to the Government is concerned, which we appropriated for this purpose one year ago. Those dollars are gone from the Government forever, so far as that goes, and, therefore, they are worthless things in connection with the Government; but these 75,000 dollars yet belong to the Government, and I can not see any reason why we should send 75,000 good dollars out in search of 100,000 lost ones.

Unless my information is bad, Mr. Chairman, the board that has been conducting this examination was comprised of the heads of bureaus in this city, and the result of their work has never been reported to Congress officially, though the paragraph carried in the bill a year ago provided that the appropriation was made for the purpose of enabling the President to make a recommendation to Congress in regard to this matter. No official recommendation has ever been made, notwithstanding the expenditure of the $100,000.

As I said a moment ago, I am advised that the heads of the bureaus conducted this investigation, and as a result of that it was urged upon the floor of this House that each and every member of that board should have his salary increased in a certain appropriation bill that was pending before the House. Therefore the House will understand that in addition to expending the money for a commission or a board to make these investigations we are asked to increase the salaries of those officials to whom we are paying salaries to discharge their duties—to increase their salary as a reward for that investigation. I can not believe that it is right to the American people to pursue a policy of that kind. Feeling that way about it, I thought that a point of order ought to be made against this paragraph so as to stop this worthless expenditure, something out of which nothing has as yet come, in order that we may get rid of this one instrumentality of the Government which, in my judgment, has afforded no relief to the Government anywhere or in any way.

Mr. Chairman, I insist that there is no law authorizing this appropriation; it is simply a paragraph carried in the last appropriation bill which, as the Chair is well aware, does not warrant a continuance of an appropriation of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Does the gentleman insist upon the point of order?

Mr. MACON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses, including rental and furnishing, after the passage of this act, of offices at Washington, D. C., and necessary traveling expenses, and for the one-half of all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the International Joint Commission incurred under the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the use of boundary waters between the United States and Canada, and other purposes, signed January 11, 1909, $75,000, together with the balance unexpended July 1, 1911, of the appropriation made for said joint commission for the fiscal year 1911: Provided, That the salaries of the members of said commission on the part of the United States shall be fixed by the President, and the amount appropriated for the payment of salaries and other expenses hereunder shall be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State; that said commission or any member thereof shall have power to administer oaths and to take evidence on oath whenever deemed necessary in any proceeding or inquiry or matter within its jurisdiction under said treaty, and said commission shall be authorized to compel the attendance of witnesses in any proceedings before it or the production of books and papers when necessary by application to the circuit court of the United States for the circuit within which such session is held, which court is hereby empowered and directed to make all orders and issue all processes necessary and appropriate for that purpose.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that paragraph, or I will reserve it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that that is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. MACON. The language in here makes it subject to the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is authorized by a treaty that was approved and promulgated on the 13th of May, 1910, a treaty creating an international joint commission for the determination of questions arising between the Dominion of Canada and the United States respecting the use of boundary waters. That treaty especially obligates the Government of the United States to pay its share of the joint expenses of this commission. It also obligates itself to secure the enactment of such legislation as is necessary to enable the commission in the investigation of questions under the jurisdiction of the commission, to administer oaths, and to apply to the circuit courts of the United States for the purpose of obtaining process in order to compel the attendance of witnesses. The jurisdiction of the commission is final relative to all questions that arise between Canada and the United States growing out of the use of boundary waters by citizens of the two countries, both in respect to sanitation and domestic use, reclamatory purposes, and also for water-power purposes. The treaty obligates, as I say, the Government of the United States to do the things which are authorized in this act.

Mr. DALZELL. I desire to ask the gentleman if this is the first time this has been appropriated for.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; the last sundry civil bill carried $75,000 for the same purpose.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Is any of this to pay counsel?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; not specifically. The commission may employ counsel or necessary employees.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman differentiate wherein this appropriation should be carried in the sundry civil bill and not in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill carries appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service and for services outside of the jurisdiction of the United States or outside of the territory of the United States. We have a number of joint commissions. We have now a joint commission that was created under a treaty and appointed under a treaty, some two years ago, I think, to investigate the question of the diversion and use of the waters of the St. John River, which is a boundary line between Maine and Nova Scotia. We have also another commission that is engaged in—and the work will be, I think, completed in the next year—locating the boundary between Canada and the United States on the Lakes, called the boundary commission.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Has this ever been before The Hague tribunal—this question of the boundary?

Mr. TAWNEY. No. I will say there are a great many important questions now pending in the State Department over all our boundary waters between Canada and the United States—the Milk River proposition, which Members may be acquainted with, and the Rainy River proposition.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I will say the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which we passed day before yesterday, carried an appropriation of $100,000 for ascertaining the boundary line between the United States and Canada.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MACON. Now, why should not this take in water boundaries as well as land?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; that was an appropriation——

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The gentleman is mistaken about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have further time if he wants it. I ask that he may have time to complete his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. This is an entirely different project, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MACON. I did not say it was not different, but I said it was for the purpose of determining the boundary between the United States and Canada.

Mr. TAWNEY. A survey of the boundary has already been agreed upon between England and the United States, and there is a provision for Alaska——

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No; the gentleman is mistaken. That is another proposition. It is the boundary line between the United States and Canada. It consists of two parts—the western part, from Duluth west, and the other from the Great Lakes eastwardly to the St. John River. As I think I explained to the gentleman when we had under consideration the diplomatic and consular bill, that work will be completed in about a year; that is, we hope that the present appropriation of $95,000 will complete it. The item was carried in the diplomatic appropriation bill for this work. In addition, the bill carried an item providing for the marking of the dividing line between the United States and Alaska——

Mr. MACON. Seventy-five thousand dollars, I believe, was carried for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. At least $75,000; but I think it was $100,000.

Mr. MACON. I thought it was $75,000.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Those two things are entirely separate from the commission provided for in this item.

Mr. MACON. I understand that, but I was asking the question, why would that not include the waters?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The gentleman was entirely within his right. I wanted to explain, so that there would be no misunderstanding.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that the jurisdiction of these two commissions is entirely different.

Mr. MACON. But that is the trouble. We are getting so many commissions that they duplicate the work.

Mr. TAWNEY. This commission is already authorized. It is in the nature of a judicial tribunal for the purpose of settling the questions involved or the legal rights of citizens of Canada or citizens of the United States in regard to the use of waters that bound the two countries. It has no relation whatever to the work of ascertaining the boundary, but it is a judicial investigation that this commission must make for the purpose of determining the rights of citizens of the two countries. That question is necessarily involved when you come to determine whether the citizens of Montana, for example, shall have a right to use all of the water of Milk River that flows from Canada into Montana and back into Canada.

Mr. MACON. Now, if the line between the two countries, the United States and Canada, is ascertained, would not that settle this matter?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; not at all. It does not involve the question of the boundary. It involves the question of the rights of citizens of the two countries growing out of the use of boundary waters. It does not involve the boundary question at all. This question is for the ascertainment, first, of the facts as to the effect of the use of water by the citizens of one country upon the rights of the citizens of the other country. And after ascertaining the facts, the commission judicially determines the law governing it, the rights of the respective parties in the two countries; and their determination is just as final under the treaty referred to in this paragraph as the determination of the highest judicial tribunal in either country. There are a great many important questions growing out of the use of water in connection with Niagara River; also the St. Lawrence River, and the St. John River—controversies between citizens of two countries. This does not relate at all to fixing the boundary or to the ascertainment of the boundary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee upon whose recommendation this item was included in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I will answer that if the gentleman will permit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] has expired.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MACON. I did not know that I had any time. I thought I was using the time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I would like to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] that, as I explained the other day when the diplomatic and consular bill was up, this matter was not taken up by the Committee on Foreign Affairs at the last session and incorporated in the annual appropriation bill because the bill had been reported out of the committee before the matter came up. Thereupon the matter was taken up by the committee, and a separate bill was reported out, and placed on the calendar, involving this very proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to correct a misstatement of the gentleman. The gentleman the other day stated, and he repeats it again, that this matter was not included in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, because it had not been reported.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Because what had not been reported?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because it had not been reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I wish to call his attention to the calendar of to-day——

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The gentleman misunderstands me. I said we did not include it in our appropriation bill last year, because the annual appropriation bill was reported out of the committee before this matter came to our attention. Thereupon, and I repeat what I said before, the Committee on Foreign Affairs reported out a separate bill to cover it. We failed to get that through at the last session of Congress. Some weeks ago I tried to get the bill up by unanimous consent and failed. The calendar was so congested that there seemed to be grave doubt as to whether we would be able to get a hearing on that bill at this session of Congress, and it was for that reason that the friends of the proposition, who feel that it is the absolute duty of the Government to secure this legislation before adjournment on the 4th of March next, suggested that the legislation be carried in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. My attention was called to the matter——

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state further that the State Department had sent to Congress a supplemental estimate when this bill was in process of preparation in committee, requesting that this item be carried in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. My attention was called to the matter some weeks ago, when the bill was on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and I gave it some consideration at that time. I believe it is necessary, and I shall not object to the incorporation of this amendment in this bill.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman from Minnesota say that $75,000 will be sufficient to complete this work?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that it is difficult to determine when this work will be completed. The commission will be permanent in character, and it will have before it for consideration all questions arising out of the use of the boundary water by the people of Canada and of the United States. Of course the work of the commission will not cease with the expenditure of this particular appropriation. There are pending at the present time in the State Department a great many important questions growing out of the use of water, questions affecting the rights of citizens in both countries, and the settlement of those questions is what the commission was created for. As soon as the work of the commission is completed, then of course the life of the commission will cease.

Mr. MACON. I will say to the gentleman that I am not opposed to the prosecution of this particular work, but I think there should be some limitation placed on commissions of this kind. The gentleman knows that we are burdened with numerous commissions of this kind now, and if they are to be provided for in appropriation bills there is no telling to what extreme they will go.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The necessity for this commission arises out of the constant conflicts which occur between our citizens and the citizens of Canada, and the treaty was negotiated in order to provide a method of adjusting those differences. If hereafter an attempt is made to irrigate the lands on the northern border by the use of some stream coming down from Canada, new questions of controversy will probably arise, and my idea is that this is likely to establish a permanent court for the purpose of settling such disputes between the two countries.

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas withdraws the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order, in order to obtain some information on this subject. I want to know how many of these commissioners there are, how much compensation is paid to each commissioner, how long their term of service is to be, and what they have jurisdiction over.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that there are three commissioners on the part of the United States and three on the part of Canada. They have not been appointed yet, because the treaty was not completed until last May. Their term of office is not fixed by the treaty, nor is their compensation fixed by the treaty. Under this provision the compensation to the United States commissioners will undoubtedly be the same as the compensation of the Canadian commissioners.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I would like to know how the Committee on Appropriations reached the conclusion that $75,000 was necessary.

Mr. TAWNEY. That was the estimate of the State Department two years ago, when we appropriated $75,000. It is again the estimate of the State Department as to the amount that will be required.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the gentleman from Minnesota any information in his possession, or any information that he cares to give to the House, showing the items that make up the $75,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. The committee has not the information in detail.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is a new service, it should be remembered.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; it is a new service. The questions that this commission will have final jurisdiction over, as I said to the gentleman from Arkansas, are questions involving the rights of citizens of Canada and of the United States respecting the use of boundary waters, questions which include sanitation and the use of water for domestic purposes, and also for power purposes. Those are the three specific uses of boundary waters over which this commission is, by the treaty, given final and conclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as there is nobody connected with the committee that reported the appropriation who knows anything at all about the reasons why the appropriation of $75,000 was made——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman suspend a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I have the floor.

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me say further in reply to the gentleman from Illinois that in the investigation and determination of these questions——

Mr. MADDEN. Let me state what I was going to say.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. MADDEN. I have not asked a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the determination of these questions, of course it will be necessary for the commission to employ engineers. There will have to be surveying for the purpose of determining various questions.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Has any part of the appropriation carried by the current law been expended?

Mr. TAWNEY. No.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. So there will be $150,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. The commission has not been appointed.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Then why do you want to appropriate this $75,000?

Mr. MADDEN. I started out to say that inasmuch as no gentleman on the Appropriations Committee is able to give information, or if he has it is willing to divulge it, which will enable Members of the House to act intelligently upon the question of appropriating this $75,000, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask the gentleman to withhold that for a moment.

Mr. MADDEN. No; I make the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has made a statement. I wish he would withhold his point of order for a moment. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding to discuss the rule I wish to say this: The statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is wholly unfair to the members of the committee. There are certain new services to be initiated under authority of law for which nobody is able to give any definite information as to the amount required for the service. The gentleman from Illinois supported an item appropriating $250,000 in this bill for the creation of a tariff commission, about which there was less information than there is about this particular item.

The treaty defines the duties of this commission. It is impossible to fix the compensation of the commissioners at this time, because it is desired, as far as possible, to have the compensation adjusted to correspond with the compensation of the commissioners who will represent the Dominion of Canada. Until they organize it is impossible to ascertain the extent of the work that will devolve upon them or to determine when it will be necessary for them to meet or how many hearings it will be necessary for them to have, what witnesses must be called, or other proceedings had. With this situation confronting a committee of the House, nothing other than a mere guess can be made regarding the amount of money that will be required.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] supported the appropriation for the tariff commission for the present year, and the commission will not be able to expend over about $150,000 of the $250,000 for which the gentleman voted. There was absolutely no information about that item last year, not even an estimate, as there is for this. He can not criticize the committee for doing in this instance what suited his purpose when it was perhaps to the benefit of his own party. This is not political.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no politics in it with me.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. We appropriated $75,000 last year and put it into the current law. As none of that has been expended, why do you appropriate $75,000 more in addition to the $75,000 carried over? That means a total of $150,000, whereas last year you estimated that $75,000 a year was all that was necessary.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Not this committee. This committee did not do any estimating.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This committee had nothing to do with it until this year. It simply has followed the suggestion of the State Department. This is not a political service. It is not a body to do political work, to advance the interests of any political party. This is to establish a body to adjust the rights of the citizens of the two countries, and we are under obligation to furnish the means by which the treaty can be carried out. I submit that an appropriation to carry on work provided to be done under a treaty is work authorized by law, and is in order on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The proviso is clearly legislation, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer as an amendment the language, excluding the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses, including rental and furnishing, after the passage of this act, of offices at Washington, D. C., and necessary traveling expenses, and for the one-half of all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the International Joint Commission incurred under the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the use of boundary waters between the United States and Canada, and other purposes, signed January 11, 1909, $75,000, together with the balance unexpended July 1, 1911, of the appropriation made for said Joint Commission for the fiscal year 1911.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that also.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me that if the item stricken out is legislation, this is surely legislation. There is no distinction between the two propositions; they are exactly alike. If the one is subject to a point of order, the other is. In addition to the $75,000 appropriated, or proposed to be appropriated in the original proposition stricken out on the point of order, the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa makes $75,000 more available, giving $150,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. That does not go to the question of the point of order, Mr. Chairman, but is on the merits of the proposition. I object to the gentleman from Illinois debating the merits of the proposition.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Kentucky is technical about it——

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Kentucky is not fractious; he is observing the rules of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Kentucky is anxious to debate questions in the way he wants to, and he need not be so technical when other gentlemen on the floor have something to say about questions as they arise. I make the point of order against the proposition, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, speaking to the point of order, a treaty is as much a law of the land as a statute, and the treaty clearly authorizes the appropriation here, because the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa clearly limits the appropriation by carrying out the terms of the treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Kentucky if the treaty authorizes the appropriation proposed in this item.

Mr. SHERLEY. The treaty authorizes the appointment of commissioners, three on the part of the United States and three on the part of the United Kingdom, and defines their duties. Manifestly it is in order to appropriate money for the commissioners authorized by the treaty to carry out the duties imposed upon them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The treaty itself provides how the commissioners shall meet and organize, and provides for the appointment of engineers, clerks, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has examined the treaty, and without taking the time to read the provisions of the treaty, will have them inserted in the RECORD. The Chair is of the opinion that the provisions of the treaty authorize the expenditure proposed in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

The paragraphs in the treaty are as follows:

ART. VII. The high contracting parties agree to establish and maintain an international joint commission of the United States and Canada, composed of six commissioners, three on the part of the United States appointed by the President thereof, and three on the part of the United Kingdom appointed by His Majesty on the recommendation of the governor in council of the Dominion of Canada.

ART. XII. The international joint commission shall meet and organize at Washington promptly after the members thereof are appointed, and when organized the commission may fix such times and places for its meetings as may be necessary, subject at all times to special call or direction by the two Governments. Each commissioner, upon the first joint meeting of the commission after his appointment, shall, before proceeding with the work of the commission, make and subscribe a solemn declaration in writing that he will faithfully and impartially perform the duties imposed upon him under this treaty, and such declaration shall be entered on the records of the proceedings of the commission.

The United States and Canadian sections of the commission may each appoint a secretary, and these shall act as joint secretaries of the commission at its joint sessions, and the commission may employ engineers and clerical assistants from time to time as it may deem advisable. The salaries and personal expenses of the commission and of the secretaries shall be paid by their respective Governments, and all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the commission, incurred by it, shall be paid in equal moieties by the high contracting parties.

The Clerk read as follows:

Abbeville, S. C., post office: For a site and continuation of the erection of building under present limit, $10,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in printing the bill there have been a number of omissions and errors. The Supervising Architect is now comparing the print with his original estimates, and will send a corrected list to the committee. I ask unanimous consent to pass over the reading of the public-buildings items until a later time, when the Supervising Architect will have his list ready. I ask unanimous consent to pass over without reading items up to line 15, on page 61.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman a question. I notice that the bill carries appropriations for beginning the construction of a good many buildings, but it omits some. Can the gentleman explain why all are not included?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that there is no appropriation for the construction in this bill under authorizations carried in the public-buildings bill passed at the last session of Congress. The estimates, as submitted under the authorization of the bill of 1910, included estimates only for the amount necessary to purchase the site, and where the site and building are authorized 20 per cent of the authorization is estimated for in every case for the site.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. There is nothing in this bill for the buildings authorized this last year.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not under the act of 1910 for construction, with three exceptions. Two exceptions are in cases where the building authorized is located in the capital of a State—one in Texas and the other in Washington—and the other exception is at Gettysburg, Pa., which the department estimated could be completed before the fiftieth anniversary celebration of the Battle of Gettysburg.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota to pass over the items referred to without prejudice?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman another question. Will there be any appropriations carried in another bill to be reported by the gentleman's committee for buildings authorized in 1910?

Mr. TAWNEY. Not at this session, because no estimate has been submitted, and no estimate will be submitted, and if an estimate were submitted and if appropriations were made, the money would simply lie idle until the fiscal year 1913, because the department has estimated for all the money that the department can expend on authorizations in the construction of buildings that are now authorized and for which plans and specifications have been or are being prepared.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Those are buildings authorized prior to the act of 1910?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; buildings authorized prior to the act of 1910 will go on. The appropriations are made for them.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I was about to ask the gentleman a question, but I think the gentleman from Minnesota has substantially answered the question I desired to ask him. My understanding was that in cases of authorizations made in the last public-building bill for which this bill does not carry appropriations the reason is that it is esteemed impossible for the department to reach that work before another Congress convenes?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is exactly it.

Mr. ADAMSON. And therefore no estimates were sent in?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; it would be bad policy to segregate from the revenues of the fiscal year 1912 money on account of appropriations that could not be expended until 1913.

Mr. ADAMSON. In other words, you are appropriating in this bill all of the money for all the work the department can do?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; and we are treating every man in the House who has an authorization on an equal footing, except in the three cases that I have named, and have given the reasons for the exceptions. The reason I want this unanimous consent is that if we reach these provisions when I get the revised lists from the Supervising Architect, we will have to return and correct them.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is it the understanding of the chairman of the committee that these appropriations for public buildings cover all the buildings authorized by the bill of 1908?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; all the money they can expend in the next fiscal year on the 1908 authorization.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Does it cover the authorizations for buildings, the sites of which were provided in the 1908 bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; the bill authorized in 1908.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Provided they are ready?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses of public buildings: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to execute and give effect to the provisions of section 6 of the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat., p. 537, pt. 1): For additional salary of $1,000 for the Supervising Architect of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1912, and for compensation of skilled draftsmen, civil engineers, computers, and such other services as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and specially order, to be employed only in the office of the Supervising Architect exclusively to carry into effect public building legislation, including the administrative work in connection with the annual appropriations under the control of the Supervising Architect's office: Provided, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, shall not exceed $400,000; for compensation of supervising superintendents, superintendents, and junior superintendents of construction, inspectors of public buildings, and inspectors of mechanical and electrical engineering, in connection with the erection and inspection of work on public buildings, at rates of compensation to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, but in no case exceeding $8 per day, Sundays included: Provided, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, shall not exceed $240,000; for compensation of mechanical labor force, including carpenters, plumbers, machinists, and such other services as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and specially order, including the compensation of superintendents and assistant superintendents of repairs, engaged in work incident to repair of buildings, mechanical equipment, and vaults, safes, and locks, at such rates of compensation as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, but in no case to exceed for any one person the rates current for similar services at the time and in the place where such services are performed: Provided, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, shall not exceed $80,000; for expenses of superintendence, including traveling expenses of building and furniture inspectors and other officers and employees, on duty or detailed in connection with work on public buildings and the furnishing and equipment thereof, under orders from the Treasury Department, office rent, and expenses incident thereto, for superintendents, including temporary stenographic and other assistance incident to the preparation of reports and the care of public property, and so forth; for commissions to disbursing agents in accordance with law for cost of advertising; for office supplies, including drafting materials, specially prepared paper, typewriting machines and exchange of same, and furniture, carpets, and office equipment, stationery, telephone service, and such other articles and supplies as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and specially order or approve for the use of the office of the Supervising Architect, not including heat, light, janitor service, awnings, curtains, or any expenses for the general maintenance of the Treasury building, but including not exceeding $1,500 for books of reference, technical periodicals and journals, subscriptions to which may be paid in advance, and also for contingencies of every kind and character, including compensation and expenses of judges to select plans, care of sites acquired for public buildings, commissions to architects under the provisions of the act approved February 20, 1893, traveling expenses of site agents, recording deeds and other evidences of title, telephone service at completed public buildings for use of custodians, photographic instruments, chemicals, plates, and photographic materials, and such other minor and incidental expenses not enumerated, connected solely with work on public buildings and the acquisition of sites, and the administrative work connected with the annual appropriations under the Supervising Architect's office, as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and specially order or approve, but not including surveys, plaster models, progress photographs, test pit borings, or mill and shop inspections; in all, for the foregoing objects for general expenses of public buildings, $800,000.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon the paragraph for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. On line 22, page 63, there is a provision for an additional salary of $1,000 to the Supervising Architect for the fiscal year 1912. Is that authorized under existing law?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is carried in the current sundry civil act.

Mr. MACON. But not authorized by law?

Mr. TAWNEY. It was held in order a year ago as being authorized.

Mr. MACON. I think not. I think it went out on the point of order and, perhaps, was put in in the Senate.

Mr. TAWNEY. My recollection is that the Chair held it in order. I may be mistaken.

Mr. MACON. I think just the other way.

Mr. TAWNEY. I know the gentleman made the point of order against it, but I think it was not sustained.

Mr. MACON. I think it was sustained because unauthorized by existing law.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is the same amount as carried in the current appropriation act. The Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department has more responsibility and more work now than he has ever had, and he has under his jurisdiction now disbursements of over twenty-one millions of dollars.

Mr. MACON. I will let it go for one year. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter all disbursements of money appropriated for the construction of public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department shall be made by the Treasury Department at Washington, District of Columbia, except in cases of public buildings located so remote from the seat of government as to occasion hardship by undue delay in making payments to contractors; in every such exceptional case the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, require the collector of customs at or nearest the place where such building is being constructed to make the disbursement, as provided in section 1765 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, but in such exceptional cases no additional compensation shall be paid to any collector of customs for disbursements made hereunder; and hereafter no compensation or commissions shall be allowed for the disbursement of any appropriation for the construction, extension, enlargement, remodeling, or repairs of any public building under the control of the Treasury Department, except to disbursing agents heretofore appointed and who have qualified by giving bonds.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the paragraph. If the gentleman from Minnesota will give his attention to the paragraph just read, I want to know how it operates in regard to the payment for construction of public buildings. Hereafter they are to be made through the Treasury at Washington. I understand the custom has been heretofore to appoint a local disbursing agent and to deposit funds subject to the order of this agent and have him pay the contractor.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is not only the custom, Mr. Chairman, but that has been the law, and this provision will not interfere with any existing disbursing officer who has qualified and given bond. Now, the purpose of this is simply this: The work of various disbursing officers is purely nominal, for which service they receive three-eighths of 1 per cent of the cost of the building. If this provision is incorporated into the law, it saves to the Government of the United States $30,000. It does not inconvenience the contractor in the least and will result in better administration.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. How does it save anything to the Government?

Mr. TAWNEY. It saves what the Government is now paying for the disbursement because the disbursement is made directly from the Treasury Department under this amendment. The checks are sent from here and the disbursing officer here works on a salary, and no matter how much money he disburses he gets no more salary on account of the increased disbursements.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I think the explanation is satisfactory. All of us who have public buildings in our district are called upon to designate or recommend somebody to disburse funds in the construction of a building——

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; but hereafter we will be relieved—that is, those who are in the next Congress will be relieved from that burden.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is no money to the disburser in the three-eighths of 1 per cent; it is a very small compensation at any rate.

Mr. TAWNEY. And there is no work in it either.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is no work, and it is usually a banker who is designated, and the bank has the prestige of being the custodian of public funds.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the bank has not the custody——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That used to be the practice.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The reason I made this inquiry was because a couple of days ago I made a recommendation of a banker as disburser of public funds for a public building in one of the districts of Indiana outside of my own. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I would like to ask the gentleman, for I did not understand what was said, the amount that would be saved.

Mr. TAWNEY. Thirty thousand dollars a year. It is the three-eighths of 1 per cent expended on the public building.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The gentleman spoke in such a low tone that I did not know to what it applied.

Mr. TAWNEY. It does not apply to any existing disbursing officer.

Mr. DOUGLAS. But is it not true now that the money for these buildings goes to the local bank?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The disbursing agent is required to deposit in a subtreasury of the United States, and he used to be required to put it in the local bank.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is not bound to make a delay in payments?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Would not the estimate first have to come to the Treasury or to the customs officer?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; there will be no delay except the possibility in some remote point, and there the collector of customs in that district adjacent to the territory in which the building is located can be designated as the disbursing officer, and he does not have to qualify; he does not have to give any bond, as his duties may be added to by the order of the Secretary of the Treasury. Otherwise there will be no delay to the contractor at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of 290 keepers of life-saving and lifeboat stations and of houses of refuge, $276,800.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 69, at the end of line 5, insert the following:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended as salary for the keeper at City Point Life Saving Station, Boston, Mass."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order in order to ascertain what the gentleman is driving at.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this is subject to the point of order, and I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that we have a life-saving station at City Point, Boston, Mass., and to a situation in connection with the management of the station that should be immediately corrected for the benefit of the people. It is very necessary to have a life-saving station at City Point, but last summer we had the remarkable situation of two accidents—drownings—within 100 feet of that station, and in both instances a life was lost, besides numerous other instances of almost willful neglect. In one instance a woman, the mother of seven children, a splendid long-distance swimmer, became exhausted within a hundred feet of the station at about half past 11 o'clock in the daytime. The man swimming ahead of her yelled for help, and no assistance came. A man who was rowing around came to their assistance and towed them to the life-saving station. The woman died. She did not recover consciousness. On another occasion a very fine lady swimmer fell overboard with her companion, and there were cries for help loud enough to attract the attention of the captain of a boat who was sleeping three times the distance away.

Mr. FITZGERALD. During what month of the year?

Mr. O'CONNELL. One on the 5th of August and the other on the 10th of October. It seems very strange to me that such a situation as that should be permitted to continue, and in order to overcome it I have introduced this amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. O'CONNELL. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the amendment is adopted it will result in the abolition of that station altogether.

Mr. O'CONNELL. No. My amendment is simply to the salary of the keeper who is in charge there.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It does not say anything about the present keeper at all, does it?

Mr. O'CONNELL. The present keeper. I am not looking out for future or past keepers.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It seems to me the gentleman's criticism ought to be directed toward the removal of the present keeper. His amendment would practically close that station altogether.

Mr. O'CONNELL. I would not have the station closed, and it should not be closed, as it is a very useful and necessary station. But what are you going to do with a situation when a man is put in charge of a station and he is absolutely derelict in his duty, as the keeper has undoubtedly been down there?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Have him removed.

Mr. O'CONNELL. How are you going to do it? Or by what method better than this one I propose?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It seems to me the gentleman's statement would cause his removal by anybody having charge of his removal.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Has the gentleman ever called the attention of the officer in charge to this neglect and misconduct on the part of this keeper?

Mr. O'CONNELL. No; but there have been reports against it by other parties.

Mr. SHERLEY. Has the gentleman personally ever taken it up with the superintendent here in Washington?

Mr. O'CONNELL. I took it up, and he said they made an investigation and they exonerated the captain because there was no proof. But this fact is plain—that two people met their death within a hundred feet of a life-saving station maintained by the United States, and we are paying enormous sums of money to patrol the coast to guard against and prevent such occurrences. Here were men who evidently were sleeping in their bunks in a life-saving station in waters that are not very troublesome, but are dangerous simply because of the amount of boating, and they could not hear a cry of distress within 50 feet of the station. Surely something is wrong when such men are continued in office and when men are exonerated because testimony can not be found. I think it is time for this House to say that that man shall not continue longer in that office. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. O'CONNELL. I will; yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I did not catch the gentleman's reply to the question of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], whether he himself has ever gone to the superior officer of this man and made any representations as to his negligence. It does not do to say that complaints have been made, and all that, but did he himself call it to the attention of those who could discipline the man if he had done wrong?

Mr. O'CONNELL. Did I personally call it to his attention?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNELL. No; because it had been called to their attention. And to verify it I called up Supt. Kimball this morning to find out what had been done about it. He said that nothing had been done about it.

This letter was written last October by the brother of the girl who was drowned:

UNITED STATES LIFE-SAVING STATION,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIRS: Francis J. Lyons, brother of Lillian Lyons, requests this department to look into the matter of time elapsed from time of rescue of Thomas McCorey, 2.25 a. m. till 5.30 a. m., on October 15, 1910. Why had not the keeper of the City Point Life-Saving Station looked for the body immediately after the arrival of McCorey at station.

The girl, being an excellent swimmer, must have drifted 2½ miles to Carson Beach, for if the girl had drowned she would have sank. The water front of accident is well equipped with lights and easy to see anyone afloat in the water, and in my estimation and many others of this vicinity it was a criminal case of carelessness, and a man of his position I should say used very poor judgment.

Hoping to hear from you without delay, I am,
Respectfully, yours, FRANCIS J. LYONS.

I asked Mr. Kimball, the superintendent, this morning if that letter had been answered. He said, "No; but we investigated the case and found that the girl could not be saved." But the girl drifted five hours in Dorchester Bay and was an expert swimmer, and her male companion was rescued. In the dusk and darkness she was not seen, but ought to have been heard if the life-saving officials were properly doing their duty. A man on the boathouse, twice as far away, heard her cries and heard his cries.

I would like, Mr. Chairman, to send to the Clerk's desk a few statements concerning this incident, and several others equally bad, and ask to have them read.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIFE SAVERS REFUSED TO ASSIST—FIVE RESCUED MEN IN CRITICAL CONDITION TURNED AWAY FROM UNITED STATES LIFE-SAVING STATION—OCTOBER 9, 1910—STORY AS TOLD BY JOHN F. STOUT, 47 OLD HARBOR STREET, SOUTH BOSTON.

Sunday afternoon, October 9, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Tighe, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Weston and three daughters, Mrs. Stout and myself were out in my boat, the Beatrice III, a launch, and went around Squantum——

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, if the Clerk will allow me, I would like to read those statements myself. I would like to read them in such a way that they can be understood. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Sunday afternoon, October 9, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Tighe, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Weston and three daughters, Mrs. Stout, and myself were out in my boat, the Beatrice III, a launch, and went around Squantum and came up and around the east side of Thompsons Island. While I was below I heard a noise as if it was a splash, and Mr. Tighe told me to come up in a hurry. I did so, and I saw several men struggling in the water. There were five men in the water, just north of Wards Island and directly east of the life-saving station in Dorchester Bay. The day was clear, and if there was a man on the lookout on the station I do not understand how he could have failed to see the men in the water. They were in danger of drowning; there is no doubt of that. There were two sailboats near at hand, and their two tenders were out trying to do what they could.

Well, the five men were taken from the water and into my boat, and then we started up Dorchester Bay. Two of the men were pretty far gone, and the women attended to them as best they could. One man was absolutely helpless and could not move a limb. Three were completely exhausted, besides the other two who could not move and were very nearly all in.

We started right for the life-saving station and went up alongside, and we sang out to the man up on the bridge, who was on watch, telling him that we had saved five men who had capsized down below, and that they required immediate assistance. He turned around to some one else, evidently higher in authority, and spoke to him. The second man, with a cap and blue suit on, asked me where the men belonged. I turned to the five men in my boat and asked them, but their condition was such that not one of them could answer very well. They could just whisper, and I learned that one lived in South Boston and two of them in the South End, and I told this to the man on the station who had asked me. He then said to me, "Are you not going to land?" and I said that I was, but that the men in my boat required immediate attention, as they were in pretty bad shape. "Well, do not you think that you can take them ashore?" said the man to me, as he looked right down and could see the men in my boat. I said, "Can not you take them on your station and attend to them?" and he again repeated the question as to whether I could not take them ashore, and I said I could, of course.

We took the five men to the Mosquito Fleet Yacht Club, and there they were attended to.

SLOOP IN DISTRESS—LIFE SAVERS NOTIFIED, BUT FAILED TO GO TO THEIR ASSISTANCE—OCTOBER 2, 1910—STORY AS TOLD BY JOHN F. STOUT, 47 OLD HARBOR STREET, SOUTH BOSTON.

On Sunday, October 2, I was down the harbor, with about 14 friends from the Western Union Telegraph Co., on board my boat, Beatrice III. The wind was blowing very heavy. As we were going by Thompsons Island, near Spar Buoy, we saw a sloop yacht at anchor and with the American flag upside down, a sign or signal of distress. I was going to try and get in close to the sloop but was told, and I realized, that it would be hazardous, as the sea was so rough. The men said they were all right for awhile, but for me to go to the life-saving station and tell them there that they wanted assistance.

We went to the life-saving station, and with much difficulty got alongside. It was about 3.45 in the afternoon then, and I said to the man on watch, "There is a yacht in trouble down below there, on the north side of Thompsons Island, and he must have assistance right away. You can see the flag is upside down." He said: "Yes; that will be all right."

Well, we then started for the Mosquito Fleet Yacht Club, and all the way I kept looking back at the life-saving station. I could see the two launches in that cut-under at the stern of the station, and I could see the big launch, the steam launch, near the station. I watched and watched all the time we were approaching the yacht club, and I stood on the yacht club raft and kept watching. For more than 20 minutes I had my eyes on the life-saving station, and I am positive that not a boat put out from the station in that 20 minutes. Not a man stirred away from the station. I am certain that no one from that life-saving station went to the assistance of that sloop in distress within the 20 minutes after I had notified them.

DROWNED NEAR THE STATION—MISS LILLIAN LYONS SHOULD HAVE BEEN RESCUED BY LIFE-SAVERS OCTOBER 15, 1910.

The Boston papers of Saturday evening, October 15, 1910, told the story of the capsizing of a tender alongside the power boat named the Gertrude, enrolled in the Boston Yacht Club, and which was anchored 50 feet from the live-saving station, and the drowning of Miss Lillian Lyons, of 26 P Street, South Boston, and the rescue of Thomas H. McCorry, of 161 O Street, South Boston, by Capt. Baker, the latter of a house boat used as restaurant, etc., in Dorchester Bay. Miss Lyons was 28 years of age, an expert swimmer, and McCorry about the same age.

Stories differ as to what they were doing on the boat at night. McCorry told a newspaper reporter that they had been out on a short trip, and arriving back between 9 and 10 o'clock at night (Friday, October 14), the wind was too strong and the water too rough to then attempt to go ashore. They waited until shortly after midnight.

From the fact that the girl's watch stopped at 1.48, and the story of McCorry, it is believed that they started to board the tender to go ashore about 1.30, or shortly afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to allow the Clerk to finish reading those papers. I will ask for five minutes. I shall conclude in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk continued reading, as follows:

McCorry's story then continues:

"Miss Lyons stepped into the tender, which was just alongside the Gertrude, and I went below to put out the lights and to lock the cabin doors. I heard her scream, and I rushed out on the deck. She was in the tender, leaning to one side, inside toward the Gertrude, and holding on to the painter, or the rope, and she was partly in the water. I suppose her weight was all on one side, thus tipping the boat. Anyway, I jumped into the tender and it then upset. We were both in the water.

"I caught Miss Lyons the first thing. I put an arm about her so that it was under one arm, about her back, and my hand around near her other arm and was holding her up and in good shape, and I struck out for the Gertrude. She cried out to me, as she struggled to free herself from me, 'For God's sake, Tom, let go of me, and I'll be all right.' At first I did not let go, but when she insisted and we were quite near to the steps on the side of the Gertrude I let go of her, believing that she was all right, as she said she was, and that she would grab the steps.

"The Gertrude was not more than 50 feet from the life-saving station and about three times as far as that from the houseboat. We yelled for fully 15 minutes. It seemed hours to me. She called for help, and my voice was good and I kept yelling all the time.

"I could see Miss Lyons at times, her head just above water, and she was swimming in good shape, and I thought sure she would be all right.

"Capt. Baker, of the houseboat, rescued me. He took me out of the water just as I was about to give up. He had been asleep on the houseboat, way down in his room, and he said that our cries had awakened him. He put out in his boat and came just in time to get me.

"Capt. Baker took me to the life-saving station, and we had a hard time trying to rouse somebody on the station. They looked after me there, and then I came ashore."

When the affair was reported to the police of Station 12 it was stated that Capt. Baker had a hard time of it trying to attract attention of those on the life-saving station.

In Station 12, when Capt. Hamilton, of the life-saving station, was asked how he could account for it that the Lyons girl and McCorry had been yelling and crying out for help while they were in the water and there was not a stir or response of any kind from the station, Capt. Hamilton answered, "I don't know how it could be. There should have been a man on watch there."

The body of the Lyons girl was found on Carson Beach, the further end (western end) of Dorchester Bay, shortly before 7 o'clock. It was considered remarkable by every one, especially the yachtsmen, that she could have gone from near the life-saving station way up to the other end of the bay in five hours. From the story of McCorry and the fact that the girl was an expert swimmer, it is generally believed that she swam the whole or the greater part of Dorchester Bay, and then, becoming exhausted, gave up when near Carson Beach.

INTERFERED WITH POLICE—REFUSED ADMITTANCE TO PATROLMEN AFTER A CRIME HAD BEEN COMMITTED—ABOUT AUGUST 1, 1909.

At about 11.45 at night (Aug. 1, 1909, or thereabouts) hundreds of people at City Point, all along the Strandway, in yacht clubs and on the shore, heard terrific, wild screams coming from Dorchester Bay.

As the story of the affair developed, it was that Miss Esther Goldstein was on a power boat with two or more men and the attempted criminal assault upon her. It was her screams that were heard. Capt. Hickey, of the volunteer life-savers (headquarters in the headhouse), went out in a boat with two or three others. They came upon the power boat in which the trouble had occurred. Capt. Hamilton, of the volunteer life-savers, was there ahead of Capt. Hickey and the others. He had boarded the boat and, at the point of a revolver, had stopped the men and commanded them to make for the shore. This they did.

Capt. Hamilton, Esther Goldstein, and two or three men landed at the raft of the South Boston Yacht Club and were there for more than 15 minutes.

The screams had been heard by Patrolmen Scanlan, Dorsey, and Stickney, of Division 12, who hastened to the South Boston Yacht Club.

The three policemen rapped at the door of the yacht club and peered through the windows of the door and on each side of the door.

The policemen afterwards reported to their superior that they had rapped at the door and the windows. They saw Capt. Hamilton in the vestibule, just on the inside, and he was talking to the people whom he had brought ashore and was taking names, etc.

The police called to Capt. Hamilton to open the door and let them in. He said that he had no right to open the door, and, anyway, he said, he had no key. The policemen asked him what the trouble was, and he answered, "Oh, it's nothing; it's nothing." The patrolmen urged for some explanation, and Capt. Hamilton said that he could not open the door and that there was nothing the matter. On being further pressed, Capt. Hamilton, talking through the door, said that it was nothing only that the girl had got frightened. The policemen took his word for it and went away.

Twenty minutes afterwards another policeman found Esther Goldstein at the corner and P and East Second Streets in an hysterical condition, and she asked for a carriage. She was sent to her home.

As the affair developed, days afterwards, the Goldstein girl told the police the full story and a warrant was asked for and granted for the arrest of a man named Bruilandt on the charge of attempted rape on Esther Goldstein, etc., and in the South Boston court Bruilandt was bound over to the superior court. There the case was not-prossed. Nothing more was done. The South Boston police sent the whole story to headquarters, but nothing further came.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, we can dispense with the further reading of the others. Of course I realize that it is difficult for me to ask the House to take my judgment on the facts at this time, but these incidents brought to your attention ought to make the House realize that something is going on there that is radically wrong. My amendment could be enacted now, and between to-day and the time this bill is considered in the Senate, if the facts are not verified, the original language can be restored, and the House can then agree with the Senate in conference.

The secret of the matter is contained in this last paragraph of a letter that I received from a very reputable citizen of Boston:

Women visit the station in large numbers and are entertained aboard. This is very frequent. Very few yachtsmen can be found who will talk. They seem to be afraid, and, again, many of them enjoy privileges of bringing their friends out on the station and being entertained. Yachtsmen have said to me that there ought to be a crew of experienced men, and married men at that.

During this season of 1910 there have been no Coston signals nor signal balls nor anything at the head-house shore with which to signal the station.

These comments follow such charges as the following, contained in this same letter:

Either Thursday or Friday, August 4 or 5, of this year, Mrs. Mahegan, wife of a South Boston letter carrier, started on her usual swim from the head house to the life-saving station, of course intending to swim back again. Ahead of her was a fireman named Sterns. Both were very heavy people. Mrs. Mahegan became exhausted within less than a hundred feet of the life-saving station. Sterns caught her and held her up, waving and shouting repeatedly at the man on watch at the station. No notice was taken of their cries for help. Teddy Shepheard, formerly janitor of the Columbia Yacht Club, was out in a small boat, and he called to Sterns to catch on to the stern end of his (Shepheard's) boat and at the same time keep hold of Mrs. Mahegan. Sterns did so, and Shepheard brought them to the life-saving station. Until late that afternoon (from 11 a. m. to 4 p. m.) Mrs. Mahegan was kept on the life-saving station, then taken home, and the next day to the city hospital, where she died of an internal hemorrhage.

There's one story.

Then, again, early in June of 1909, on a Saturday night when it was blowing and raining fiercely, two men in a small boat were upset in Pleasure Bay while attempting to go out to a sloop. Their yells were heard by the volunteer life-savers, who burned a Coston light for the United States life-savers, but got no response. The volunteers launched their own frail boat, and 100 feet from shore were upset. They pushed their boat ashore, bailed her out, and then launched her again, went out and rescued two men who were just about exhausted. It was just 50 minutes from the time they started until the volunteers got back to their quarters and attended to the two men rescued, and then 10 minutes later Capt. Hamilton came ashore and wanted to know what was the matter.

Now, gentlemen of this House, it seems to me that a case has been made out in these statements that calls for action on our part.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know the gentleman does not wish to do any injustice to a very valuable branch of the Government service, and I ask him if he will not describe the conditions round about this place? Is it a summer resort, where a large number of people go upon the water in small boats, or is it a remote point, like those at which many of the life-saving crews are stationed?

Mr. O'CONNELL. It is probably the most crowded yachting rendezvous on the face of the earth. There are more small boats gathered within a radius of 1 mile of that one point than can be found, probably, in a dozen others of the very crowded spots on the whole globe. It is a very important place, and a life-saving station, maintained up to the highest kind of efficiency, should be maintained there. The greatest care should be exercised in selecting a proper crew, and particularly in the choice of a good officer to supervise and superintend the station. No man of any careless tendencies should be allowed to direct or preside over that station.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Inasmuch as the gentleman desires to penalize an individual and not abolish the station, I suggest that he insert the word "present" before the word "keeper."

Mr. O'CONNELL. I am willing to accept that. Mr. Chairman, let the Clerk report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the word "present" before "keeper," so that it will read: "Salary of the present keeper of City Point Life-Saving Station."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts will be modified in the manner indicated.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. O'CONNELL) there were—ayes 35, noes 19.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused, 16 Members, not a sufficient number, rising in support of the demand.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

For expenses of the Revenue-Cutter Service: For pay and allowances of captain commandant and officers of that rank, senior captains, captains, lieutenants, engineer in chief and officers of that rank, captains of engineers, lieutenants of engineers, two constructors, cadets, cadet engineers, two contract surgeons, two civilian instructors, and pilots employed, and rations for pilots; for pay of warrant and petty officers, ships' writers, buglers, seamen, oilers, firemen, coal heavers, water tenders, stewards, cooks, and boys, and for rations for the same; for allowance for clothing for enlisted men; for fuel for vessels, and outfits for the same; ship chandlery and engineers' stores for the same; actual traveling expenses or mileage, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, for officers traveling on duty under orders from the Treasury Department; commutation of quarters; for maintenance of vessels in the protection of the seal fisheries in Bering Sea and the other waters of Alaska, and the enforcement of the provisions of law in Alaska; for maintenance of vessels in enforcing the provisions of the acts relating to the anchorage of vessels in the ports of New York and Chicago, and in the Kennebec River, and the movements and anchorage of vessels in St. Marys River; for temporary leases and improvement of property for revenue-cutter purposes; not exceeding $7,000 for the improvement of the depot for the service at Arundel Cove, Md.; not exceeding $150 for medals for excellence in marksmanship; contingent expenses, including wharfage, towage, dockage, freight, advertising, surveys, labor, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses which are not included under special heads, $2,288,000.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 72, after line 7, insert:

"The two revenue cutters authorized by the act entitled 'An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to provide two new revenue cutters, and for other purposes,' approved April 21, 1910, or either of them, may, upon request of the Secretary of the Treasury, and at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be constructed in any navy yard on the basis of the actual cost of construction."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I make a point of order against that.

Mr. PETERS. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order until I can make a statement on the merits?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If the statement is not too long I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, last year Congress passed a bill providing for the construction of two additional revenue cutters. This legislation was enacted as a result of the unanimous report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and at the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury. Pursuant to the authority given by that act, the Secretary of the Treasury advertised for bids and estimates for the construction of these revenue cutters. No one complied with the request, and no bids were made. On December 20 a letter was sent from the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. MacVeagh, asking that legislation be enacted which would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to construct these two revenue cutters in the navy yards of the United States. From the letter I read a part:

The Revenue-Cutter Service is very much in need of the two new cutters that have been authorized by Congress, and is seriously embarrassed by the fact that no proposals can be obtained for their construction. The best solution of the difficulty appears to be the construction of the vessels in a navy yard at the actual cost of labor and materials, and with this end in view the draft of the inclosed joint resolution has been prepared.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported a bill which gave to the Secretary of the Navy this authority. The report of that committee was unanimous, and the bill so reported was placed on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. Unfortunately for its fate, the bill was reached on a day when one of the Members here, feeling that he had a grievance, objected to unanimous consent on all bills which came up. Without regard to the merits, and with no objection to the bill, it was refused unanimous consent. Therefore it went off the Unanimous Consent Calendar and is now on the House Calendar, and so will not be reached this year. It is to carry out the intentions of this bill that the amendment which I have just offered is submitted.

There is very urgent need in the Revenue-Cutter Service for these vessels. Vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service are obliged to go out on the sea in storms, meeting the conditions which we have on our Atlantic seaboard in all seasons and in all weathers. In addition to the ordinary maintenance of the Treasury service in the collection of customs, revenue cutters are called on constantly to lend their aid to vessels in distress. In the fiercest of our winter gales the vessels of the revenue service put to sea, and never a winter passes without numbers of vessels owing their safety to the timely aid of these hardy craft which each winter save many human lives and preserve much property and many vessels from loss.

The present vessels are, several of them, old ones and antiquated in design, and new and more efficient boats should be provided.

The Treasury Department has failed under the present conditions to obtain bids on the vessels, and this proposal will help the organization of the navy yards and also furnish the Revenue-Cutter Service with these much-needed craft. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order through the urgent necessity of this measure.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Would the adoption of the gentleman's proposed amendment serve to take off the limit of cost?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if I can get an agreement to close debate on the amendment at this time I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Then I shall make the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Against the amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to defeat the construction of these revenue cutters.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There is no use in wasting any more time on this proposition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have no desire to waste any time or defeat the construction of these revenue cutters.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of assistant custodians and janitors: For pay of assistant custodians and janitors, including all personal services for the care of all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department outside of the District of Columbia, and washing towels, sprinkling streets, and removing rubbish, in connection with said buildings, exclusive of marine hospitals, mints, branch mints, and assay offices, $2,500,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall so apportion this sum as to prevent a deficiency therein.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 78, line 18, after the word "herein," insert the following: "Provided, That the salary of janitors shall in no case be less than $65 per month."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to that.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the point of order will not be made. If it is I hope it will not be held in order, because it seems to me that this is the only possible way that we can increase the salary of janitors of public buildings. They are now very inadequately paid. In some cases they get $55 per month, and yet janitors of some city high schools, courthouses, and normal schools get from $75 to $90 a month. In many cases they not only get $75 a month, but they get quarters in the building. And some get light and heat. In school buildings they get three months' vacation in the summer. And yet here we have a system under which the janitors in public buildings get as low at $50 or $55 a month. It seems to me that there ought to be some way to increase it. The only increase in this item is that made necessary by additional public buildings. I have examined the hearings, and I find that there is nothing there to indicate that they propose to increase the salaries of the janitors in any instance. The whole process of fixing the compensation is left to somebody up in the Treasury Department. There is no system about it by which the payment is equalized, and it seems to me that where the janitor of a public building gives his entire time and services and has the responsibility of caring for and looking after Government property he should be paid at least $65 per month. The amendment I have offered is simply a limitation on the appropriation. It will check the tendency of the department—which I think exists—of paying some janitors much higher compensation than is paid to others simply by associating with the title of janitor the title of fireman or messenger or something of that kind.

There are only a few of these men, one in each of the smaller towns where a public building is located. In the larger cities the janitors do not have the responsibility, because they have a custodian and engineer and different officers. But in the smaller cities the janitor has entire charge of the building and has to take care of the heating plant and all that sort of thing, and it seems to me that this provision ought to go into the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think it is subject to a point of order. The allowance for labor and janitor service is now discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury. It is proposed to take from him that discretion, or at least limit it, so as not to enable him to place it below the amount named. It is not customary, Mr. Chairman, to assign a janitor to every public building, but to assign a laborer.

The expense of this work alone under this item has grown up with tremendous rapidity. An examination of the record will show that the appropriation for 1903 was a million dollars; it has now gone up to $2,500,000, because of the increased number of Government buildings; and so rapidly has this grown that to-day the expense for fuel and janitor service for a building in a small town costs more than the rent, fuel, and light of a rented building, and these gentlemen who are trying to hoist these expenses are doing what they can to prevent the Government erecting public buildings in these small towns. There is not a town of 5,000 people in the United States where you can not get the store building necessary for a post office with fuel and lights for $1,000 a year, and yet it is insisted that if we build these buildings we ought to pay almost as much for janitor service alone as the total cost was under the rental system.

Gentlemen are standing in the light of the people of this country in trying to hoist the expense of caring for these Government buildings beyond all reason. A mere laborer charged with the care of a Government building in a small town of 5,000 people is not employed all day. He is but a part of his day employed, and he is amply paid at less than that suggested by the gentleman in such cases, and to put a statutory minimum on this salary is to vastly increase this amount and to insure a deficiency under this head of the appropriation and to make it more difficult to get buildings for small towns.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee as to the minimum salary paid to these janitors?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not from memory, but I think it is $60.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I think $55 for the janitor in my own town.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think the gentleman has not got a janitor in his own town, but a laborer.

Mr. DAVIDSON. It is the compensation, and he comes under that head and is paid as such. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which I offered and substitute the one which I now have written in its place.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid to the janitors of public buildings who receive a salary of less than $65 per month.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest a thought or two upon the point of order. There are three or four public buildings in the district that I have the honor to represent. They are not in very large towns. The probabilities are that the janitors in charge of them do not get $65 a month. I think they ought to get something, but the proposed amendment, if it is in order, must be construed, of course, to withhold from that class of men any pay at all. If they are to get pay at the rate of $65 a month, then the amendment is not in order. The question is how the department would construe the amendment—whether it would conclude that it was the intention of Congress to discharge all of the janitors throughout the country that are now receiving less than $65 a month, and allow the public buildings to go without them, or whether the department would construe it that Congress was in at least a lucid interval when it enacted this legislation and did not intend to do a thing like that, but intended, on the other hand, to increase the salaries of janitors to $65 a month.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think it is entirely plain that under this provision the postmaster must sweep out himself, just as he used to before he got the Government building.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I doubt if the executive department of the Government would put any such interpretation on it, because when Congress desires to abolish an office—and it is such a rare occasion that it does—it employs apt language and it does not attempt to conceal its purpose in any such fashion as this, and the departments would conclude that this proposition is an increase of salary. If it does not provide for an increase of salary, I am against the amendment, for it would prevent the payment of any salary at all.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. OLMSTED). The Chair is ready to rule. It seems to the Chair that the manifest purpose of this amendment is to control the discretion at present vested in the officer who fixes the salaries of janitors by fixing the minimum amount of the salary at $65 per month. If enacted into law, it would be construed naturally as requiring the payment of that salary, which is higher than is now required by law, thus changing existing law. It is therefore in violation of the provision of section 2 of Rule XXI, which says:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Curtis, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 10849. An act to authorize the city of Shreveport to construct a bridge across Red River.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MCCALL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 9903) to authorize the Sheridan Railway & Light Co. to construct and operate railway, telegraph, telephone, electric-power, and trolley lines through the Fort Mackenzie Military Reservation, and for other purposes, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. BULKELEY, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 9904) granting certain rights of way on the Fort D. A. Russell Military Reservation at Cheyenne, Wyo., for railroad and county-road purposes, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. BULKELEY, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: For expenses incurred under the authority or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in detecting, arresting, and delivering into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money and persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other securities of the United States and of foreign governments, as well as the coins of the United States and of foreign governments, and other felonies committed against the laws of the United States relating to the pay and bounty laws, and for no other purpose whatever, except in the protection of the person of the President of the United States, $135,000: Provided, That no part of this amount be used in defraying the expenses of any person subpœnaed by the United States courts to attend any trial before a United States court or preliminary examination before any United States commissioner, which expenses shall be paid from the appropriation for "Fees of witnesses, United States courts."

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 22, after the word "laws," "and an investigation and suppression of all crimes committed in the Treasury Department."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Well, I do not think the gentleman will seriously claim that it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I shall seriously claim it is subject to the point of order. It is transferring to the Treasury Department jurisdiction over the investigation of crimes, which is now under the control of the Department of Justice.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. It has not been questioned but what this is within the law. It simply provides that the Secret Service force may be employed by the Secretary of the Treasury in the investigation, detection, suppression, and punishment of crimes in the department. That question was up before two years ago and nobody raised the question that it was subject to the point of order or that it was not within the law.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, Mr. Chairman, as I heard the amendment read, it enlarges the scope of the activities of the Secret Service to the investigation of all crimes against the United States——

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. No; in the Treasury Department; simply confined to that department.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not so understand it.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. It is only in the Treasury Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the amendment was again reported.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, it says "all crimes committed in the Treasury Department." I suppose what the author of the amendment means is all crimes committed against the United States over which the Treasury Department has jurisdiction.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Treasury Department now has two bureaus, the Customs Bureau and the Internal-Revenue Bureau, where men are employed for the purpose of enforcing internal-revenue and customs laws, and this, of course, changes the existing law governing the employment of other employees in the bureau.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman yield for the purpose of my suggesting that possibly the attention of my colleague has not been directed to the language on the top of page 75, where provision is already made in this bill for the use of these various agents for the very purpose which my colleague desires.

Mr. TAWNEY. I was going to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that provision has already been made.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Then I take it the chairman of the committee has been enlarging the powers and usefulness of this force since two years ago.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I will say to the gentleman from New York that a year ago we provided for a detail of not to exceed three from any one of these bureaus for service in connection with any investigation within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury that he might desire to make. Now he has reported to the committee that, in his judgment, he ought to have four instead of three, and we have increased the number to four instead of three, as heretofore carried.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman, since this section provides and has provided for some time back that the Secret Service men could be used only for the detection and punishment of counterfeiters and the protection of the person of the President, whether since two years ago any laws have been enacted by which the Secret Service force may be used for the protection and punishment of other crimes or for the violation of other laws?

Mr. TAWNEY. None whatever, except in the cases which I have just mentioned, where he is at liberty to employ during this fiscal year not to exceed three and in the next fiscal year, if this provision should pass, he will be authorized to employ four.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Can not he employ some of these for the protection and punishment of crimes against the customs laws?

Mr. TAWNEY. He has four, and his authority for the employment of as many Secret Service men outside of the Secret Service in his department as he may desire is unlimited.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Did not the law providing for the Secret Service, in the first place, confine it to counterfeiting and offenses against bounty and to pension investigations?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is a fact.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is, subsequent legislation authorized the use of the Secret Service for the personal protection of the President in addition?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And that is as far as the law goes now?

Mr. TAWNEY. Except, in the last session of Congress, we permitted the Secretary to employ not to exceed three men for the purpose of investigating any crime committed against any law which the Treasury Department is charged with the duty of administering.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Was that a permanent appropriation, or for the fiscal year?

Mr. TAWNEY. That was permanent, but we changed it in this case, increasing it to four.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] if there is any authority of law for the investigation or suppression of crime committed in the Treasury Department not existing in the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I do not think there is any provision of law for anything in this section. And if you require original statute law for it, all of it can be stricken out, but if the rest of it is allowed to stand, then this amendment is germane and is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I ask the gentleman a question? I want to know if this is not a provision for payment of inspectors for investigating offenses which the Department of Justice may choose to investigate, but confined to the Treasury Department?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no. This relates exclusively to the men employed in the Treasury Department.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. That is what I asked.

Mr. TAWNEY. Under the Secret Service appropriations for the detection of alleged counterfeiting and the protection of the person of the President.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. And the customs service?

Mr. TAWNEY. It does not relate to the customs service at all.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Then the inspectors or agents that the Government has sent out for the investigation of violations of the postal service and those used by the Department of Justice are entirely different from these that you provide for?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair has not stopped to investigate nor to inquire whether there is authority of law for the paragraph in its existing form, no point of order having been made against it, but, assuming that a point of order would have lain against the existing paragraph, nevertheless this amendment proposes a new substantive proposition, giving authority for the investigation and suppression of something for which there is not now authority of law. The Treasury Department has many branches and divisions. The investigation and suppression of crime comes under the general authority of the Attorney General's Department. The same point was ruled upon June 16, 1910, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] being in the chair, and it was held that—

> Although an unauthorized appropriation may be permitted to remain in an appropriation bill, yet this does not permit an amendment adding another germane but unauthorized appropriation.

The present occupant of the chair thinks that was a proper ruling. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer another amendment here for the purpose of asking another question. On page 80, line 21, strike out the word "other."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 80, line 21, strike out the word "other."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against that. Let us see what the effect of that amendment will be.

Mr. TAWNEY. The word "other" refers——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think we should make our legislation ungrammatical even to satisfy the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL], and to serve what he may believe is a good purpose.

Mr. TAWNEY. It says "counterfeiting;" and the other felonies referred to there are against the pay and bounty laws of the United States.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Then it would seem to me the idea would be expressed by leaving out the word "other."

Mr. TAWNEY. That language has been carried in the appropriation bills time out of mind, and I do not think we are justified on the floor of this House now in changing it, as it may result in an entirely different construction of the language than has heretofore been made upon it.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. For the purpose of clearness it ought to be stricken out.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I do not agree with the gentleman as to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used in payment of compensation or expenses of any person detailed or transferred from the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department, or who may at any time during the fiscal year 1912 have been employed by or under said Secret Service Division.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word——

Mr. BENNET of New York. For the purpose of asking the gentleman from Minnesota if there has been found any difficulty under this limitation, with which he and I are somewhat familiar [laughter], in paying the three persons paid by the appropriation for suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes, and whether he thinks there will be any difficulty in paying the four persons appropriated for this year; and if not, why not?

Mr. TAWNEY. There has not been any difficulty in paying the compensation of the three men detailed, and there will be none hereafter, I may say to the gentleman from New York; and I will say, further, that it is very infrequently that the Secret Service men are called upon by the Secretary of the Treasury. Recently there was a theft in the Treasury Department of a small amount of money, and Secret Service men were detailed temporarily for the purpose of detecting the person or persons who had committed that theft. Then, in the case of the Customs Division of the Treasury Department, there was a temporary detail of Secret Service men there, but there is no permanent necessity for their detail. There has been no difficulty heretofore, and there will be none hereafter.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The Comptroller of the Treasury raised no question?

Mr. TAWNEY. He raised no question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the number and compensation of special agents to be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury under section 2649 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be as follows:

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, unless the gentleman in charge of the bill——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. MACON. I was going to say, Mr. Chairman, that I will reserve a point of order on that paragraph unless the gentleman in charge of the bill will agree to wait until we finish reading line 6, on page 83, so that all points of order can be reserved on this language at that time.

Mr. TAWNEY. I consent to that, because it is all embodied in one proposition. I will waive the question of the right to make the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that unanimous consent be asked that all the paragraphs be considered as one.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that all after line 11, of page 82, down to and including line 6, of page 83, be considered as one paragraph, involving the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

One supervising agent who shall supervise and direct the special agents of the Treasury Department and who shall receive, in addition to the necessary traveling expenses actually incurred by him, a compensation of $4,500 per annum;

Ten special agents who shall each receive, in addition to the necessary traveling expenses actually incurred by him, a compensation to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed $12 per day;

Ten special agents who shall each receive, in addition to the necessary traveling expenses actually incurred by him, a compensation to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed $10 per day; and

Ten special agents who shall each receive, in addition to the necessary traveling expenses actually incurred by him, a compensation to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury not to exceed $8 per day.

Mr. MACON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon the paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Does he reserve it on all that paragraph?

Mr. MACON. Yes. The language is all considered as one paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this provision is this—and I trust I may have the attention of the committee when I explain the reason for the change in the existing law with respect to this appropriation. At the present time there are 28 special agents. Their minimum salary is $6 a day, and their maximum salary is $8 a day. This provision will increase the number from 28 to 30, and it will increase the compensation of the minimum from $6 to $8, and of the maximum from $8 to $12.

The Members of the House are familiar with the activity of the collector of customs at the Port of New York during the past two years and with the result of his efforts to prevent smuggling and to prevent frauds upon the customs revenues. As he stated when before the committee, the collector would be practically powerless were it not for the corps of efficient special agents that he has, whom it is necessary for him to retain if he is to continue the administration of the law as he has been administering it in the past. For example, he stated to the committee that as the result of the work of the special agents employed at the port of New York alone—

I may mention that since the 1st of last December—

That is, December, 1910; and this statement was made January 21, 1911—

they have uncovered undervaluations which have resulted in importers coming and paying to me, up to the time I left New York, $580,000 in actual cash deposited in the subtreasury. In offers of compromise which are now being adjusted we have in sight $50,000 to $60,000 more, which I will take up when I get back.

Over $600,000 collected as a result of the activity of the special agents who are employed at the port of New York in aid of the collector who is charged with the duty of administering this law.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. That does not include the sugar frauds?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; that does not include the amount collected on account of the sugar frauds, nor does it include another very large and important case, the Duvene case, in which we will probably recover $2,000,000 as a result of the efforts of these special agents.

He goes on in his testimony and calls attention to the fact that some of these men who have been in the service a long time are invaluable. Some of them are good and well-qualified lawyers, who remain in the service because of their love for it. It requires a peculiar character of ability for this service. As Mr. Loeb said to us, a good detective would not make a good special agent and a special agent would not make a good detective. Their work involves judgment, discretion, and diplomacy, and it is only by giving to them the support which the collector there has given to these men that they have been able to unearth frauds that have been committed on the revenues of the Government, and it is only because of their enthusiastic loyalty to the collector that he has been able to make the showing that he has in the matter of the enforcement of the customs revenue laws.

Now, this compensation was fixed away back in 1878 and has not been changed since that time. Let me call attention to a circumstance related to the committee by the collector of customs of New York in respect to one man who was detailed on the Panama hat case. He was first sent to Texas. He went there and moved his family there at his own expense. He was not there very long when the developments in the Panama hat case necessitated his being returned to the Port of New York because of his peculiar ability in investigating matters of this kind. He was therefore ordered back to the city of New York. Again he had to move his family back at his own expense. That man's maximum compensation is $8 a day. In the Panama hat case alone he placed in the Treasury, as a result of his labor and effort, an amount that would pay the salaries of the entire force for a number of years.

In view of the fact that it requires the skill, ability, and judgment, and diplomacy it does, and that these men whom they have now in the service possess the ability, it is the desire of the collector to retain them; and the salaries having been fixed away back in 1878, when conditions as to cost of living and so forth were altogether different than they are now, this collector is very desirous that this change should be made, increasing the number of special agents by two and raising the minimum of their compensation from $6 to $8 and the maximum from $8 to $12 a day. I trust that the gentleman from Arkansas will not insist on the point of order, because I think the service rendered by these men justly entitles them to the compensation asked.

Mr. WEEKS. Are these men all stationed at the Port of New York?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; they are not, but the same questions arise and the same investigations are going on at the Port of Boston as at the Port of New York. At the Port of Philadelphia only recently a special agent discovered, after a great deal of careful work, that frauds were being committed there in the way of undervaluation in the woolen and cotton schedules, and as a result a great deal of money has been turned into the Treasury.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How can these frauds go on if the collector of the port does his duty?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Indiana knows that the collector does not make the investigations as to undervaluations and that he could not personally perform that duty. He could not make the appraisement on the imports of merchandise. He must rely upon those officials that the Government furnishes him.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I suppose it depends on the men constituting the organized force.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the work of the special agents in the administration of the customs office is so naturally related that it is impossible for the one to succeed without the efficient service and aid of the other. The undervaluation cases are handled by special agents after the goods are brought into the country.

For example, an investigation was made of the undervaluation on the part of importers of model gowns. There have been great frauds perpetrated by these importers. Three of them, it was discovered, were guilty of undervaluation, and they were arrested. The newspapers announced the next morning that there was a general undervaluation by all importers of model gowns and that the collector intended to make a general raid on all of them. The very next day came into the collector's office voluntarily men engaged in the business and confessed that they had been guilty of the violation, and under the law came there and admitted it, and then agreed to settle on whatever basis the collector would permit them within his discretion under the law.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And the gentleman said that that was the work of these special agents?

Mr. TAWNEY. It was the work of the special agents in the three cases. I might mention a great many other cases cited by Collector Loeb.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman indicate how many agents have been at work in Philadelphia?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know; there was a Mr. Chance, who has served for a long time and is a very able man.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell how much has been recovered at the port of Philadelphia?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will read Collector Loeb's testimony before the committee he will ascertain; he made a statement there.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am frank to say that I had not heard of the incident which the gentleman refers to, and I wanted to know to what extent special agents were sent to the port of Philadelphia and the port of Boston.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the work done at the port of New York it is not only beneficial to the Government in the amount of revenue collected there, but when a fraud of that kind is discovered in New York the method of committing the fraud is also discovered, and instantly the special agents at all other ports are supplied with the information, and their investigations proceed at other ports along the lines discovered at this port.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has indicated wool as being a subject for investigation at Philadelphia. I will say that I have not heard of any inquiry of that kind. My information has been that the inspection at the port of Philadelphia was highly creditable to that port, and I am surprised at the information which the gentleman furnishes, and I hope and believe that he is mistaken.

Mr. TAWNEY. I know that a statement of that kind was made by Collector Loeb.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to say, further——

Mr. TAWNEY. I want the gentleman to understand that I am not criticizing the collector at the port of Philadelphia or any officer there.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That was the inference to be drawn from the gentleman's statement.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not at all; I was simply speaking of the value of the services of these men and the benefit that they are to the service.

[The time of Mr. TAWNEY having expired, at the request of Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania his time was extended five minutes.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to put a question to the gentleman from Minnesota and ask him whether it is not a fact that the proper administration of the law at the customhouses of the country, such as we have recently had at the port of New York, so much to the credit of the present collector, would not help increase the revenues of the country and amply repay all of the expenditures made for inspection?

Mr. TAWNEY. The testimony of Collector Loeb further on is that within the last year the result of the activity of the special agents in the port of New York alone has brought in $11,000,000 revenue collected from importers, where the merchandise imported had already passed into the market.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, I would like to have the gentleman from Minnesota explain to the House why it is that all the sugar imports that come from foreign countries and pay duty are entered at the port of New York, while the sugar coming from our colonial possessions, which pays no duty, enters at the port of Philadelphia?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is a question I can not answer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is a very interesting question, and I wish the gentleman would study it.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no doubt the gentleman has more information on that subject than have I.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have some information, indicating that most of the profitable business goes to the port of New York, while great refineries on the Delaware at Philadelphia are closed.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Does this decrease the number of special agents in any way?

Mr. TAWNEY. It increases the number by two.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that under the program recommended by the committee the salaries of 10 of these special agents would be increased $1,200 and 10 increased $600.

Mr. TAWNEY. The increase will be from six to eight, the minimum, and from eight to twelve, the maximum. Now, of course, as a general rule the agent in charge is the man that will probably receive the highest salary. That is, they have one agent in charge. These men are all under that agent in charge, and then the salaries of the others will range from eight to ten, and ten to twelve.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman recall any other similar instance where there has been such a wholesale increase of salaries as that provided by this bill whereby you increase in one year the salary from $2,400 to $3,600, making that computation upon 300 working days in the year?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I do not recall any specific instance of increase of salaries where the salary was fixed on that basis in 1878, but I think that there are a great many cases where salaries fixed in 1878 have been increased since that time proportionately more than we propose to increase these salaries.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to a reasonable increase, but a jump from $2,400 to $3,600 seems to me rather inordinate.

Mr. TAWNEY. We must take into consideration the character of the service rendered by these men and the benefit to the Government directly of efficient service, and I do think that if there is any one thing in which the Government of the United States makes a mistake it is in not paying adequate salaries where the service performed results in a direct benefit to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. YOUNG of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of New York. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in this connection that the men who are employed in this service are worth more money than they can ever get from this Congress. I believe that the men employed in this service are worth more than $5,000 a year, and it is the best investment that can possibly be made to retain men of the qualifications of those employed in the special customs service. As has been said by the gentleman from Minnesota, there has been saved to the Government of the United States in the last two years over $11,000,000, largely owing to the magnificent service of the men who are employed and are being paid from $6 to $10 a day. Those men are worth in commercial life $10,000 a year, and I am surprised that the service of such men can be procured by the Government at the salaries that are now being paid them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of Members who question the wisdom of this to the services of one man in this service, which resulted in turning into the Treasury of the United States over $3,000,000, and whose service in that one case covered a period of about three years.

Mr. COX of Indiana. When did that occur?

Mr. TAWNEY. It ended last summer and it began about three years before that. His name is Richard Parr, of the city of New York. That man was followed and every member of his family was followed for more than two years by detectives of the Sugar Trust. He was shadowed wherever he went. He was offered $100,000 by the Sugar Trust if he would get out of the service—quit the service.

And as a result of the hounding and shadowing of that man, Dick Parr, when he concluded that service, was practically a physical wreck. That is the kind of men the Government must have; that is the kind of integrity that is required of men in this service and that kind of men and that kind of integrity can not be obtained for a nominal sum. It was Dick Parr who first discovered the method by which the Sugar Trust was defrauding the Government of the United States in the weighing of sugar at the Port of New York. I may also say, Mr. Chairman, that it was Dick Parr who instituted the investigation that has recently led to the disclosure of the frauds perpetrated in the rebates paid on imported molasses, and the aggregate result of that investigation, I am told, will amount to in the neighborhood of $3,000,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much was Parr paid for that work?

Mr. TAWNEY. He was paid at the rate of $8 a day.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Did not he get some bounty from the Government for that?

Mr. TAWNEY. He got just what other men get; what under the seizure he was entitled to.

Mr. COX of Indiana. But how much?

Mr. TAWNEY. Eighty-five—$100,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I thought so.

Mr. TAWNEY. But I am talking for the men who are performing this service daily——

Mr. FITZGERALD. And if my colleague will permit me, I want to say there are few of these men who do work which enables them to make these seizures.

Mr. TAWNEY. I was going to say it was only occasionally one of these men has an opportunity to make a seizure. Now, the way Parr became entitled to the money under the law was the fact that as soon as the discovery was made in the weighing of the sugar he seized a cargo which was valued at something over $400,000, if I am not mistaken. He seized that cargo of sugar, and having made that seizure it entitled him to the moiety, or payment in lieu of moiety, under the statutes of the United States. But notwithstanding the fact in doing that he did not know that he would ultimately get an opportunity to seize this cargo or any property, but he kept on working, kept on in his investigations, and during all that time he was hounded by the detectives of the Sugar Trust, offered bribes in order to get him to go out of the service, but he refused and continued his investigations until the end, and it was through his instrumentality, more than through the instrumentality of any other man, that these frauds were discovered and the revenues paid into the Government and many of the perpetrators of the frauds, including the treasurer of the Sugar Trust, punished.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Is there not a criminal statute that would run against the parties who undertook to bribe him; and if so, was any prosecution brought?

Mr. TAWNEY. I know there was no prosecution, but I do not know——

Mr. COX of Indiana. My recollection is the statute would lie against such a case.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am simply stating the facts, and I hope the Members of the House will appreciate the importance of this service and not make a point of order against this provision.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman in his able and eloquent appeal on behalf of these per diem men has won me over, so far as they are concerned, and I am not going to make the point of order against their increase, but——

Mr. COX of Indiana. If the gentleman withdraws the point of order, I renew it.

Mr. MACON. I have not withdrawn it yet. I propose to make the point of order, however, beginning in line 11, page 82, commencing with the word "hereafter," and on the language found in lines 15, 16, 17, and 18 and ending in 19 on the same page. I make the point of order against that language. I withdraw the point of order on the other.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, to the paragraph on page 82, beginning with line 20 and ending in line 23 and beginning with line 24, bottom of page 82——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is all one paragraph.

Mr. COX of Indiana (continuing). And ending with the word "day," paragraph 2, page 83.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman makes the point of order on the paragraph commencing with line 11, page 82, down to and including line 6, on page 83. Is that correct?

Mr. COX of Indiana. I understood the gentleman from Arkansas made the point of order on the paragraph beginning with line 11 and ending with line 19, on page 82.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I only made the point in line 11, on the one word "hereafter," so as to read:

The number and compensation of special agents to be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury under section 2649 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes a point of order on the entire paragraph?

Mr. COX of Indiana. On the entire paragraph, beginning with the word "hereafter," in line 11, and ending with the word "day," on page 83, line 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $1,156,100, which shall include the amount necessary for the medical inspection of aliens, as required by section 17 of the act of Congress approved February 20, 1907.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On page 42 provision is made for an appropriation of $150,000 for the New York Marine Hospital. This was passed by common consent a little while ago, to be taken up later. I desire at this time to ask the chairman of the committee if the building which it is proposed to construct in New York for the marine hospital is under the direction of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service?

Mr. TAWNEY. The construction of the building is under the Treasury Department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would its management be under the jurisdiction of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, or is there a separate service?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is a building under the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department. The Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service is one of the bureaus of the Treasury Department.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the marine hospital is not under the control of the Treasury Department?

Mr. TAWNEY. In one sense; but the Supervising Architect is custodian.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is there not a separate marine hospital there, under the jurisdiction of the State of New York, apart from the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service of the United States?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; there is no other officer there that has any control.

The Clerk read as follows:

American ethnology: For continuing ethnological researches among the American Indians and the natives of Hawaii, including the excavation and preservation of archeologic remains, under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employees and the purchase of necessary books and periodicals, including payment in advance for subscriptions, $42,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. DALZELL. If I understand it, this appropriation is the same as it was last year?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. The estimate was for $54,000, or $12,000 more for certain exploration work out West, as I understand it, and also certain ethnological work in Hawaii and Samoa.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes. The additional amount was to defray the expense of the additional activities contemplated in the next fiscal year, and that the committee did not see fit to approve. I will say that the estimate was $52,000 for the fiscal year 1911, and they were given $42,000. The language which authorized the increase and scope of their activities was stricken out. We have, however, included in this paragraph language which has not been in any preceding paragraph, but which covers work that the Smithsonian Institution has been doing. There was a question whether they were authorized to do this work, and we incorporated the language expressly authorizing the doing of that which they are now doing. The additional amount was asked for on account of certain work they wanted to do in Hawaii and in Samoa, and I think in one or two of the Middle States, among them the State of Indiana. My colleague on the committee [Mr. SMITH] is more familiar with this matter than I am, and may be able to give the gentleman from Pennsylvania more accurate information on the subject than I can.

Mr. DALZELL. I supposed the language that was put in this bill and in the previous bill was intended to cover the work for which that $12,000 of additional estimate was asked. At the same time, while the language was put in the bill, the $12,000 was not appropriated.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. We did not put the language in, either; neither the language nor money was put in.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that the language in respect to archeology is new, but it is not new work.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not new work, but new language.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They proposed to extend this work to Samoa and to other places, and we refused to permit them to do so. Now, personally, I did not believe they were doing this work of the preservation of archeological remains, and I did not believe it was authorized by statute, and it was only put in in order to legalize in the future what they were doing under the present appropriation.

Mr. DALZELL. The language was put in but the appropriation was left out?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman is mistaken. The language that was thought to be put in was to extend this work to Samoa, and we refused to increase the work over anything they are doing now. But we did put in the language to cover what they are now doing. We refused to increase the appropriation for that work over what they are doing now, but we did put in new language simply sufficient to cover what they are now doing.

Mr. DALZELL. In order to legalize what they are now doing?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes. I did not believe they were entitled under the former language to repair archeological ruins.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as the new language is simply to cover work which the institution has been engaged upon heretofore, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Astrophysical Observatory: For maintenance of Astrophysical Observatory, under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, including salaries of assistants, the purchase of necessary books and periodicals, including payment in advance for subscriptions, apparatus, making necessary observations in high altitudes or in Mexico, repairs and alterations of buildings, and miscellaneous expenses, $18,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. My purpose is to ascertain from the chairman of the committee the purpose of the new language, extending this work to Mexico.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I do not know that I can explain it, except to say that it is to enable the gentleman in charge of the Astrophysical Observatory to conduct scientific investigations in a more authoritative or more accurate and more scientific manner than he and his assistants are able to conduct them now. It is on account of certain currents of air which they want to investigate, both in Mexico at the point contemplated as well as in other parts of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will add to that, if the gentleman from Minnesota will permit me. As the gentleman from Wisconsin knows, the Astrophysical Observatory is engaged chiefly in studying the sun and the sun's rays, and it becomes desirable to make observations at different places and at different altitudes in order to discover accurately what are really changes in the rays of the sun and what changes in the atmosphere produce effects appearing to be changes in the rays of the sun.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should this favoritism be limited to Mexico?

Mr. TAWNEY. They have in this country two stations, one on Mount Whitney and one on Mount Wilson, where they have been engaged in this work, and it is believed that by means of some temporary observations made on one of the mountains in Mexico they can make certain whether these manifestations are sun manifestations or whether in a measure they have been influenced by the air or the conditions of the earth's atmosphere.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that work of this character is being performed by our institutions of learning in other countries, and——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No; the gentleman is in error on that point. This particular work is being conducted chiefly, or I might say exclusively, in this institution, although other institutions elsewhere are making studies along a similar line, but not exactly the same.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think Harvard University is making some investigations outside of this country along that line.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This is an investigation of the sun and its rays.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. C. G. Abbott, the director of the Astrophysical Observatory, said to us when he appeared before us at the hearings conducted by our committee:

The work we are doing has not been duplicated anywhere. They are just coming to the point of following us in carrying on such work as this is. The Weather Bureau has established quite a number of pyrheliometers in the United States in the last year, and it has used as the standard of those instruments instruments which were furnished them by the Astrophysical Observatory.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman, who has for years been very strict in insisting that the Government shall not enter into the realm of private enterprises, and shall not do the work of private institutions of learning, be kind enough to explain wherein this is a proper governmental function? If we undertake this outside investigation, why should we not then duplicate or parallel the work of Harvard University and other scientific institutions which have branch observatories in other countries?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They have not branches for the prosecution of astrophysical study in other countries.

Mr. STAFFORD. They have, to my knowledge, branch institutions elsewhere than in this country for astronomical research.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This is a part of the ultimate solution of the question as to whether weather forecasts can be made far into the future.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not question but that the Government could investigate many subjects in the realms of science if we gave it authorization. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, on the words "in Mexico."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that this is a public work that is being carried on under the authority of law, and there is no limitation as to the territory in which this investigation shall be conducted.

I do not think that the words "in Mexico" are subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Minnesota able to cite any statute which authorizes these investigations in Mexico?

Mr. TAWNEY. There is no statutory authorization other than the appropriation originally made, which has been continued year after year for this service, and the work is going on. It is a public work in progress. They have an observatory here, as the Chair well knows, being one of the regents of this institution.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Have they one in Mexico?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They want to take certain observations in Mexico.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is merely to enable them to take certain observations in Mexico on this mountain. I read from the hearings:

Mr. ABBOT. Mr. Chairman, I told the committee at the meeting a year ago that I had made an expedition to the summit of Mount Whitney. We were unfortunate in 1909 in having only one day which was suitable for the observations. The remainder of the time after the apparatus was adjusted was either cloudy or snowy. Accordingly we repeated this expedition in 1910, and I was fortunate in having two weeks of good weather on the summit of Mount Whitney, which is the highest mountain in the United States. I carried on there complete measurements, which were simultaneous with those carried on at Mount Wilson. We have now reduced the observations made both at Mount Wilson and Mount Whitney, and we have found that the results obtained at Mount Whitney check and substantiate completely the work we were doing on Mount Wilson. Therefore, having established a standard scale of measurement and having shown that we get the same results, whether we make the observation at the sea level at Washington, at Mount Wilson (1 mile elevation), or at Mount Whitney (3 miles elevation), we are now able to state the value of the solar constant of radiation. This value is of an importance equal to that of the distance of the sun in astronomical work, but it was unknown at the time we began this work within limits of two or three fold, so that statements were in the books ranging from 1.75 calories to 3 calories. Our work now of this year has established the value of that constant within 1 per cent.

Now, for the purpose of making this observation, to check it up, at a higher altitude in Mexico than can be reached in the United States, in order to check up the results of the investigations made on Mount Whitney and Mount Wilson, the words "in Mexico" are here inserted.

Mr. DALZELL. I think the words "in Mexico" are a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair undertands that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] makes a point of order against the words "in Mexico." Is that correct?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Zoological Park: For continuing the construction of roads, walks, bridges, water supply, sewerage, and drainage; and for grading, planting, and otherwise improving the grounds; erecting and repairing buildings and inclosures; care, subsistence, purchase, and transportation of animals; including salaries or compensation of all necessary employees; and general incidental expenses not otherwise provided for, including purchase, maintenance, and driving of horses and vehicles required for official purposes, and not exceeding $100 for the purchase of necessary books and periodicals, including payment in advance for subscriptions, $100,000; one half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. DALZELL. I move to strike out the last word. I see that the total appropriation for the Zoological Park is $100,000. The estimates covered an item for buildings, for an aviary, and also for the readjustment of boundaries. Both those items were stricken out by the committee, were they not?

Mr. TAWNEY. They were. One involved the purchase of additional land on the west and on the south. The other item was for a bird cage, and the committee thought they could get along very well with the one they now have for another year.

The proposition to buy this land is one that has been before us a number of times, and the committee were not willing to appropriate the amount that is necessary in the judgment of the superintendent of the park for the purchase of this land, either by voluntary purchase or by condemnation.

Mr. DALZELL. That was $40,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

The President of the United States, from and after the passage of this act, is authorized to designate from time to time any member of the Interstate Commerce Commission or of the Court of Commerce to exercise the powers conferred and the duties imposed upon the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission by the provisions of the "act concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees," approved June 1, 1898; and the member so designated, during the period for which he is designated, shall have the powers now conferred by said act on the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that provision for the purpose of obtaining certain information about it. This is new legislation. I am not disposed to make a point of order if I can find out about it.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is legislation.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Does the gentleman think it is necessary and proper?

Mr. TAWNEY. I made a statement this forenoon in which I explained why this legislation is necessary.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I am very sorry that I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Erdman Act, so called, is mandatory as to who shall constitute the commission.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. The chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. And the Commissioner of Labor.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, the gentleman knows that the former chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission has been appointed one of the justices of the Commerce Court. He can no longer serve in the capacity of arbitrator under the Erdman Act.

Yet, in view of his long experience in that service, in view of his intimate and favorable acquaintance among the representatives of labor organizations and also the employers of labor, it was by his associate commissioner deemed of the utmost importance that this legislation should be enacted, so that his services might be availed of as an arbitrator in the future, as heretofore, in the event the President of the United States deemed it advisable and necessary.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I realize the propriety and importance of having the President of the United States designate someone to act as chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission when the chairman is absent, but I do not think it wise to transfer that power to the Commerce Court. By the way, the gentleman must amend this bill, I think, because he calls it the Court of Commerce in this bill. I am familiar with the services that Mr. Knapp has rendered in these controversies, but he has been appointed as a member of the Commerce Court. I do not know whether he will be chairman of that court or not.

Mr. TAWNEY. I was under a misapprehension if he is not.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. At any rate, I am not willing, on the reasons given by the gentleman from Minnesota, to consent to this legislation, which transfers a member of the Commerce Court who is not a permanent occupant of the bench of the Court of Commerce, because the provisions are that the members shall only occupy their positions for a certain length of time and then shall become members of the judiciary of the United States. I say I am not willing that that legislation should include judges of that court.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the gentleman misunderstood me, or I misstated the fact. This is to enable the President of the United States to avail himself of the services of the former chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Now, it will not only apply to Mr. Knapp as a member of the Commerce Court, but if he goes back as the judge of the circuit court it would apply. It is to enable the President to utilize the services of a man who has by reason of his experience obtained a relation to the men that must be dealt with that a new man has not obtained.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. How is the President to obtain his services after his term has expired as a member of the Commerce Court?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will read the language——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It says that—

He may designate from time to time any member of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of the Commerce Court.

Now, Judge Knapp at the expiration of a certain time will cease to be a member of the Commerce Court and can no longer be designated under this law to carry out that act, because the acts creating the Commerce Court provide that he shall be a member of the Commerce Court only for a certain length of time.

Mr. TAWNEY. We are only dealing with the immediate present.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. But you are making permanent law.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is hoped by that time that the man who succeeds him may have become familiar with the duties sufficient to qualify him in the case.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to make a point of order captiously, because I never do so. I do not think that this legislation would be wise, and take the circuit judge, for that is what he is, an additional circuit judge, who is a member of the Commerce Court, and say that he can designate any member of that court for this work. The Interstate Commerce Commission, or the commissioners, are the ones to deal with this matter, and if the gentleman will confine his provision to any member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, I shall have no objections. I am willing to give the President authority to select any member of the Interstate Commerce Commission he sees fit to do.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not wish to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia, because that defeats the whole purpose. I think the gentleman from Georgia fails to appreciate the importance of the negotiations that are carried on the Erdman Act.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then the gentleman would not insist on putting an inexperienced man in the position of conducting these negotiations. If the gentleman will pardon me, it is only recently that the services of these two men, in negotiations carried on between many thousands of railroad employees and employers in the city of Chicago, resulted in averting what was soon to become one of the most serious strikes for many years.

It was only by reason of the tact, the peculiar qualifications, of the men in charge of the negotiations that that strike was settled, and I hope the gentleman from Georgia will accept the judgment of the Interstate Commerce Commission itself as well as the President and the members of the Commerce Court.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the importance of the service rendered by a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, its chairman, and of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor. I do not, however, appreciate the suggestion that there is no one else whom the President can appoint to the Interstate Commerce Commission—no other man in the United States who can fill the position that Judge Knapp formerly occupied upon the Interstate Commerce Commission. I believe there are men now upon that commission—I believe if a vacancy occurs the President can find a man to appoint upon the Interstate Commerce Commission who will discharge the duties efficiently and satisfactorily to the parties who may be at controversy, although I have not a word of criticism—far from it—and only words of commendation for the services rendered by Judge Knapp.

If Judge Knapp was so indispensable to the country in the services which he rendered as chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, why did not the President keep him there and not appoint him to the Commerce Court? If you set an example of this kind, where a man is appointed to fill some public position, is later transferred to some other position, and then feel you must change the law so that he may be able to carry out the law that he carried out on that other particular tribunal, then you will have a rule of men and not a rule of law. I will not accept with approval the suggestion that there is no one else in the United States, and no one else can be found either now or in the near future, who can discharge the duties formerly discharged by that gentleman.

Mr. ESCH. Would the gentleman find an additional objection to this provision in this fact, that acting as arbitrator he might subsequently, as a member of the Commerce Court, be required to adjudicate upon his own findings?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. That was one of the reasons which I was going to give. He is a circuit judge, and he might at times be called upon to decide the very questions which were at issue which he settled as arbitrator, and I do not think that we ought to complicate the law in that way, nor do I think that we ought to enact this provision into law.

Mr. Chairman, I therefore make the point of order upon the words "or Court of Commerce," occurring in line 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to keep informed regarding and to enforce compliance with acts to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads, including the employment of inspectors, $150,000.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I notice this provision is very materially different from the corresponding provision in the sundry civil act of last year. In that act of last year there was specified the various laws for which an appropriation was to be made. Does the gentleman believe that the addition of $25,000 in this item will be sufficient to carry out the new laws enacted just before the last sundry civil bill became effective?

Mr. TAWNEY. What page is that?

Mr. ESCH. Page 91, the middle paragraph. These acts are the original safety appliance acts——

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that the reason we dropped all those titles was because it is unnecessary to carry them and keep continually reprinting them in the law, so we made them all broad enough to authorize the expenditure of all the sum in the enforcement of all these safety appliance laws. That is the reason we did it.

Mr. ESCH. Does the gentleman think that the language used is sufficient to include the law of May 6, 1910?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; I do.

Mr. ESCH. Does the gentleman think an appropriation of $25,000 is sufficient to carry out that law?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. I notice in the hearings that Judge Clements testified it would not be necessary, for the present at least, to establish a new force to make investigations of important railroad accidents; that he thought he might detail some experts he now has in the office. Does the gentleman think the experts now employed to carry out the safety-appliance law, the standardization act, and so forth, would have the necessary knowledge, experience, and skill to investigate an important railroad wreck?

Mr. TAWNEY. I certainly do, Mr. Chairman, and I can not think that the gentleman from Wisconsin can doubt their ability to make such investigations, knowing, as we both do, the character and the ability of the men who are employed in that investigation of safety appliances. I am satisfied that the men who are qualified to make the investigation of mechanical devices that are now employed on trains and on engines for the safety of employees and the traveling public are sufficiently intelligent and qualified to investigate and inquire into the causes of any railroad accident. They are peculiarly qualified for it, in my judgment, because of their experience in the investigation of those things that are required now by law to protect the public and the employees from injury on account of railroad accidents.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I do not question the competence of these inspectors to administer the safety appliance acts as to car equipment, but it does seem to me we would have to have a higher order of skill and knowledge in order to make the necessary investigation and report upon the accidents that would carry weight with Congress.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in reply to that I want to say that if the gentleman can point out any class of railroad employees from the president down to a brakeman, who by reason of his experience and his knowledge in railroading is better qualified than the men now employed for the inspection of safety appliances, I do not know who they would be unless it would be the chief of the motive power and machinery of railroads, because in average intelligence these men are equal to any other class of employees who are employed by railroad companies in the operation of railroads. I do not think it is wise for us to duplicate service. I think the commission is entirely right in requiring the experts that they now have employed in the inspection of safety appliances to make these investigations and report on the causes of railroad accidents. I do not know to what branch of railroad service the commission could go to find men who are more fitted by reason of their experience and knowledge of railroading, railroad operation, and railroad appliances, than the men who have been selected from all over the United States, from among the active railroad operatives, to test or investigate safety appliances.

Mr. ESCH. I should expect the Government to confine its selection in these investigations to men who are experienced in railroad matters, but the inspectors who now have to investigate mere car equipment, safety appliances, and so forth, are not paid the amount of money which would enable the Government to get the best possible talent, that talent which is necessary to make this accident law most effective.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission to extend the period within which any common carrier shall comply with the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to supplement 'An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes,' and other safety-appliance acts, and for other purposes," approved April 14, 1910, shall apply to cars actually placed in service between the date of the passage of said act and the 1st day of July, 1911, in the same manner and to the same extent that it applies to cars actually in service upon the date of the passage of said act.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against that paragraph in order to get an explanation of it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, who is more familiar with the provision and at whose suggestion this was incorporated, to explain the necessity for this legislation.

Mr. BOUTELL took the chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, at the last session of Congress we passed a law in reference to uniformity of safety appliances upon railroad cars, and so forth. That law provided the Interstate Commerce Commission might fix the appliances and provide for the uniformity, and might extend the time as to compliance on cars that were in operation at the time of the passage of the act. In other words, that as to the cars which were in service on the date of the passage of the act the commission might extend the time within which those cars should be made to comply with the uniform regulation.

There has been considerable work done between the railroads and the railroad employees in connection with an agreement among themselves, which was submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission providing for uniform appliances. It has not yet been settled, and the Interstate Commerce Commission has issued an order fixing the appliances which shall be put upon cars after July 1 next. Of course, that would apply to cars that went into service between the date of the passage of the act and July 1.

The commission has not authority under the existing law to extend time for fixing those cars that went into service after the date of the passage of the act. This was inserted at the request of the Interstate Commerce Commission at the request of the railroads and at the request of the railroad employees.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That explanation is entirely satisfactory, and I see the purpose of the paragraph, and therefore withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairing roadways to national cemeteries: For repairs to roadways to national cemeteries which have been constructed by special authority of Congress, $12,000: Provided, That no railroad shall be permitted upon the right of way which may have been acquired by the United States to a national cemetery, or to encroach upon any roads or walks constructed thereon and maintained by the United States: Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be used for repairing any roadway not owned by the United States within the corporate limits of any city, town, or village.

Hereafter no part of any appropriation for national cemeteries or the repair of roadways thereto shall be expended in the maintenance of more than a single approach to any national cemetery.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that paragraph, in line 17, page 98, after the word "owned," by inserting "or controlled," so that it will read:

Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be used for repairing any roadway not owned or controlled by the United States within the corporate limits of any city, town, or village.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 98, line 17, after the word "owned," insert "or controlled."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, to that I make a point of order that it changes existing law. The existing law is that no appropriation shall, except as otherwise authorized, be used in any work of improvement except upon land belonging to the United States, and this changes the general fundamental law of public improvement.

Mr. CANDLER. Now, then, if the gentleman from Iowa will hear me just a moment, I take it for granted that out of the kindness of his heart and great generosity he will withdraw his point of order——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CANDLER (continuing). In order that justice may be done.

While, Mr. Chairman, I will not concede the point of order, I want to reason with my good friend just a moment.

In the city in which I live—Corinth, Miss.—there is a national cemetery, which is within the corporate limits of the city of Corinth. The whole roadway, which leads from the national cemetery to the center of the town, is also, of course, necessarily within the corporate limits of the city. When that roadway was constructed several years ago the city of Corinth deeded to the United States the streets over which it passes. The part of the roadway outside of the corporate limits of the city—and there was a part of it outside of the corporate limits at that time, the corporate limits having been extended since—was deeded by the owner of the land, Mrs. M. A. Mitchell, over which the road passed at that time for the construction of this roadway. In the two deeds there was a condition placed which provided that the roadway should be kept open for passage. In view of the fact that the city was giving up certain streets within the corporate limits of the city of Corinth to the Government and the owner of the land outside of the corporate limits at that time was conveying that part of the right of way to the United States Government to construct a roadway to reach the national cemetery, they had a right to and did place in the deeds the above-mentioned conditions.

At the last session of Congress I offered an amendment which put into the law the words "owned by the United States." Prior to that time the provision was that no money should be used for the roadway or roads leading to the national cemeteries which were within corporate limits of a city or town. I believed at that time that the amendment which I offered would cover the condition which existed. This condition exists not only in my own town, but also in other cities and towns in the United States. But the department has held, I am informed, that in view of the condition in these deeds providing that the roadway should be kept open for passage to the public, that it is not a fee-simple title, and that the Government does not in the full sense own the road, and, therefore, they have held that the part of the roadway within the corporate limits could not be improved under this provision. Now, then, the Government refuses to improve the road and refuses to permit the city to improve it, and there we stand, up in the air, not being permitted to improve it ourselves and with the Government refusing to improve it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I always like to be gracious, and if the gentleman will offer an amendment ceding the right to the city, I will cheerfully waive the point of order.

Mr. CANDLER. Let me, then, to meet the objection of the gentleman, state further that the Legislature of the State of Mississippi passed an act authorizing the city of Corinth to convey to the Government of the United States these streets over which the road passes; and the city did convey them, and hence I am in no position to offer the amendment which he suggests, but I insist, as the Government owns the streets and controls them, it should keep them in repair.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. We could very readily obtain gifts of all the streets and avenues in all the cities of the United States if we would guarantee to pave them. They are very generous about that. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANDLER. I do not question that, but our city is not trying to have the United States take care of all its streets.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They are the streets of the gentleman's city.

Mr. CANDLER. They are, in one sense of the word; but they are streets which have been conveyed by the city of Corinth by legislative enactment to the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Who authorized the Government of the United States to accept them?

Mr. CANDLER. The Government accepted those streets, but refused to improve them until the legislature made this act of cession. I have right here the deed from the city of Corinth, conveying the streets to the Government of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. What conceivable act of Congress, may I ask the gentleman, ever authorized the streets of his city of Corinth to be dumped on the Government of the United States? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANDLER. The Legislature of the sovereign State of Mississippi authorized the city to convey them to the United States, and the United States accepted them by taking possession of them and building the road thereon. Do you want to have the United States Government act the part of "dog in the manger" and refuse not only to improve those streets itself, but also refuse to let us improve them? [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I have already told the gentleman that if he will offer an amendment ceding the streets back again to the city of Corinth, I will move its adoption immediately and speak in behalf of it. [Laughter.] I do not think the Congress of the United States should grant money from the Federal Treasury to improve the streets of the city of the gentleman, and I think the Government ought not to take the streets.

Mr. CANDLER. Does the gentleman believe that the Government of the United States should improve the streets that belong to the United States?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not believe it should improve many of them.

Mr. CANDLER. This Government is too great and too generous to take streets from the city of Corinth and then refuse to the city of Corinth the right to improve them and refuse to improve them itself, or to attempt to drive us off the streets and then say to us that it will permit the Government streets to go to wreck and ruin without improvement. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I should say that the Representatives of the State of Mississippi, and particularly the Representative from the city of Corinth, are too smart to be imposed upon in that way.

Mr. CANDLER. The Government has made some bad trades, according to the judgment of the gentleman, but I do not think it has made a bad trade in this instance. I think the roadway owned by the Government in the city of Corinth is not only an honor to the city, but also an honor to the Government itself. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may be permitted to extend by remarks in the RECORD in order to include the deeds I have in my hand showing that the Government of the United States does own these streets.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I have no objection, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman extending his remarks and putting the deeds in the RECORD, provided that does not establish or imply acceptance on the part of the United States. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Without objection, it will be done.

The deeds are as follows:

M. A. MITCHELL—DEED TO THE UNITED STATES.

In consideration of $1 and the benefits likely to accrue to me, I convey to the United States of America to be used as a right of way on which to construct and maintain a macadamized or gravel road, the land described as follows:

A strip of land 66 feet wide and 760 feet long, to extend from the point where Meigs Street intersects the corporation line on the east boundary of the city of Corinth, County of Alcorn, State of Mississippi, to the northwest corner of the United States national cemetery situated near said city, said 66 feet in width to be 33 feet on the north side and 33 feet on the south side of said line running from the center of Meigs Street N. 82° E. to the northwest corner of said cemetery. Also sufficient land on the north, west, and south sides of said cemetery and parallel thereto to make, added to the land already owned by the United States on each of said sides, a strip of land 66 feet wide on the outside of the wall inclosing said cemetery, all the land herein conveyed being situated in and a part of the NE. ¼ sec. 12, T. 2, R. 7 E., in Alcorn County, State of Mississippi.

This deed is made, executed, and delivered on condition that the land herein above described and conveyed is to be used as a right of way on which to construct and maintain a macadamized or gravel road.

Witness my signature this the 15th day of October, A. D. 1888.

[SEAL.] O. M. HINTON,
Clerk of Chancery Court, Alcorn County, Miss.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter no part of any appropriation for national cemeteries or the repair of roadways thereto shall be expended in the maintenance of more than a single approach to any national cemetery.

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order against that paragraph, commencing on line 19 and including line 22, on page 98.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I shall insist, contrary to the Chairman's first impression, that it is not subject to a point of order. I wish to be heard upon it, because I know the impression of the Chairman is apt to be in the gentleman's favor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear first the ground for the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THISTLEWOOD].

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. The point I make, Mr. Chairman, is that this is general legislation. It not only seeks to control this appropriation, but any appropriation that may follow. I will read it. It says—

Hereafter no part of any appropriation—

Mark the word "hereafter"— for national cemeteries or the repair of roadways thereto shall be expended in the maintenance of more than a single approach to any national cemetery.

Of course, it is new legislation and general legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in order that this point of order may be understood I deem it my duty to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that in the last sundry civil bill exactly this language was carried, except that the word "hereafter" was not in it. That is, it read:

No part of any appropriation for national cemeteries or the repair of roadways thereto shall be expended in the maintenance of more than a single approach to any national cemetery.

That is, no part of any appropriation heretofore or hereafter made.

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. It did not have the word "hereafter" in it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But the gentleman from Illinois succeeded in getting a ruling from the Attorney General that, notwithstanding this language was that no part of any appropriation for national cemeteries or the repair of roadways thereto shall be expended in the maintenance of more than a single approach to any national cemetery, yet that that was only a limitation upon the appropriation of that year. With all possible respect for the Attorney General, I dissent from his opinion as to the proper construction of the language of last year. I submit that if his construction is correct, that it was simply a limitation upon the annual appropriation, when it applied to any appropriation, either heretofore or hereafter made, then, certainly, this language, being limited only to appropriations hereafter made, is also only a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa inform the Chair, if his contention is correct and this legislation is in the last sundry civil appropriation act, why it is necessary to reenact it with the word "hereafter" inserted?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I have just explained to the Chair that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THISTLEWOOD], notwithstanding the language was plain and unambiguous, as I think, succeeded in getting a ruling from the Attorney General of the United States, advising the Treasury Department that such language was only a limitation upon the annual appropriation, and therefore it became necessary to reenact it.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Then you want to make permanent law out of it this time?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am using more narrow language than before, because the words of the act of last year referred to appropriations heretofore and hereafter made, and now we only refer to hereafter.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Did you not find that the law of last year was no good?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No; it was perfectly good, but it did not go as far as I thought it went.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Then I offer the same language with the word "hereafter" stricken out, and that language has been construed by the ruling of the Attorney General to be simply a limitation. I understand it has been repeatedly held by the Chair that the construction of administrative statutes by the Department of Justice will be followed by the Chair, because that is the way the laws are being executed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 98, after line 18, insert the following:

"No part of any appropriation for national cemeteries or the repair of roadways thereto shall be expended in the maintenance of more than a single approach to any national cemetery."

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. I make a point of order against that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order. The Chair would ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he has the exact language of the last act and the opinion of the Attorney General upon it?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am not in possession at this time of the opinion of the Attorney General, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THISTLEWOOD] will confess that the Attorney General has so construed the law, and the gentleman from Illinois is very proud of that fact.

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I suggest that we get the opinion of the Attorney General and clear up this matter.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It will not clear it up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has examined the opinion of the Attorney General, and in view of that decision will overrule the point of order, and ask that the opinion of the Attorney General be inserted in the RECORD in connection with the decision of the Chair. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The opinion of the Attorney General is as follows:

MOUND CITY NATIONAL CEMETERY—ABANDONMENT OF ROADS LEADING THERETO.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
November 21, 1910.

SIR: I have considered your letter of October 10, 1910, with its accompanying papers, in which you ask my opinion whether Congress has indicated an intention to abandon two of the three roads approaching the Mound City National Cemetery, near Cairo, Ill., by the following proviso of the sundry civil act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 723):

"No part of any appropriation for national cemeteries or the repair of roadways thereto shall be expended in the maintenance of more than a single approach to any national cemetery."

I am of opinion that this proviso does not indicate such an intention.

Of course, the proviso is not expressly an abandonment of any roads, and the only question is whether it is impliedly so.

As I view the subject, it is unnecessary to consider whether a final and irrevocable abandonment of a roadway would be brought about by an act of Congress providing generally that no appropriation should be used in the future for its maintenance, for in this case I think the proviso quoted is intended only to limit the use of appropriations carried by the particular act, thereby suspending repairing for only one year. If this is the true construction of the proviso, then, of course, it does not imply an abandonment of the road, for only an actual cessation of use, and that for a considerable length of time, is deemed to have such an implication. (Lewiston v. Proctor, 27 Ill., 417; Washburn on Easements and Servitudes, 4th ed., 199.) In the Lewiston case the court stated the rule as follows:

"A transient or partial nonuser will not suffice. * * * It is insisted that as this road at the point of obstruction had not been repaired by the corporate authorities it was not regarded by them as a public highway. But all of the evidence to that point shows that from the nature of the ground it was never required. This being true, the law will not require a useless act. Had it been necessary, and it had never been repaired, that fact, with others, would have been proper for the consideration of the jury in determining whether it was regarded by those having charge of the highways as a public road. Of itself that fact is not sufficient to vacate a legally acquired public highway."

There are several reasons why I am of opinion that the proviso is properly to be construed as applicable only to the appropriations carried by the act in which it appears, notwithstanding the fact that the language of the clause, not being in terms explicitly limited, is, standing alone, open to the other construction.

The policy of Congress in these appropriation bills appears to have been long settled against the inclusion of any general legislation. For example, the proviso contained in the paragraph next preceding the clause under construction prohibits any railroad from encroaching upon any of these cemetery roads, and though, in terms, it is just as general in its language as the clause under construction, it has been specifically reenacted by Congress year after year in every sundry civil act from 1895 to the present time. This annual reenactment of such clauses is the common practice in these acts, and in my opinion it indicates plainly a general policy of Congress to limit their scope to the year covered by the act.

The policy is also indicated by the rules of both of the Houses, the Senate rule (XVI, par. 3) being as follows:

"No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill;"

and the House rule (XXI, par. 2) being as follows:

"No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto."

Also the title of the act, "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and for other purposes," tends to repel the idea that general legislation was intended.

Again, the context of the particular clause points to the same conclusion. This context, including the clause itself, is as follows:

"Repairing roadways to national cemeteries: For repairs to roadways to national cemeteries which have been constructed by special authority of Congress, $12,000: Provided, That no railroad shall be permitted upon the right of way which may have been acquired by the United States to a national cemetery, or to encroach upon any roads or walks constructed thereon and maintained by the United States: Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be used for repairing any roadway not owned by the United States within the corporate limits of any city or village.

"No part of any appropriation for national cemeteries or the repair of roadways thereto shall be expended in the maintenance of more than a single approach to any national cemetery.

"For the completion of a protective fence along the roadway leading from Mounds to the national cemetery near Mound City, Pulaski County, Ill., and for the drainage of the ponds or borrow pits caused by the construction of said roadway, $3,000, to be expended under the Quartermaster General." (36 Stat., 723.)

It appears, therefore, that the paragraph immediately preceding and the paragraph immediately following are both necessarily limited to the particular appropriation carried by the statute, and it would require a more explicit statement than the clause itself contains to differentiate it from these surrounding provisions.

The congressional history of the legislation also leads me to the same conclusion. On March 14, 1908, and again on December 14, 1909, your department called the attention of Congress to the fact that there were three different approaches to this cemetery: First, the Mound City Road; second, the Cache River Road; and third, the Mounds Junction Road; and that the latter two of these roads had been constant sources of annoyance, owing chiefly to the excessive proportion which they absorbed out of the total annual appropriations for maintaining all the cemetery roadways in the United States. In this connection your department requested that an item be inserted in the forthcoming sundry civil bill providing for the transfer of these two roads and restricting your department from maintaining more than one approach to any national cemetery. Thereupon a clause was inserted in the appropriation bill, as it first came before the House Committee of the Whole, covering expressly both the recommendation for transfer of the roads, and the recommendation for restriction of the repairs. This paragraph was as follows:

"For the completion of a protective fence along the roadway leading from Mounds to the national cemetery near Mound City, Pulaski County, Ill., and for the drainage of the ponds or borrow pits caused by the construction of said roadway, $3,000, to be expended under the Quartermaster General: Provided, That immediately after said work shall have been completed or said appropriation expended the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to convey to the commissioners of Pulaski County, Ill., whatever right or title the United States may have to roadways and the land on which they have been constructed from said national cemetery to Mounds, formerly known as Mounds Junction, and from said cemetery to the Cache River; and if said commissioners fail or refuse to accept such conveyance, the United States from that time abandons said roads and they shall no longer be maintained by the United States: And provided further, That hereafter no part of any appropriation for national cemeteries or the repair of roadways thereto shall be expended in the maintenance of more than a single approach to any national cemetery." (Cong. Rec., vol. 45, pt. 7, p. 6933.)

A point of order was made against this paragraph on the ground that it was general legislation in an appropriation bill, and therefore in violation of the policy of the House as declared by the aforesaid rules, and this point of order was sustained and the paragraph went out of the bill.

Later the proviso restricting the use of appropriations was restored, and the same point of order was made against it, but the point was overruled, the Chairman saying:

"It is a clear limitation on the appropriation in this bill, and is in order."

Under all these circumstances I do not think this clause should be construed as having the effect of the whole paragraph as originally introduced and then eliminated.

In the context of the clause as quoted above, it will be noted that explicit provision is made for the completion of a protective fence along the Mound City Road. The existence of this provision seems to me of some weight in corroboration of this view of the intention of Congress, for if the clause is to be construed as an abandonment of two out of the three roads to this cemetery, and if your department had been intended to have full power to select which of the two roads should be abandoned, Congress would hardly have prescribed the building of this fence, because it might be that your department would decide that that very road should be itself abandoned.

All these considerations seem to me to outweigh the circumstance that at one stage in the progress of the bill the clause read—

"No part of any appropriation herein for national cemeteries or the repair of roadways thereto shall be expended in the maintenance of more than a single approach to any national cemetery."

It was in this form that the original amendment offered in the House on May 26, 1910, was passed by the House. The Senate struck it out, but in conference the House committee insisted upon it, and the conference report of June 23, 1910, states that "the House provision is restored." How the word "herein" happened to be dropped out in the final form of the bill does not appear, but in my opinion its absence is not controlling as against numerous other considerations above stated.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the proviso was not intended to be general legislation, and, therefore, that it should not be construed as indicating an intention to abandon any of the roads in question.

I feel the more assured in this conclusion because of the general principle that the jurisdiction and property rights of the United States should not be lessened except upon the clearest expression by Congress.

I return all papers herewith.

Respectfully, GEORGE W. WICKERSHAM.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I came to this House about three years ago, and was immediately confronted with this cemetery proposition. The Quartermaster's Department seems determined to throw the roads back on the people. I live within 5 miles of this cemetery, and I feel as if I could not go home and raise my head if the Congress refused to take care of this national cemetery. You might as well go to that brick monument that has been reared there and chop out the bottom as to refuse to take care of the road and paths that run to this cemetery. It is an injustice to the people who live there.

At the time the cemetery was established there were not 500 people living in the county. In Mound City, which is a mile from the cemetery, there are only about 2,000 people now. Yet there have been 6,000 Union and Confederate soldiers buried there. The brave Gen. Turgeon, who came here from Austria, is buried there. I say this Government would be unjust and recreant to its duty if it refused to make ample provision for the care of this cemetery. What is the amount appropriated for all the roads to the national cemeteries in the country? Twelve thousand dollars. It is a mere pittance, a mere bagatelle, and I feel as if it was almost a personal attack on me.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Do they need more than one road to this cemetery?

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. Yes; there are three.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman want them all kept up?

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. Yes; we want them all kept up; we want to be fair to all of the people that come to that cemetery. We are burying people there to-day who are entitled to be buried here, and I think it is only just that the Government should take care of the cemetery and not remove the flowers until the chief mourners have passed by. Gentlemen, do you want to tear down the monument that was erected to the valor of these men who made the monuments of this country, not only on the Union side, but on the Confederate side? I was reading to-day of a company of the Sixteenth Minnesota Regiment which was almost wiped out at the battle of Gettysburg, and yet not a man was taken prisoner and scarcely one-tenth escaped, but stood there like a wall. This cemetery, together with its roads, are a monument to the valor of the American soldiery and ought not to be cut down. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I trust that I have as much admiration for the Union and Confederate soldier as the gentleman from Illinois, although I did not, like him, have the privilege of serving in that great struggle. I have so much admiration for the First and other Minnesota regiments that I would spend a part of the money to maintain the cemeteries where they are buried. This gentleman and his predecessors have succeeded in getting three highways to this national cemetery covering most of the roads in the county and relieving the people from maintaining the roads, and the record shows that this one cemetery he is talking about has consumed 40 per cent of all the money appropriated for all of the roads to all of the national cemeteries within the limits of the United States. It is a question not of doing honor to the soldier dead, but whether he is to monopolize all of the money of all the soldier dead for the few soldiers buried in the cemetery at Mound City. [Applause.] I ask that the amendment be agreed to, and that he be given, like everybody else, one road into the national cemetery at national expense.

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows how much money was spent on this national cemetery last year?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I hope there was not any spent but upon one road, for that was the law.

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. Not one penny.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The record shows that 40 per cent of all the money appropriated for all the roads in the United States was spent at this cemetery.

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. It does not make any difference what the hearings say. It is there as a monument to the heroes of the country. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. THISTLEWOOD) there were—ayes 70, noes 17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL MILITARY PARKS.

Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park: For continuing the establishment of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park; for the compensation and expenses of three civilian commissioners, maps, surveys, clerical and other assistance, including $300 for necessary clerical labor under direction of the chairman of the commission, office expenses, and all other necessary expenses; foundations for State monuments; mowing; historical tablets, iron and bronze; iron gun carriages; for roads and their maintenance; the purchase of small tracts of lands heretofore authorized by law, including $8,000 for completing the improvement and maintenance of the road owned by the Government from Stevens Gap by way of Davis's Cross Roads to Crawfish Springs in the park; in all, $60,000.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 101, at the end of line 25, insert:

"Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to convey to N. C. Steele, of Chattanooga, Tenn., the north 5 feet of the lot conveyed by him to the United States in 1902, situated in Hamilton County, Tenn., on the payment by him of $200 as consideration therefor."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order until I can have some explanation of this.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will say that this was recommended by the War Department, but the subcommittee did not feel that it was important enough to put it into this appropriation bill. Since the hearings, however, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], who represents that district, has convinced us that it is a proper thing to have in this bill, and I will yield to him to make further explanation.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa to withdraw his point of order. This is a very small matter to the Government, but a matter of some importance to Dr. Steele. He conveyed a small tract of land to the Government of the United States upon which to build the Ohio monument. His residence adjoins this piece of land. By mistake he conveyed a little more of his land than he ought to have conveyed, not leaving enough room between the Government land and his own land for a wagon road into his back yard. At this time he passes over the Government's reservation in order to reach the back part of his premises. This proposition is simply to reconvey to him a strip of land 5 feet by 150 feet, so as to enable him to have a right of way into his premises and avoid going over the land of the Government.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I want to know whether the gentleman is satisfied there is no historic marking of any kind in connection with the part that would be affected by the sale of this small strip of land.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. None whatever. I have seen the land and the Commissioner of the Chattanooga Military Park has examined it. It does not interfere with anything at all. It simply enables this man to have a right of way into his back premises. At present he goes over the grounds of the Government to get there. That the commission desires to stop, and as a matter of course could stop, if it wished to do so and was harsh to this gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. May I ask the gentleman whether there is any fence or other thing marking the Government boundary at that point?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The fence there is 5 feet from Mr. Steele's house, between the Government land and his premises. It divides it there. The Government property is open and uninclosed in front but it is inclosed on either side by fences belonging to resident owners.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The Government does not own this fence so that it would be to the expense of moving it?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No; it does not own the fence at all and it does not interfere with any of the Government property. It does not diminish the size of the premises in the least. Dr. Steele conveyed his land to the Government for about $125; that is, of the amount that was paid the proportion of this strip to the whole would about equal that amount. He is proposing to pay back to the Government $200, the amount recommended by the War Department for that purpose.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Do I understand that this is recommended by the department and by the commissioners of the park?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes; by the War Department and the Commissioners of the Chattanooga and Chickamauga National Military Park.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, while I really think this is a bad way to legislate, as there are committees having jurisdiction of these matters that ought to have them submitted to them, yet, with the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gettysburg National Park: For continuing the work of establishing the national park at Gettysburg, Pa.; for the acquisition of lands, surveys, and maps; constructing, improving, and maintaining avenues, roads, and bridges thereon; making fences and gates; marking the lines of battle with tablets and guns, each tablet bearing a brief legend giving historic facts, and compiled without censure and without praise; preserving the features of the battle field and the monuments thereon; providing for a suitable office for the commissioners in Gettysburg; compensation of three civilian commissioners, clerical and other services, expenses, and labor; the purchase and preparation of tablets and gun carriages and placing them in position, and all other expenses incidental to the foregoing, $55,000.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask if it is proposed to buy any more land out at the Gettysburg National Park?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Well, there is nothing contemplated by this item. This is a reduction of $8,000 below last year's ordinary expenditures. I believe there is some land in the vicinity of the cavalry field that it is contemplated at some time in the remote future to buy.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That would not come in here; that is an extension of the maneuvering ground.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. It is not intended to cover the additional purchase of land.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman asks if it is in contemplation to buy any land, and I did not feel at liberty to say it was not contemplated, because it is in the future, but not at all out of this appropriation.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. There is a provision for it here.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is the language used in all these items with reference to general expenses if they wanted to buy a little land.

The Clerk read as follows:

Vicksburg National Military Park: For continuing the work of establishing the Vicksburg National Military Park; for the compensation of three civilian commissioners; for clerical and other services, labor, iron gun carriages, the mounting of siege guns, monuments, markers, and historical tablets giving historical facts, compiled without praise and without censure; maps, surveys; roads, bridges, restoration of earthworks, purchase of lands, purchase and transportation of supplies and materials; and other necessary expenses, $44,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, at the end of line 2, page 104:

"Whenever a vacancy shall occur in any national military park commission it shall not be filled."

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that—I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If some gentleman wishes an explanation, I am perfectly willing to make it.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. May I ask that the amendment be again reported?

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what this means.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is very clear. These commissions are filled at present. For one of these parks there now is an appropriation of $27,000, and more than $10,000 of that sum is paid to the commissioners and one or two clerks. There is no excuse for continuing that system beyond the life of the gentleman now occupying those places.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I understood the gentleman to state there was one of these parks, where, out of an appropriation of $27,000, they expended $10,000 for salaries of commissioners and clerks. Which commission is that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Which commission? Shiloh National Park Commission. But at all these parks the compensation of the commissioners is about 20 per cent of the appropriations for the work, and there is no excuse for it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not think that——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say, after a considerable investigation of this matter, I think the gentleman's amendment does not go far enough. What we ought to do is to consolidate these commissions and not have more than five of them for all the parks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I agree with the gentleman; but here is the difficulty: At present these commissions exist, and upon them are certain gentlemen who have served with some distinction in the war. It would be impossible to consolidate the commissions at this time so as to eliminate some of these gentlemen from their positions.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And one reason I think the amendment ought to be adopted is that I hope it will lead to a consolidation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But if we provide first that the places of those members, who will only leave the commissions as they die, should not be filled, it will be very easy later, when sufficient vacancies occur, to bring about a consolidation and the creation of one commission, which will have control of military parks. I think the gentleman from Iowa realizes that one commission could adequately and properly perform the duties properly devolving upon them.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. These parks are all practically finished now, and the Committee on Military Affairs has reported a bill on two occasions to consolidate them, but they have never been able to get it through; but it should be done by the Congress not only for the better administration of the parks, but in the interest of economy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would be much easier to enact legislation consolidating the commissions when those now upon it have passed out, and we should provide that the places should not be filled.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The theory has always been that one representative of each of these boards would be on the new commission, so that each park would be represented, and that would make a commission not to exceed five, and make it more efficient, less cumbersome, and much more economical.

Mr. BENNET of New York. How are these commissioners appointed, by whom, and for what term?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are appointed by the President. It is my impression that they serve until they die.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Well, I think what my colleague contemplates is, that when one of these gentlemen who is appointed usually for some service, dies, his place shall not be filled?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. But if these men are appointed for definite terms of office——

Mr. CANDLER. They are not so appointed, but during the continuance of the commission.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will make a suggestion which I think is not occurring to the minds of all the Members. When these parks were created the great feature was to locate every historical point on the field, and these commissions passed upon the inscriptions on the monuments as to whether they were correct or not, and approved or rejected.

A great study of each battle field was required at that time, and it was desirable that there should be one Union and one Confederate soldier upon each commission. That time of the marking of the battle fields has passed away, and it is a mere question now of caring for and preserving them, and yet if an attempt should be made by act of Congress to abolish any one of these commissionerships each of the commissioner's friends would regard that as detrimental to his interests. The bill reported has been repeatedly defeated, or has failed to pass I might more properly say.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I ask to be recognized in my own right for one moment, Mr. Chairman. While it seems to me that this provision offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will not do all that ought to be done—namely, to create a new commission in charge of all the parks, with one representative on the new board from each of the old commissions—it will make it, as my colleague from Iowa [Mr. HULL] suggested, a matter of saving to the Government until these commissioners get down to one to a park, and at the same time it will make it much easier to establish a new principle and pass a right law that will provide one commission for them all. Nobody will claim that the provision of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is a remedy. It will be an improvement on the condition. We do not need three men where all the historic sites have been located, where all the plans for the improvement of the parks have been made. Two men or one man can do the work, and then have little to do. We will economize and we will advance to a state where the enactment of ideal legislation is possible, and I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] will be able to see his way clear not to make the point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much salary do these commissioners draw?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. From $3,000 to $5,000 apiece.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of this amendment. While I did not make the point of order, I do not think that this is the kind of a commission that we should attack and abolish. There have been and are numerous commissions established and provided simply to make places for people, some of them Members of Congress going out, and who have for some reason or other abandoned public life, possibly by being defeated at the polls. None of these parks are in the district I represent. Each one of these acts establishing the military parks provides the number of the commissioners and the manner of their appointment, and they provide that these commissioners shall be men who were participants in the battle which the park is established to commemorate, upon either side of the contest.

All of these men are old men. They are old soldiers. They are men who took a prominent part in that great struggle. It will not be long until they will all be gone. We can provide hereafter——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does the gentleman quite fully understand that the gentleman does not propose to remove anybody?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I understand that.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And that these men are to serve their lives out in this work?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes; but some may die early—within a few days or a few months. No one can tell when they will pass away. And yet their places are not to be filled, and this work is not to go on.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The work is finished.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It is not all finished, and I do not believe that we ought to attack, for economy's sake, this work that we have undertaken to establish and carry on, to perpetuate the heroism and patriotism of the men on both sides of that great struggle; and for one I hope it will not be stricken out.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not occupy more than a moment or two of time. Something was said about the work being finished. Such work is never finished. These park commissions have charge of the parks, and they have important business all the time. The several commissions that have charge of Antietam, and Gettysburg, and Chickamauga, and Vicksburg, are always employed. Some of the work which they did originally, or some of the work which they superintended, perhaps, such as marking the positions where the troops were placed in battle, and the positions where they fought and where gallant deeds were performed—much of that work is done, and yet disputes as to locations are going on continually, and the commissioners often relocate those important places. The work of that kind that has been done has usually been done through consultation with the representatives of the military organizations, either Confederate or Union, and that work has not been completely finished. This plan of undertaking to get rid of these commissions by piecemeal, through vacancies occurring by death or resignation, is not a good one, in my judgment.

If the Congress of the United States at some time determines that it is wise to have but one commission—and I think that time is not near at hand—then it will be time enough to adopt it, but I do not think it is wise to go to work and crumble away these commissions, so as to destroy their efficiency and destroy their potential character and their ability to keep up these parks in proper order

I was recently on the battle field of Waterloo, and was very much disappointed to see how poorly the authorities in charge had marked the different positions on that field. I inquired about various places which, according to my reading, were important places and positions in the battle, and few of the guides could tell me anything about them. But if you will go up here to the Antietam battlefield or to any of these other places, where parks are found, you will see how faithfully and completely the battle fields are marked. It is easy to understand the great difference and importance of the work done, historically, which is of interest not alone to those who were not there, but of special interest to those who participated in the battles, and it is gratifying to see how well the positions are marked. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he does not think that at Shiloh, where we make an appropriation of $27,000 for continuing the work of establishing that park and for the compensation of three civilian commissioners, and where they have besides an overhead superintendent, whether the overcharges are not getting pretty high in the administration of that particular park?

Mr. KEIFER. I am not particularly informed as to the administration of the Shiloh Park, or as to the exact figures, but I know that recently we have been making some purchases of land and restoring some of the buildings on the battlefield of Shiloh, and I think that battlefield has been very well marked. If there has been anything wrong with the administration, I hope that will be corrected.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is the administration of the parks that is wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For removing fence and wall around the Botanical Gardens and such grading, soiling, seeding, and sodding as may be incident thereto, $2,500.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I move to strike out the last word. This item provides for removing the fence and wall around the Botanical Gardens. I thought that matter had been settled once, and that it was decided that that fence was not to be removed.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There is an express statute requiring it to be removed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. How long has it been in existence?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. About eight years, but the money has never been appropriated.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Joint Committee on the Library is directed to report by bill at the next session of Congress for the removal of the Botanical Gardens and their relocation in some more suitable location on public grounds of the United States in the District of Columbia, and to also secure and report as accurate estimates as possible of the entire cost of such change, including both the cost of removing the buildings and other property which ought to be removed from the old location and the replacing of such of said property as may be suitable therefor in the new location, and also of the cost of such additional improvement as should be made upon the new site.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I reserve a point of order against that paragraph.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I make a point of order against it.

Mr. HAY. I make a point of order against it.

Mr. ADAIR. I make a point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio, the gentleman from Virginia, the gentleman from Georgia, and others make a point of order against the paragraph. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] desire to be heard?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think not. The law now requires the Joint Committee on the Library to report this proposition, and they have failed to obey the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I apprehend that the law is in a general appropriation bill, just like this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Regular order!

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I intend to say what I have to say, Mr. Chairman, in spite of the loud and sonorous demand of the gentleman from Ohio that we have the regular order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not interfere with the gentleman's right to speak, but we struck out the only paragraph that has been read recently, and the gentleman has no right to go back to a previous paragraph.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia be given five minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to say that the law called attention to by the gentleman from Iowa is probably a paragraph in another appropriation bill, and it looks to me like absolute folly for the Congress of the United States to undertake to instruct, at this session of Congress, what any committee of the next Congress or the next Congress itself shall do.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, we will agree on that, that nobody can control the next Congress at all, not even its Members.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman's side of the House would have been in much better condition if somebody had been able to control them on some subjects that came before the last session of this Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The Quartermaster General of the Army shall hereafter provide suitable accommodations for and maintenance of the horses, carriages, and other vehicles of the President and of the Executive Office in the stables maintained in the District of Columbia by and for the use of his department.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HAY. I make the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I understood that the chairman of the Military Committee would be satisfied if this section was amended by striking out the words "and maintenance of." I will say that I believe the words never had the meaning that the gentleman thought they have.

Mr. HAY. And also strike out the word "hereafter."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would suggest that we now have a law providing for the destruction of the Executive stables, and that if we strike out the word "hereafter" and the words "and maintenance of" it would leave a future Congress to provide the proper place for the Executive horses and carriages.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that inasmuch as this is subject to a point of order I will agree to almost any modification that gentlemen may suggest.

Mr. HAY. I make the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Do I understand the gentleman from Virginia to say that if we strike out the word "hereafter" that will be satisfactory to him?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I suggest to my friend from Virginia that if we strike out the word "hereafter" and the words "and maintenance of" it will simply authorize the quartermaster to care for the Executive horses during the next fiscal year.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that it is claimed, and rightfully, I assume, that the present White House stable is not fit for occupancy. It was complained in the last administration that the animals there were sick, and they were taken out of this stable. The new administration tried to use the stable and found again that the animals were afflicted with disease; that the place was infected; and that it was impossible, in that low ground, to make the stable suitable for the keeping of animals. And thereupon the President, I presume by virtue of his office as Commander in Chief of the Army, supposed he had a right to put the White House horses and cow in the quartermaster's stable, and they are there now. I personally have very little doubt of his right to do so without any special act to that effect. It was not the intention to impose upon the Army the cost of the maintenance of any of these animals or automobiles. The idea of the committee was to impose on the Quartermaster General's Department the maintenance of the stable room, not the maintenance of the animals themselves or of the automobiles.

Mr. HAY. I will withdraw the point of order, with the understanding that the amendment will be made.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. We will have to make the amendment; but I think the gentleman will agree that inasmuch as we have provided for tearing down the White House stable, and that the President has no place to keep the horses, we might make provision for keeping them in the quartermaster's stable, where there is a surplus of room.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in answer to my colleague. The gentleman believes that the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy has a right to have his horses kept in the Quartermaster's Department. It has never been so held, and the Congress has always provided for the President in another bill. The law specifically provides for the number of horses each officer of the Army shall have forage and care for, and the quartermaster's stable is to provide for the care of these horses. The law at no place prescribes for the horses of the President and Commander in Chief, and there is no law on the statute book except that carried in the legislative bill which provides specifically for the White House and its needs and the necessities for the President in the discharge of his duties, not as Commander in Chief, but as Executive of the Nation. The President should be and is always fully cared for as a proposition independent of the Army.

The Army has been charged with a great many expenses that are not legitimately military, and to my mind this was a proposition to load the Army with the care of the Executive's horses and vehicles, including automobiles, and had nothing whatever to do with Army expenses. And it not only goes that far, but some of the clerks have carriages and horses. There is nothing in the law that authorizes the purchase or maintenance of a single horse for the Executive of this country out of the Army appropriation. I am in favor of making the most ample allowance for the maintenance of the Executive office, but it should be done in a proper way. It has always been carried in the executive, legislative, and judicial bill, and that bill, now in conference, makes ample provision, and I can see no reason for a double appropriation or for hereafter transferring this item to the appropriation for the Army.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the paragraph immediately following, which provides for the ordinary care, repair, and refurnishing of the Executive Mansion, and for the purchase and maintenance of driving horses and vehicles.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That shows that the committee had no idea of charging the Quartermaster's Department with the maintenance of the horses and carriages.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order and will move to amend.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 16 strike out the word "hereafter," and in line 17 strike out the words "and maintenance of."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a few remarks. I am for the amendment under the circumstances, but I want to say that the gentlemen on the Military Committee have suddenly, it seems to me, grown very anxious about the War Department appropriation being loaded with the expenses of the Executive. The gentleman from Iowa doubtless knows that horses have in times past been bought for the White House stable and paid for out of the appropriation for cavalry horses for the Army.

Mr. KEIFER. When was that?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Never mind when it was.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I never knew of but one case of that kind.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman from Iowa doubtless knows that additional clerical help at the White House in times past has been detailed from the Quartermaster General's office on the theory that it was detailed to the office of the Commander in Chief of the Army.

Mr. COX of Indiana. When was that?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman from Iowa doubtless knows that employees at the White House stable have been detailed from the force of the Quartermaster General of the Army under theory that they were assigned to duty at the stable of the Commander in Chief of the Army. It is only when we have no stable for the White House vehicles and horses and when there is surplus room in the quartermaster's stable of the Army, when it is discovered that a bad precedent will be established by putting them under our own roof. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Executive Mansion: For ordinary care, repair, and refurnishing of Executive Mansion, and for purchase, maintenance, and driving of horses and vehicles for official purposes, to be expended by contract or otherwise, as the President may determine, $35,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if it would not be well, under the circumstances, to change the words "Executive Mansion" to "White House." In discussing the previous paragraph, both the gentlemen from Iowa [Mr. HULL and Mr. SMITH] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] used the phrase "White House." The stationery of the President is all printed "White House," and the words "Executive Mansion" are too formal for this country. I move to strike out the words "Executive Mansion," in lines 21 and 22, and in lieu thereof insert the words "White House."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 21, strike out "Executive Mansion" and insert "White House."

Line 22, strike out "Executive Mansion" and insert "White House."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment will not prevail. "Executive Mansion" is the title that has been carried in all of the laws of the United States that are descriptive of the building occupied by the Chief Executive of the Nation. The Committee on Appropriations has been importuned for years to change this title from "Executive Mansion" to "White House," but Congress has never seen fit to adopt that recommendation. The words "White House," of course, have some significance here in the city of Washington, but there are a great many white houses all over the United States. There is only one Chief Executive Mansion, and all of the appropriations carried in the sundry civil bill for expenditures on account of the maintenance of the home of the Chief Executive and the grounds surrounding that home are described in the law as for the Executive Mansion, and they have been so described from the beginning of our Government down to the present time. I trust the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman says "Chief Executive Mansion."

Mr. TAWNEY. It is the "Executive Mansion."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. You will find an executive mansion in every State in the Union.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; and it applies to the home of the chief executive of the State just as this is descriptive of the home of the Chief Executive of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is the term used in the law authorizing its construction.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The difference is that one is the official title and the other is the popular, social appellation, and in our laws we should not put in the popular phrases and expressions. We should keep the strict word of the law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Of course the "popular appellation" would have to go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter no greater sum shall be paid any company for lighting any gas or electric lamp in the public grounds, or for installing or moving the same, than is paid by the District of Columbia for similar services, and no contract shall be required to be entered into for lighting the public grounds. Any settlement for arc lighting under the existing contract with the Potomac Electric Power Co. effected by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall apply to the contract with the same company for arc lights for the public grounds and highway bridge.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that. What is the exact purpose of the language in lines 4 and 5, page 111?—

And no contract shall be required to be entered into for lighting the public grounds.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from New York that is the exact provision carried in the District appropriation bill with reference to the contract with the lighting company for the lighting of the city of Washington. Heretofore they were required to enter into a contract for three years at a time. That has been found to be absolutely impracticable, and they would have to enter into a contract for a year at a time under the general law. This is made to conform to the lighting of the city, which lighting is done by the same company that lights the grounds, and then there is another reason for it. The Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds contemplates within the next year attaching the lights in some of the grounds around the White House to the plant in the State, War, and Navy Department. They have sufficient current and capacity there to do that, and he wants the privilege and the opportunity of experimenting with it for that purpose.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman thinks that provision is in the interest of good administration and ultimate economy?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Unveiling statue of John Paul Jones: For unveiling and dedicating the statue of John Paul Jones and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including erecting and taking down reviewing stands and putting the grounds in sightly condition, to be available until expended, $2,500.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against that paragraph. Where is that statue to be unveiled?

Mr. TAWNEY. The statue is to be constructed at the foot of Seventeenth Street. It has been authorized.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Has the gentleman any idea that it will be completed within the next fiscal year?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; otherwise we would not have made this appropriation.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I did not suppose there was any chance of its being completed by that time.

Mr. TAWNEY. We are informed it will be in the fiscal year 1912.

Mr. GARRETT. Is that the usual provision in these monument matters, "to be available until expended?" Is that the usual expression?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. I know that is the usual amount.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the usual amount and that is the language in which all these appropriations are carried, because you can not tell accurately the date when the unveiling will take place.

The Clerk read as follows:

For subsistence, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $119,852.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment increasing the amount in that paragraph from $119,852 to $179,852, it being a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, page 127, strike out "one hundred and nineteen thousand" and insert "one hundred and seventy-nine thousand," so as to read "$179,852."

Mr. ANTHONY. It is a typographical error.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to line 22, page 126, where it says "specified under its head" it should be "this head."

Mr. TAWNEY. The word should be "this" instead of "its."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, on line 22, page 126, the word "its" will be changed to "this."

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For subsistence, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $122,171.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, primarily to get some information from the gentleman in charge of the bill. I notice there is an increase in each item for subsistence, and I would like to ask the chairman to tell the committee whether this is made upon the recommendation of the board of managers?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that it is. All estimates for subsistence for each home have been increased and the amount of the estimated increase has in every case been allowed by the committee. That is due to the fact they have increased the amount of the daily ration to all inmates.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Was there a reason given for this?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. COX of Ohio. What was it, please?

Mr. TAWNEY. I say that the reason is that they have increased the amount of the daily ration.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Well, because of what?

Mr. TAWNEY. Because of the cost.

Mr. COX of Ohio. The cost of living?

Mr. TAWNEY. The cost of living is one cause to which it is attributed and which was given for that increase, and also because the men as they grow old need a different kind of ration. They have changed the ration in some respects so as to include articles which were not heretofore included in it.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Now, Mr. Chairman, is it not true that when this bill was up a year ago the statement was made upon the floor of this House, supplemented by a report from the Inspector General's office of the War Department, that the daily ration in the homes, exclusive of service and preparation, cost per man 14.89 cents; that in one home it was as low as 11 cents—less than that given to the prisoners confined in the Federal penitentiaries at Leavenworth and Atlanta——

Mr. KEIFER. About the same.

Mr. COX of Ohio (continuing). And is it not true, furthermore, that when that contention was made a statement was read on this floor from the board of managers seeking to disprove the contention that the men were not getting a sufficient ration? I ask the chairman whether he will confirm that statement.

Mr. TAWNEY. I remember indistinctly the controversy between the gentleman from Ohio and members of the committee respecting the ration that is provided for, but in so far as statements were made by gentlemen on either side of the controversy, I can not verify the statement of the gentleman from Ohio; I know from all the indications the result of the controversy was very satisfactory last November to the gentleman from Ohio, but I can not be explicit and verify all of the statements or the grounds upon which gentlemen argued pro and con on the proposition a year ago.

Mr. COX of Ohio. The facts are that the people in some parts of the country, Ohio and other places, were rather discriminating when they approached the polls last fall, in November. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Not in all cases, I would say. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX of Ohio. The gentleman from New York read into the RECORD a statement of Maj. Harris, if I remember correctly, tending to show that the ration was sufficient. Now it develops that Maj. Harris makes a different statement to the Committee on Appropriations. He says that—

The ration cost on the estimate submitted to the committee is now 20 cents per day, which includes the cost of service, etc.

I think the board was somewhat influenced by the agitation as to the feeding of the men in the homes, brought about by the reports of the inspectors general that they considered the amount expended too small, and so after very careful consideration they fixed it at 20 cents.

Now, in addition to that, Mr. Chairman, it develops that Maj. Brewster, in submitting his report to this Congress, called the attention of this body again to the fact that the situation with reference to rations had not been improved, but that the board had promised to make the proper recommendations to this Congress.

Mr. TAWNEY. And that increase was 1.2 cents per day.

Mr. COX of Ohio. That increase, nevertheless, amounts to $260,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. But, as a matter of fact, the increase is 1.2 cents per day to each inmate of the home.

Mr. COX of Ohio. It amounts to almost $40,000 in the Dayton Home, alone, or over $100 a day. But I want to make this observation at this juncture, and what I have said is stated for that specific purpose alone, that the Board of Managers or some one connected with that organization has sought to keep the facts with reference to the management of these homes from Congress, and in the statement now made to your committee the effort is made to impress upon the country and this Congress that the ration has been increased to 20 cents, when, as a matter of fact, it has been only increased to 16.87 cents. In speaking of the Army ration and other rations, it is customary to speak of the naked ration alone, without the cost of service and preparation, and so the Board of Managers in seeking to impress the 20-cent ration on the mind of this Congress are evading the facts once more.

I simply wished to make these observations for the truth of the history of the thing; that is all. The contention which I advanced a year ago the board now confirms. Incidentally it shows that congressional ventilation of bad administration serves a very wholesome purpose. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, if the gentleman is satisfied with the truth of history, I am satisfied.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $4,031,282.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, page 133, between lines 14 and 15:

"Provided, No part of the appropriation for subsistence at national soldiers' homes shall be expended for oleomargarine or substitutes for butter."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, last November I made a visit——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. ANTHONY. Last November I made a visit to the western branch of the National Soldiers' Home at Leavenworth. I spent the day out there, and in view of the discussion that took place in this House last year on how the men at these soldiers' homes are being fed, I went particularly into the question of subsistence.

I found at the Leavenworth Home the men were being well fed and well taken care of in every respect, but there was the absolute necessity that it was apparent with those old men—thousands of them, with an average age of perhaps from 70 to 75, many of them 85 to 90 years—there is an absolute necessity of their getting more and better food. They can not subsist now upon the kind of food they could at one time when they were hale and hearty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Do you not think good oleomargarine is much better than the bad butter that they get there?

Mr. ANTHONY. We propose to give them good butter. These men need more butter, and they need milk, and they need eggs. It would be nothing more than humanity to give them those things. The meal that I inspected out there was good in every respect except the fact that oleomargarine was served at the table. The men told me that oleomargarine, coming on that table three times a day, in a very short time became absolutely revolting to their stomachs. I do not blame them for it, and I believe it would be the decent thing to do in behalf of these old soldiers, these brave men who went out and saved the Union in the dark days from 1861 to 1865, to treat them as well as we would ask that we ourselves be treated in our old age.

Now, there is not a man here, not even Mr. FITZGERALD, of New York, who would eat oleomargarine——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I never eat oleomargarine, or butterine, either. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the House now will fully debate this amendment and inaugurate this reform.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman is sure that the old soldiers will be furnished with better butter than the oleomargarine they are now served with, I will withdraw my point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am sure they will be. These soldiers' homes are inspected with the utmost rigidity, and I may add for the gratification of the gentleman that even the whisky they use there is the best whisky that is made in the State of Kentucky. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] withdraws the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Before the motion is put, I want to make a suggestion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas either speaks very disingenuously or without information about oleomargarine. He speaks as though oleomargarine were a deleterious food substance. Had he been in this House within a very few years when the pure-food bill was under consideration, or even when we had under consideration that very indefensible bill which placed a tax of 10 cents a pound on uncolored oleomargarine, he would have learned that oleomargarine is a very much better foodstuff and is purer and less objectionable from every standpoint than 70 or 80 per cent of the butter that is sold and is consumed by those who eat butter.

Mr. COX of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman whether oleomargarine is served to soldiers in the Army?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know as to that. It is immaterial whether it is or not. For myself, I may say that I eat neither oleomargarine nor butter. I am not prejudiced in favor of either foodstuff, but I know something about foodstuffs, and I assert now that the gentleman from Kansas, even though he does represent an agricultural district, would not be able to tell oleomargarine from butter if the oleomargarine were colored the same as the butter which the people sell.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, Mr. Chairman; but these old soldiers can tell it, and if the gentleman were to go into one of these soldiers' homes he would quickly find out what they think about it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman's imagination is running away with his judgment. The taste of these old soldiers is not quite so acute as are the senses of the gentleman from Kansas. But, assuming that he is an expert on good butter—which, considering the surroundings of his habitat, I venture greatly to doubt—I am of opinion that he would not be able to tell oleomargarine from butter, if neither one of them were colored, or if both of them were equally colored. It is preposterous to assert that any class of people who use oleomargarine would say that it would be revolting to them. It is simply a pretense to try and urge a boom in the butter market, perhaps for the benefit of the butter producers of Kansas.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me tell the gentleman something about the use of oleomargarine in cooking, for instance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. One moment, please. Oleomargarine, Mr. Chairman, is——

Mr. ANTHONY. It is made out of steer fat, and it absolutely poisons the flavor of anything that it is cooked with.

Mr. MACON. I must dispute that statement, Mr. Chairman. It is made out of cottonseed oil—the purest product on the face of the earth. It is a purely vegetable substance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman knew something about the renovated butter that he seems to be trying to have these old soldiers use, he would very quickly withdraw from his position.

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, all the renovated butter is sent to New York City. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think this House should attempt to discriminate against any foodstuff that is in itself healthful and that is approved by all the medical profession, even including the distinguished gentleman who sits in the House [Mr. FOSTER of Illinois]. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX of Indiana. Except the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have already done enough to drive oleomargarine out of the market.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman that I prefer butter, myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman does not know the difference. The gentleman imagines he prefers butter. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Probably the gentleman is able to pay 60 cents a pound for gilt-edge butter at the neighboring dairies, but he should remember that there are 60,000,000 of people in the country who are not able to pay that much.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to say only a word on this subject. If the managers of the Soldiers' Home at Leavenworth, Kans., supply the members of that home with the kind of oleomargarine that the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] has described, they are getting a spurious article of oleomargarine. The ordinary oleomargarine is just as wholesome and just as nutritious as butter. It is a pure-food product from every standpoint.

When the oleomargarine-tax proposition was pending in this House Dr. Wiley, the great American food expert, said to me that he would rather eat oleomargarine than the average dairy butter that can be bought in the markets of the country, and that the family he was boarding with then used it on the table.

I have no doubt that the uncolored oleomargarine is a little bit obnoxious, because it does not look much like butter. It is not in the oleo itself, but it is in the imagination, the squeamishness of the appetite. We associate a certain natural color with butter. My judgment is that there has never been, since the organization of this Government, a more flagrant abuse of the taxing power, in destroying one industry for the benefit of another, than the imposition of the 10-cent tax on oleomargarine. [Applause].

I do not think this amendment ought to go into this bill, but if the veterans in the National Soldiers' Home at Leavenworth object to oleomargarine because of its color, or for any other reason, the managers of the home ought not to buy it and should supply them with butter. I believe in providing members of soldiers' homes with every comfort and convenience of life, but the law should not further discriminate against oleomargarine.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will, in view of the gentleman's connection with that legislation.

Mr. TAWNEY. In view of my connection with the oleomargarine law, I must challenge the statement made by the gentleman that that law was for the purpose of taxing one industry for the benefit of another industry.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That was its avowed purpose.

Mr. TAWNEY. The purpose was altogether different. The purpose was to tax fraud. That is what the tax was on, the fraud practiced by the oleomargarine manufacturers upon the consumers of butter, by selling their product for that which it was not.

Mr. MACON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him how it was a fraud?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not intend to delay the passage of this bill by getting into a discussion about the relative merits of oleomargarine and butter.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I remember the able fight the gentleman from Minnesota made in favor of that law, and he was leading the insurgent forces in the House at that time. He distinguished himself as an insurgent leader, in favor of the Grout bill, I think it was.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is right.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I voted against it. There is no oleomargarine manufactured in the district that I represent, and none that I know of in the State of Indiana; but I know something about oleomargarine and something about dairy butter. I prefer what we call creamery butter to oleomargarine for table use; but the ordinary dairy butter, in my judgment, is not as good as oleomargarine properly colored. And most of the butter that is sold in the markets is artificially colored; but perhaps they use innocuous coloring ingredients, such as annatto and saffron, and two or three other things that are entirely harmless.

I felt prompted to say these few words in defense of oleomargarine, and I hope the time will soon come when the tax of 10 cents a pound will be materially reduced, so as to bring that excellent food product within the reach of the great mass of the people of the United States.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I have been informed that oleomargarine is made of cottonseed oil, a pure vegetable production that would not harm anyone unless used excessively.

Mr. ANTHONY. I agree with the gentleman in regard to oleomargarine made from cottonseed oil, but the oleomargarine that is purchased for the soldiers' homes that I am familiar with comes from the packing-house centers, where it is made from the refuse steer fat.

Mr. MACON. I know nothing of that brand of oleomargarine, but I understand that the gentleman's amendment proposes to exclude all oleomargarine.

If that is so, then he is legislating against a pure product that would be wholesome for anyone to eat, whether he was an old soldier or anyone else.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the word "oleo" means steer fat. So an imitation butter made from cottonseed oil would pass as butterine, technically speaking, instead of oleo. I believe that if you could get a good butterine made from cottonseed oil it would be all right.

Mr. MACON. I think the gentleman should legislate against butter on that theory, because I have seen it unfit for a dog to eat, much less for a human being, but I have not seen any oleomargarine in that condition. I was sorry to hear the gentleman from Minnesota suggest a moment ago that he was in favor of the tax on oleomargarine because it was a fraud. I did not think the gentleman from Minnesota would be willing to tolerate a fraud for the sake of securing a tax.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Arkansas will pardon me, it was not because I was in favor of tolerating fraud that I favored the tax, but for the purpose of suppressing a fraud, a fraud that was being perpetrated on the consumers of butter.

Mr. MACON. If it is fraudulent, it ought to be legislated out of existence; no one ought to be allowed to manufacture it or deal in it in any way. I do not believe the gentleman from Minnesota was justified when he found it to be a fraud to attempt to tax it out of existence. My idea is that when you find a fraud, you should suppress it at once, and do it by the strong arm of the law, and not say virtually to it, "You can exist in this country, Mr. Fraud, if you will only pay a certain license fee for so doing."

Why, sirs, you never saw oleomargarine that was tainted with tuberculosis in your life. Yet we find butter upon almost every table in this day and generation that is tainted with that dread disease. If the gentleman from Kansas will stop and think for a moment and properly consider the great interests of these old soldiers, I am sure he would try to place upon every table in the soldiers' homes this pure vegetable product, one that would be wholesome and healthy to have, and not try to legislate it out of existence, and put in its stead poisonous butter that might cause them to contract a deadly disease that would soon send them to untimely graves.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas if he uses oleomargarine on his table.

Mr. MACON. I have not had an opportunity for some time, but I would like to have a table with some of it spread on it right now. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and pending amendment be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendment be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANTHONY) there were 14 ayes and 17 nays.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, this bill contains a provision appropriating an additional sum of $350,000 to continue the work of raising the battleship Maine in Habana Harbor. Heretofore $300,000 have been appropriated for this purpose, and we are informed the money carried in this bill for the purpose will complete the job and comply with the mandate of Congress. I hope this is so, and that the work of raising the Maine will soon be accomplished.

In my opinion it is a matter of congratulation among all patriotic people that at last the wreck of the ill-fated battleship Maine is to be raised. Thirteen years and more have come and gone since the Maine was blown up in the harbor of Habana. That catastrophe made history, wrote a large page in our annals, and changed the map of the world. But the Maine was apparently forgotten, and nothing was done by the Government in all these years to raise the wreck and bring home and bury, with naval honors, in Arlington Cemetery, the remains of the sixty-odd brave and gallant sailors entombed in that hulk in the muck and slime of the harbor of Habana.

The records in the Navy Department show that 231 men were killed when the Maine was blown up; that 24 bodies were immediately recovered and buried in Key West, Fla.; that later 144 bodies were recovered and buried in Habana; that these bodies were subsequently brought home and buried in the national cemetery at Arlington; that at least 63 bodies were never recovered or accounted for, and are now entombed in the wreck of the Maine. Our dereliction in this matter was in strange contrast to our boasted patriotism. The work must go on, and every patriotic man in America wants it finished as soon as possible.

There are three reasons why we should relax no effort to raise the wreck of the Maine. First, because the wreck is a menace to navigation in the harbor of Habana and must be removed from the channel. Secondly, the Maine must be raised to ascertain how she was destroyed, so that the truth shall be known beyond peradventure; and, thirdly and most important of all from a patriotic point of view, that the remains of the Nation's dead now entombed in the hulk shall be recovered and brought home for burial with naval honors in Arlington Cemetery.

Public sentiment has demanded for years that the wreck of the Maine be raised; that the truth of her destruction be told; that the derelict be removed from the channels of navigation; that the bodies of these brave sailors who sacrificed their lives on the altar of their country be recovered and decently interred in the national cemetery. When this additional appropriation is available, we are assured by the Army engineers that the work will diligently proceed to a final and successful completion; and to that end I favor appropriating this additional sum of money and trust no more funds will be required and no further delay tolerated.

Mr. Chairman, I now send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time and as a part of my remarks several letters from Maj. John F. O'Rourke, the eminent engineer and the president of the O'Rourke Engineering Construction Co., of New York, which will throw some light on the subject matter and show that if my suggestions had been followed in the first instance the work of raising the Maine would be finished ere this, and for a sum much less than now seems to be required by the Army engineers.

The Clerk read as follows:

O'ROURKE ENGINEERING CONSTRUCTION CO.,
345 Fifth Avenue, New York, July 26, 1910.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
115 Broadway, New York City.

DEAR SIR: I had an interview yesterday at the War Department in Washington with the Hon. Robert Shaw Oliver, Acting Secretary of War, at which I submitted to Secretary Oliver plans showing my method for raising the Maine, together with a letter explaining the method in detail, and a proposition under which the O'Rourke Engineering Construction Co. would do the work. The following is a copy of this letter, which is dated July 23:

"I had the honor of writing you on July 5 in regard to a plan I have devised for the raising and docking of the Maine, and also inclosing a letter from Hon. George W. Wickersham, Attorney General, kindly presenting my project and myself to your consideration.

"I am now in a position to lay before you the manner in which my company is prepared to do this work, and discuss the question of arranging for having the work done, should you decide to raise the ship at this time.

"The method is as follows:

"To construct on both sides of the ship and about 20 feet therefrom, two ordinary wharves on piles, sink pneumatic caissons between the wharves and the ship to a depth of about 10 feet below the bottom of the Maine, these caissons to have cables on them every 4 feet; the cables opposite one another being of different sizes; in one case a plow-steel cable of about 200 tons capacity, and in the other a small hauling cable of perhaps ¾ inch diameter. These cables are then carried down outside the caissons from their tops to and underneath the cutting edges, the ends being coiled in the air chambers before the sinking is begun. A small pipe is pushed through the bottom from one air chamber to the other, and through this pipe the ends of the small cables are passed to the opposite air chamber, after which the pipe is pulled into that air chamber over the ends of the cables, leaving the latter lying exposed in the mud. The ends of the big cables opposite these little ones are then attached to the latter, which readily hauls them out from under the cutting edge, and under and around the Maine to the top of the opposite caisson.

"In this manner cables are passed underneath the ship every 4 feet from the top of one caisson to the top of the opposite caisson, the combined strength of the cables being four times the weight of the battleship.

"The air chambers are filled with sand, the wharves are carried over on top of the caissons, which are cut off to the proper level therefor, and then a strong framework is erected with double columns every 4 feet. This structure would be about 30 feet in height, strongly braced and guyed, and fitted at the tops of the posts with a casting connecting the posts and braces, and providing a seat with a universal joint for a screw jack of at least 100 tons capacity. The screws of the jacks end in a head like that of an eye-bar, and the clamps which grip the cable are finished in two similar eye-bar heads, giving a connection with the screws by means of a 3½-inch pin, which is over 100 tons in strength.

"When the framework is in place and the screw jacks are connected to the cables, a strong tension is taken in the cables with the jacks, and then water corresponding to the weight of the Maine is pumped from the cofferdams of the caissons. By this means the caissons are prepared to receive the weight of the Maine without imposing any additional weight on the mud bottom upon which the caissons rest. I might say that the caissons are made sufficiently large and strong to still contain 50 per cent more weight of water than the ship weighs, so that there is a margin of about 3,000 tons of water which can be drawn upon should occasion require. When the caissons are thus prepared for receiving the weight, the connection between the mud and the bottom of the ship is broken by any one of several well-known methods, after which, by a proper manipulation of the screws, the vessel is first brought to an even keel and then made level fore and aft.

"After the above work has been accomplished, the screws are gradually slacked off in pairs, fleeted down to their fullest extent, reclamped on the cables, after which the tension is restored and other screws are fleeted downward in like manner until all the screws have been lowered to their greatest extent, so that all of them are ready for a lift upward of about 10 feet. This part of the work is very safe and certain, because sufficient strength is provided to carry the Maine with one-half the cables and screws that are employed. The operation of fleeting the screws down and lifting the ship up is repeated again and again until the vessel is brought out of the water in the same condition in which she sank—that is, so far as any interference with her during these operations is concerned.

"A platform above water under the ship is then constructed between the caissons and a dry dock of ample strength and extent affords every facility for examination and repairs. In some respects this dock is superior to the ordinary lifting dock, because wherever a supporting cable may be in the way it can be slacked off and moved to some other point, where it will perform its part in supporting the vessel just as well as where it belonged, instead of having fixed keel and bilge blocks to deal with.

"It will be noticed that in the process described there are no chances taken with any attempt to introduce something involving experiment; but, on the contrary, I have confined myself to things with which we have had great practical experience. The wharf building, the caisson sinking, the passing of pipes between air chambers, the raising of the cables underneath and around the ship, the construction of the lifting structure, and the fitting and operation of the screw jacks are all operations well understood, easily carried out, and independent of any questions of depth of mud or condition of the ship. The mud, however deep, does not complicate the question or add materially to the cost, and should there be obstructions at any point preventing the passage of the cable, tunneling to and removal of the obstruction is a simple matter. Damages to the ship, however great, would not prevent its being brought up intact because of the distribution of the weight and the flexibility, contiguity, as well as rigidity of the means employed.

"The method, however, is entirely novel, and the uses made of all the well-known operations employed are new.

"The plan of pumping water from the cofferdams of the caissons of a weight equivalent to that to be thereafter applied to them is a way of conducting operations over a mud bottom possessing no dependable supporting power, and deriving from the water pressure under the bottoms a support as efficient and reliable as solid rock.

"The whole plan is one of great simplicity, and though it perhaps would be better appreciated by an engineer than a layman, it is easily understood by everybody.

"In sinking caissons alongside of large buildings supported on quicksands the writer devised and patented a method of conducting the compressed air escaping from the air chamber up alongside the caisson on the side opposite the building, leaving the support of the latter entirely undisturbed. Some of the largest buildings in New York that are supported over spread foundations on quicksands have had caissons provided with this high cutting edge on the distant side of the caisson sunk alongside them without producing any settlement whatever. It is proposed to use this device on the caissons surrounding the Maine, so that the mud underneath the ship would remain undisturbed until the ship is carried on the cables. There are numerous other improvements in caisson work devised by the writer that would also be employed, so that the work would be carried on with entire safety, certainty, and speed, and the results sought would be obtained without question in the same manner that any other great engineering operation of the usual character would be carried out.

"In my letter to the Attorney General I stated that in disclosing this method I would expect to be protected. In dealing with your department I am satisfied that my rights will be as safe in your hands as if the patents now applied for had already been granted.

"It might appear at first that the appropriation made for this work is inadequate for the purpose, but I think that it is most likely that much of the Government's resources could be employed in addition to its money—for instance, one of the repair ships now in southern waters could be utilized for carrying the necessary plant and giving the required power, while there is nothing more appropriate than that one of the regiments of the Army should man the jacks while they are lifting their dead comrades out of the water. A fair idea of the power to be employed is given by the fact that these jacks require approximately 1,000 men. Should the Government care to thus utilize its present facilities and concede certain things the actual cost in cash would not be very great.

"The O'Rourke Engineering Construction Co., of which I am the president, would undertake this work and agree to deliver the ship in the dock already described within a period to be agreed upon. The company at the present time is fully equipped with the necessary plant, and has an organization of men of great experience in this character of work, who would be set to work as fast as the supplies required could be procured. We would also bear in mind that this operation would be watched by the whole world, and that not only the credit of the company but of the country itself was involved in the successful completion of this undertaking in a manner worthy of the occasion and in record time."

After some discussion of the matter in which I explained my plans, Secretary Oliver gave the plans and letter to Gen. Bixby, who will refer them to a board of engineers which will be shortly appointed to consider the subject.

During the interview Gen. Bixby showed me a copy of my letter to you of the 11th instant, in which I brought to your notice the fact that I had a method for raising the Maine along lines with which I am familiar, and concerning the efficiency, cost, and independence of local conditions, there is no question, so that if desired the work of raising the ship and docking her for examination and repairs could be begun at once.

Very truly, yours, JOHN F. O'ROURKE.

O'ROURKE ENGINEERING CONSTRUCTION CO.,
345 Fifth Avenue, New York, August 30, 1910.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
115 Broadway, New York City.

MY DEAR SIR: I have just returned from the interview with President Taft at Beverly, which was arranged through your kindness.

The President was most cordial, and gave me an opportunity to fully explain my plans and propositions to him and also to Mr. Meyer, Secretary of the Navy, who happened to be calling on the President at the time. Mr. Taft gave most careful attention to the plans, which showed in detail the manner in which the work was to be done, and after a full discussion of the ways and means I made him the following proposition:

That the O'Rourke Engineering Construction Co. would agree to raise the Maine in the manner shown by the plans for a cost not to exceed $500,000 to the Government; any costs that might be incurred above that figure to be borne by the O'Rourke Co. Second, that we would consent to any form of contract which would insure to the Government that we would only be paid for the actual cost of the work, with no allowance for profit. Third, that no payment would be asked for until after the Maine had been raised out of the water, properly docked for examination and disposal, as shown by the plans.

The President seemed favorably impressed by my plans and by the offer to do the work, and invited me to come to Washington for another conference on the 25th of next month, when he expected to be there for a few days. There was a question in his mind in regard to whether he was authorized by the bill and the Government regulations to make such a contract, and told me that in the meantime he would read the bill himself, and also obtain from the Attorney General an opinion as to his powers in the matter.

He also wired Gen. Bixby in my presence, directing him to have a report by the 25th of September from the board of engineers who were considering the raising of the Maine, in regard to the conditions which they found in Habana Harbor.

I told him that my present information was sufficient to enable me to make a binding offer now, as the method which I was proposing to use was independent either of the character of the bottom or the condition of the Maine.

Since seeing the President I have decided to go to Habana next week, and will ask Col. Black, chairman of the board, for permission to take part with them in their investigations.

Very truly, yours, JOHN F. O'ROURKE.

O'ROURKE ENGINEERING CONSTRUCTION CO.,
345 Fifth Avenue, New York, September 21, 1910.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
115 Broadway, New York City.

DEAR SIR: I returned yesterday from Habana, where I spent all of last week taking part in the borings and examinations which the Board of Engineers is now carrying on at the wreck of the Maine. I also talked with a number of people who were eyewitnesses of the explosion, so that I feel familiar with the conditions surrounding the loss of the ship and the nature of the bottom of the harbor where she now lies.

The first boring was made off the stern of the Maine, where the drill reached hard bottom at 105 feet below surface. There is 35 feet of water, then 30 feet of mud of practically no consistency whatever, after which it gradually grows harder, until at 85 feet down it is quite hard, and at 105 feet it is probably rock. The next boring was made off the bow, where the depth of water was just the same, but it was found to be about 90 feet below the surface before any degree of hardness was found in the bottom, and hard bottom was encountered at 118 feet down.

On Saturday morning, before sailing for home, I made a test, from the deck of the Government scow in the presence of the engineers, with my own hands, using a 1-inch pipe, which I readily pushed down 55 feet, at which point I could lift the pipe up and down unaided, showing that at that depth the bottom is nothing but mud. As this is the point at which I would stop my proposed caissons, it was very gratifying to find that the conditions were ideal for the method which I propose.

It is most likely that very little difference will be found in any of the future tests. It is quite possible that hard bottom may in some instances be found nearer the surface, but this would not alter the situation any as regards the use of a cofferdam, which is being discussed, because the governing factor in such a case is not the high points, but the low points; and a cofferdam that could be used there with success would have to be a very strong structure resting on hard bottom and possessing sufficient stability in itself to resist the tendency of the water and mud to overturn it, unaided by interior bracing, as the latter is impracticable. The expense of this method would be enormous, the time required would be very great, and its subsequent removal would be much more of an undertaking than the raising of the ship itself is now.

I have called the attention of the Board of Engineers to this fact, and I trust they will not be led into the adoption of any cofferdam method; or if they are, that they will make adequate plans for doing the work so that the disgrace of a failure may be avoided.

The relation of certain uninjured parts of the ship to high water was easily attained, and from the known dimensions, as given in the plans, I have been able to fix the position of the bottom of the ship as 48 feet below water. This, I understand, is 5 or 6 feet deeper than the ship was found to be sunk to at the time of the accident, and several men who work in boats around the harbor told me that she is sinking deeper year by year. The condition of the mud as described at 55 feet below the surface would indicate this to be true. Another evidence of the continual sinking of the ship is plainly shown in a comparison of the photographs made at the time of the accident and ones that I took myself last week.

I am going to Washington next Monday to meet the President, as arranged at Beverly. I hope to be able to place all these facts before him, as they correspond exactly with the conditions assumed in my interview with him last month and verify all that I said at that time.

Very truly, yours, JOHN F. O'ROURKE.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
115 Broadway, New York City.

DEAR SIR: I returned last night from Washington, where I expected to see President Taft by appointment, but found that his engagements did not permit of receiving me.

Had a couple of interviews, however, with Attorney General Wickersham, to whom I explained the situation at Habana, particularly the character of the bottom surrounding the Maine, which I told him was so soft as to entirely preclude the idea of using a cofferdam. Also made a sketch of the borings at the bow and stern of the Maine and showed him a sample of the material at 55 feet below the surface, which clearly indicates its light and unstable character.

I waited about two hours at the White House before Secretary Norton told me that the President would be unable to see me, and that he had left the matter in the hands of the Attorney General and the Board of Engineers of the War Department.

As the amount of the appropriation at present available for raising the Maine is $300,000, while waiting to see the President I prepared an offer, which I gave to Mr. Wickersham, who promised to show it to the President at luncheon, in which I proposed to build the temporary platforms, sink the caissons, and put all the cables in place under and around the ship, with the ends resting on the caissons on each side, for the lump sum of $290,000, it being understood that I would complete the remainder of the work and raise the Maine without waiting for a further appropriation, trusting to Congress to be paid later for doing the balance of the work.

I stated that if allowed to go on within a reasonable time from now with the work that I would guarantee to raise the ship out of the water on February 15 next, the thirteenth anniversary of its sinking. This I could easily do, because the amount of work involved is no greater than I have often done under conditions less favorable, and besides, there is nothing experimental about anything that is involved.

I stated, as a basis of future payments, that the remainder of the work, including the subsequent removal of platforms and caissons, would be done for the lump sum of $210,000, or, if preferred, for the net cost of materials and labor and prevailing rates for use of plant and equipment, the vessel to be raised from the water and turned over to the War Department, as shown in the plans, ready for inspection and for repairs or dismemberment as might be subsequently decided.

I was a little disappointed at not seeing President Taft, as my understanding with him on August 29 at Beverly was that a conference would be arranged between himself and the Attorney General, the Secretary of War, and the Army engineers, at which I was also to be present. The question of authority for making the contract would be settled in the meantime, and I had been looking forward to making an immediate arrangement to raise the ship, according to some form of contract, which, as I have already told you, I left entirely to the President.

Very truly, yours, JOHN F. O'ROURKE.

O'ROURKE ENGINEERING CONSTRUCTION CO.,

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SULZER: Apropos to the Maine, the New York Herald of September 26, 1910, the date on which I went to Washington to see the President, contained an interview with me in which I called attention to the impracticable character of the proposition to use a cofferdam in connection with the raising of the wreck. It was such a positive and unmistakable warning and so publicly given that the quoting of this in connection with the interview with Mr. Wickersham and the fatuous report of the engineers of a few days later make strikingly significant my letter describing the Washington trip.

The report of Gen. Bixby to the President, transmitting the report of the board of engineers and his, to me, preliminary estimate is just as silly as the plan he was indorsing, when you compare his promises with their performances. The work that they are doing at Habana now is of the simplest character, and the placing of steel sheet piling in such soft and comparatively uniform material is a most inexpensive operation when properly conducted. I imagine that they have involved themselves in all sorts of expense, keeping dredges on hand at a price of perhaps several hundred dollars per day, when, if they knew their business, they would obtain them after they had completed their cofferdam and were ready to put them into use.

The possible interference of wreckage from the explosion or anything in the nature of sunken obstacles in the way of the sheet piling could be better removed by some grappling contrivance than by a dredge, and the same machinery which handles the steam hammer used for driving the piles could be just as useful in operating a grapple.

I should be sorry not to see the appropriation they are looking for given them, because it would always be said that they failed for want of favorable congressional action, and if they are honest in thinking that they can do the work, as they are proposing to, it seems only fair, since the chance was accorded them, that they should be permitted to go on to the end.

There is no doubt, however, that in view of your connection with this raising of the Maine and the position you have already taken with the President in the matter, that the reading of my letters and the claim on your part that you had procured for the President an opportunity to have this work done under terms which did not admit of the loss of a dollar to the Government in the case of its failure and a saving of money to the Government in the case of its success, as well as the prompt execution of the work, should be strongly brought out.

To-day is the thirteenth anniversary of the sinking of the Maine, and if I had had my way to-day would have witnessed the raising of that ship from out of the water. There is so little imagination or appeal to the national pride in the plan that has been adopted that one can hardly dream that men having the authority vested in that board would be so shortsighted and narrow-minded as to refuse to approve of a plan like mine of such startling novelty and absolute certainty in execution.

The very conditions surrounding the Maine, while piling up almost unsurmountable difficulties against the construction of a safe cofferdam, actually facilitated the ease and success of my method, and nothing is less reasonable or could be more insincere than the ground taken by the engineers that the lifting of the wreck in a flexible cradle of cables would so deform its present shape that one could not tell if there had been an external explosion.

You might just as well claim that to take in your hand a battered tin can, that its weight upon your hand would cause the indentations to disappear, as to claim that a ship which is as strong in proportion to its weight as the tin can is in proportion to its weight, would likewise lose its indentations and have its shape changed by reason of resting upon a support as flexible and distributed over the whole area of the ship's bottom as the palm of your hand would be beneath the tin can which I am using as an illustration. This talk about the forward part of the ship being so thoroughly destroyed is without reason, because eyewitnesses, and even the testimony taken by the board of naval officers at the time of the disaster, shows that she remained afloat too long after the explosion to have been in any such condition. For the reduction of the forward third of the ship to a semidetached mass of wreckage, incapable of excluding water from within, would simply mean that that part of the ship was a dead weight, which would have pulled her down head first, like a dog with a stone tied to his neck, but even if it were true that the forward third of the ship is in this condition my cradle method would have brought it up without the bending of a single plate or the dislocation of any of its parts from the position they now occupy with relation to the rest of the ship.

As you may recall, my final proposition included the placing of cables every 2 feet apart, and the application of power independently to each cable, so that if it were found that any one cable was yielding to tension at a greater rate than its neighbors, that cable could have the tension applied to it reduced so as not to come up any faster than the others, and the strength of the cables were such that not more than one in every three need be strained at all, and those which were, were fully competent to do all the lifting required. Moreover, I put no limit on the number of cables that would be used, if desired; so that, even if they criticized my cable every 2 feet, I could put them much more frequently and arrange them in any manner that circumstances should require.

I do not know whether I have already informed you that I applied for a patent involving the principles devised for this work, but such was done, and the claims, in themselves most basic in nature, were allowed by the Patent Office without reference to any existing patent, publication, or known state of the art, which is perhaps the most striking testimony possible as to their originality, novelty, and invention.

As regards the granting of the appropriation, I sincerely trust this will be done, but at the same time I think the engineers should be required to give in detail the manner in which the first appropriation has been expended, and I think you will find that what I have said about useless dredges retained at great cost and other forms of mismanagement due to inexperience will be disclosed.

Most sincerely, yours, JOHN F. O'ROURKE.

The Clerk read as follows:

State or Territorial homes for disabled soldiers and sailors: For continuing aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers, in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888, including all classes of soldiers admissible to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $1,200,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be apportioned to any State or Territorial home that maintains a bar or canteen where intoxicating liquors are sold: Provided further, That for any sum or sums collected in any manner from inmates of such State or Territorial homes to be used for the support of said homes a like amount shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for, but this proviso shall not apply to any State or Territorial home into which the wives or widows of soldiers are admitted and maintained.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment to line 11, page 134.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 134, line 11, after the word "maintained," insert the words "or where oleomargarine is served."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order on that that it is not germane.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the statement was made in the matter of oleomargarine that no discrimination should be made between it and butter. It is apparent, however, that the gentleman from New York is seeking to make a discrimination between soldiers of the national military home and the soldiers now in the active service. When he was asked whether the soldiers in the Army were served with oleomargarine, he said he did not know. It is perfectly fair to assume that if he had any information in the negative he would have stated it. Now, if oleomargarine has all the healthful qualities claimed for it by my distinguished friend from Arkansas and my colleague from New York, I should like to inquire why they do not make a requisition on the gentleman in charge of the House restaurant for oleomargarine on the table in the House restaurant downstairs?

If it is not good enough for the Members of Congress to have served in the House restaurant, then why should it be given to the men who served the country in the days of darkness and uncertainty?

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. COX of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. The good quality of it would be better than the butter that they serve downstairs sometimes.

Mr. COX of Ohio. I think that butter comes from Tennessee. The truth is that there is absolutely nothing too good for these old men in the homes. I do not want to engage in any useless sentimentality, but the average age of these men is over 75. They are sitting there waiting for the setting sun, and they are entitled to the most wholesome food that can be purchased for them by this Government.

The kind of oleomargarine served them, with all the uncertainty as to its composition, is one of the jokes of the soldiers' homes. A wit in the Dayton Home very properly called it "bull butter." If it is not good enough for Members of this House nor for soldiers in the Army, it ought not to be served to the old veterans in the homes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Capitol power plant: For lighting the Capitol, Senate and House Office Buildings, and Congressional Library Building, and the grounds about the same, Botanic Garden, Senate stables and engine house, House stables, Maltby Building, and folding and storage rooms of the Senate; pay of superintendent of meters, at the rate of $1,600 per annum, who shall inspect all gas and electric meters of the Government in the District of Columbia without additional compensation; for necessary personal and other services; and for materials and labor in connection with the maintenance and operation of the heating, lighting, and power plant, and substations connected therewith, to be expended by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds under the supervision and direction of the House Office Building Commission, $90,000: Provided, That hereafter the heating, lighting, and power plant constructed under the terms of the act approved April 28, 1904, shall be known as the Capitol power plant; and hereafter all vacancies occurring in the force operating said plant and the substations in connection therewith shall be filled by said superintendent with the approval of said House Office Building Commission.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 137, lines 1 and 2 and line 9, strike out the words "House Office Building Commission," where they occur, and in lieu thereof insert the words "commission in control of the House Office Building, appointed under the act approved March 4, 1907."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For chemical and physical researches relating to the geology of the United States, $20,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 147, line 2, strike out the word "twenty" and insert "including researches with a view of determining geological conditions favorable to the presence of potash salts, 40."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is not subject to the point of order. I think it is clearly in order. This is the paragraph providing for chemical and physical researches relating to the geology of the United States, and I propose to add $20,000 to the item, and provide that these researches shall include such as will afford information as to the geological conditions favorable to the occurrence of potash salts.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Wyoming will permit, I am not opposed to the investigation which he authorizes by this amendment. What I am opposed to is authorizing two different departments of the Government to make the same investigation. I endeavored to keep out of the agricultural appropriation bill the sum of $12,000, which was carried for the purpose of making this investigation under the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Department. It has no business there. It is not one of the functions of the Agricultural Department to conduct geological researches of any kind, but the House did not agree with me.

The provision that passed the House, as I understand it, has been agreed to by the Senate. I think the Geological Survey is the bureau that ought to be clothed with the authority and given the appropriation for making this investigation. I do not think it is wise for us to have two departments of the Government investigating the same subject. Unless the gentleman will couple with his amendment a proviso that no moneys appropriated in any other appropriation bill for this investigation shall be available for that purpose I would have to insist upon the point of order. The investigation is one of the most important ones, I think, that Congress has ever authorized any bureau of the Government to make, and I do not think we ought to duplicate the service in this manner. There is another thing I want to call attention to, and that is that the Agricultural Department has no equipment. The Geological Survey is equipped for making this investigation, because it will require a drilling equipment. They are not going out through the country traveling over the desert and pick up these potash salts, but they have to conduct a series of drilling operations; and for that service the Geological Survey is now equipped and has a great many of these drills that they have used in the exploration and investigation of land for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not there are under the land mineral oils. If the gentleman would accept some provision of that kind that no other appropriation made in any other appropriation bill for this purpose shall be available, I shall not insist on the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection personally to that, but I want to remind the gentleman that when the amendment was offered to the agricultural appropriation bill I called attention to the fact that it was a useless appropriation; that the only investigation that the Agricultural Department could carry on would be an investigation as to the possibility of the production of phosphate salts as a by-product.

Why, our grandmothers developed that line of investigation in the old days, when they used to put wood ashes in a barrel and leach them out and make homemade soap, and that is as far as that kind of an investigation can be carried to any useful purpose. The only extensive potash deposits known in the world now are in Germany.

Mr. FINLEY. I will state to the gentleman to-day I received a letter from a former constituent of mine who said that at Montague, N. Mex., there is a deposit of potash.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there may be deposits of potash of which we know nothing, but the commercial potash of the world practically all comes from Germany, where it is found in extensive deposits of the salts laid down and then covered by an impervious layer of clay, and if potash is to be found anywhere else in the world in any great quantity it must be found practically under those conditions, for potash is a very soluble salts, and it is not found as the other salts are—in open spaces, in lake beds, and the like.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman has no information that there are not potash salt deposits in the arid countries such as New Mexico and Arizona.

Mr. MONDELL. Gentlemen connected with the Geological Survey believe there are in parts of Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, and elsewhere geological conditions that are favorable to the existence of valuable potash deposits.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Germany has the world by the throat in this matter of potash at this time. A short time ago the American users of potash for fertilizers, for soap, and for the cyanide treatment of ores, and other purposes, made very large contracts with certain German miners of potash, but that did not suit the German potash trust, and they were powerful enough and influential enough to have an export duty placed on potash, and the result is that the American users of potash are now paying a great tribute to the German trust. Practically all the potash of the world, of which we imported $12,000,000 worth last year, comes from these deposits.

Mr. GARRETT. Is the gentleman sure that figure is correct—$12,000,000?

Mr. MONDELL. I have the figures before me. In 1910 it was $12,716,000. Those were the imports for 1910.

Mr. GARRETT. I had an impression it was about $8,000,000.

Mr. MONDELL. I think these figures are correct. The increase in the use of potash is shown by the fact that in 1900 our imports were $5,750,000; in 1905, $8,922,000; and in 1910, $12,716,000, as I have just stated. It has increased at the rate of about 10 or 15 per cent a year, and we are dependent entirely on Germany for this mineral, and the deposits in Germany are controlled by a great trust that has recently advanced the price very considerably.

Mr. SIMS. The question I would like to ask the gentleman is this: Does the export duty have a tendency to reduce the price to the German consumer or to increase the price paid by people outside?

Mr. MONDELL. It increases it outside, because the German user of potash has a very great advantage over the potash user anywhere in the world——

Mr. SIMS. In other words, he gets it lower on account of the export duty?

Mr. TAWNEY. The export tax does not affect the local market in Germany at all.

Mr. SIMS. That is what I wanted to understand.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is no application whatever.

Mr. MONDELL. It affects them in this way: Our potash importations are of the crude potash, and the German manufacturer of potash secures the raw material very much more cheaply than our manufacturers, and that gives him an advantage. I think the increase is something like 20 to 25 per cent above what we paid for potash a year ago. The result is that fertilizers are costing much more.

Mr. KEIFER. More than double.

Mr. MONDELL. More than double, the gentleman tells us.

Mr. SIMS. We pay the export duty?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMS. Which does not reduce it at all.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Is it not a fact that the manufacturers and farmers of this country who have contracts with the producers of potash in Germany have had their contracts repudiated because of this recent imposition?

Mr. MONDELL. The German trust has been able to make it almost impossible for them to fill their contracts, because they have prorated the amount which can be mined at the various mines and have given the mines which were exporting to the United States but a small amount.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would ask the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to come to the practical question of whether we ought to carry it in two bills.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I regret there is a $12,000 appropriation in the agricultural bill. It can be of little practical use, it seems to me. But we are now on the bill that ought to carry this appropriation. There is nothing more important before the American people to-day than an investigation of potash deposits, and we are on the appropriation bill where that expenditure can be properly provided for.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the House has said this investigation ought to be made in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was not a similar amendment proposed during the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; there was an appropriation of $12,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was not that proposed by the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. MONDELL. It was not. The gentleman from Wyoming opposed it on the ground that it was a useless expenditure of public money in an investigation that could lead to nothing, because the Agricultural Department could not make this geological investigation. They have not the information, they have not the equipment, and it is not within the proper field of their operation. However, I hope they may be able to spend that appropriation for some useful purpose, but I doubt it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But they have the language in the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, we will have the language in this bill if we adopt the amendment I offer.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the point of order. If the Chair holds the amendment is in order, I will move to amend.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MANN). The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota if there is any direct or specific authority for the item in the original paragraph?

Mr. TAWNEY. The organic law creating the Geological Survey, back in 1878, specifically authorizes the work that is included in the paragraph that is proposed to be amended. I am free to say that I think this is a part of the work of the Geological Survey, but if the amendment is held to be in order and is to be adopted, I trust that some provision may be added somewhere, before it becomes a law, to prevent the expenditure of money appropriated in other departments that have no jurisdiction whatever over this subject, that have heretofore been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. LEVER. I would like to have the amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will report it in a moment. The paragraph in the bill to which the amendment is offered is:

For chemical and physical research relating to the geology of the United States, $20,000.

The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] offers an amendment, so that the paragraph would read:

For chemical and physical researches relating to the geology of the United States, including researches with a view of determining geological conditions favorable to the presence of deposits of potash salts, $40,000.

There seems to be, so far as the Chair is informed, no specific authority for this paragraph in the language of the paragraph, at least. The paragraph provides for chemical and physical researches relating to the geology of the United States. That is a very much broader authority than is included in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and unquestionably includes the authority to make researches with a view of determining geological conditions favorable to the presence of potash-salt deposits. And as to the item in the paragraph, whether it was or was not subject to a point of order, is now before the committee. No point of order having been made, the Chair is of the opinion that it is in order to direct special attention to something which is included within the scope of general language already in the bill, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I would not take any of the time of the House at this hour of the evening, but for the fact that I have given some attention to this very question. Without being able to give from memory the exact figures, I think I can give them substantially aright. Our dealers in potash have been obliged, as has been stated by the gentleman from Wyoming, to go to Germany to make their contracts to purchase potash. Some months ago they went over there and made their contracts for potash to be shipped from that country, and agreed to pay, I would say, $18 per ton in the crude state. This price is according to my recollection now. They made these contracts in the last year and for a number of years' supply with a new company there that was not under the domination or control or ownership of the German authorities. Thereupon the German authorities succeeded in having put on the potash of that kind for export a tax of about $23 a ton, so that the price that was paid, including the export tax, brought the contract price up to $41 per ton or thereabouts. Now, the United States has not been idle in regard to this matter. Our Government sent representatives to Germany to see if we could not get that tax taken off, as it worked unjustly against our people. The contractors have hitherto paid the other company, according to my recollection, about $22 a ton, and there was then no export tax. It will be seen that we have a controversy going on with Germany at the present time as to whether or not they are discriminating against the United States.

Now, so much for that. This is a most important matter, a matter which I have taken up on my own account in the last few days. I have succeeded in getting a great salt company in the West to attempt to go through their present vein of rock salt and below it, with the expectation of finding potash there in paying quantities, as they find it in the mines of Germany. It is said that potash in desirable quantity lies below the formation of rock salt in a salt region, or below the place where we find salt brine. There is found in the State of Kansas the most remarkable rock-salt veins in the world, and there is every reason to believe, from my own personal knowledge and investigation and that of others, that there may be found potash there. There are at present in parts of Kansas rock salt veins 235 feet in thickness, and almost pure all the way through and below black sand rock. The general depth at which rock salt has there been struck is somewhere between 600 feet and 700 feet. I have no particular interest in this now, although I once had, but I have had influence enough with a salt company to induce it to undertake the discovery of potash suitable to be mined. I think the Government ought to do it. It is worth, as the gentleman from Wyoming has said, millions of dollars to this country, and it may cut off the possibility of the very trouble that now exists between this country and Germany, which would cut off the injustice that comes now to the consumers of potash in this country. Potash is in almost universal use in the United States for many purposes.

Instead of getting potash for about $4 per ton less than formerly, our importers are now obliged to pay for it nearly double the price they formerly paid, on account of the export tax that has been put on it by the German Empire. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 2, insert "and no other money appropriated in this or any other act shall be used for the objects of this appropriation during the fiscal year 1912."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, that is a limitation upon any appropriation that may have been made in any other bill for this same service. I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is not a limitation upon the appropriations carried in this bill at all, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LEVER. I want to call the attention——

Mr. TAWNEY. Has the Chair ruled that the amendment is not in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so held.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then I move that all debate on the paragraph be now closed.

Mr. LEVER. O, Mr. Chairman, I have the floor. I do not think the gentleman from Minnesota can take me off the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina was recognized before the motion was made.

Mr. LEVER. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that when the agricultural appropriation bill was under consideration a few days ago an amendment was inserted in that bill providing for explorations and investigations for the purpose of locating, if possible, potash and nitrate deposits in the United States. An appropriation of $12,500 for that purpose was provided. I read to the committee at that time a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Soils, in which he made the statement that his bureau was well prepared to make these investigations, and that they can be made with the appropriation provided in that amendment.

Since that time I have received a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, which I do not happen to have with me at this time, saying that the department is well prepared to do this very work provided for in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. Now, it seems to me that this is too important a proposition for us to be working at cross purposes on it. I don't want any juggling about it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from South Carolina permit an interruption?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I presume you can get an admission from the Agricultural Department that they are qualified to run the Army and Navy as well as the Geological Survey.

Mr. LEVER. I presume that admission could be obtained from the Interior Department as well.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is true of all of them.

Mr. LEVER. And also the Geological Survey. Now, Mr. Chairman, the soil chemists of the Department of Agriculture assure me that they are prepared to make this investigation, and to make it with an appropriation far less than that provided for in the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]; and I do not see any reason why we should duplicate this work and provide that one department shall make it and that another department shall make it, with the result in the end that neither department will make it. I am afraid of the situation which the amendment now under discussion will bring about. It offers too good an opportunity for this whole undertaking to be defeated.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the Agricultural Department expect to get potash salts out of the soil? Is that where they expect to get them?

Mr. LEVER. The Department of Agriculture expects to make the chemical investigation. Their plan is not to make borings for potash salts, as the Geological Survey would do.

Mr. MONDELL. Then why does the gentleman oppose this amendment?

Mr. LEVER. The proposition of the Geological Survey to make borings will require, in my judgment, not only $20,000 but half a million dollars, and maybe much more; but the Department of Agriculture will make surface examinations, and from those surface examinations indicate to private individuals the fact that at certain places potash salts ought to be found, and let private individuals make the borings.

Mr. MONDELL. Are there any geologists in the Agricultural Department?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, I do not know; there are plenty of soil chemists there. Are there any soil chemists in the Geological Survey?

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman know of any place on earth where potash is gotten out of the soil? Potash deposits lie hundreds of feet deep. How can you tell anything about a potash deposit by examining the surface of the soil?

Mr. LEVER. My information is that the top surface always indicates the presence of potash salts.

Mr. MONDELL. That is very extraordinary.

Mr. LEVER. And I understand that is the way that the Geological Survey finds out about the location of oil as well.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. They might take a witch-hazel stick!

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] suggests that a witch-hazel stick might also be valuable, as well as soil analysis.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, well! I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the Agricultural appropriation bill carries this authorization to do this work. The Senate Committee on Agriculture have reported the bill with this provision in it, and I see nothing in this amendment except the purpose to take from the Agricultural Department some authority and transfer it to the Geological Survey, and perhaps develop a situation which will cause the loss of both appropriations. This is too important a matter to take any chances on. I therefore appeal to my farmer friends to stand by the Agricultural Department, which already is practically assured of the authority to do this work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendment be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MONDELL) there were 37 ayes and 36 nays.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation as to the causes of mine explosions, methods of mining, especially in relation to the safety of miners, the appliances best adapted to prevent accidents, the possible improvement of conditions under which mining operations are carried on, the use of explosives and electricity, the prevention of accidents and other inquiries and technologic investigations pertinent to the mining industry, $310,000.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 148, line 14, strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "sixty," so that it will read "$360,000."

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered increases the appropriation for the investigation of mine explosions and their causes from three hundred and ten to three hundred and sixty thousand dollars, being the amount estimated in the book of estimates for this work. The Bureau of Mines is comparatively a new institution, and has been doing good work in the investigation of mine explosions, mining accidents, and the various purposes for which it is established. The work is young, but it is very necessary that the work should be continued and to some extent enlarged. We have seen in the papers to-day some very serious accidents that have happened in the mines at Tonopah, Nev., a class of accidents that so far the Bureau of Mines has not had an opportunity to investigate; and in many ways, which it is not necessary for me to enlarge upon it is proper that this appropriation should be increased. I hope that the motion will pervail.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California says that this service is young, and he might have added that it is very lusty. For in 1909 they expended $150,000 for this purpose. In 1910, $150,000. Last year, when the Bureau of Mines was organized, we raised it to $310,000, and now the gentleman is insisting that we raise it to $360,000. It is very young but growing handsomely.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there was no showing before the committee to warrant this enormous increase. The evidence shows that the work is not yet fully organized, that it is impossible to tell how much they need annually for this service, and it would be a gross waste of public money to grant the increase on the showing before the committee.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will.

Mr. GOULDEN. What justification was there in the hearing for increasing the amount $160,000 over last year?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This was increased on the floor, as I remember it, for this new Bureau of Mines. Now, this force is not yet fully organized. There are no salaries yet fixed by Congress. They are proposing to fix some that seem to be very exorbitant and this has grown so vastly that it would be in my judgment a scandalous waste of public money to give this increase with no better showing than has been made before the committee.

Mr. GOULDEN. Have the results justified the expenditure of $150,000 a year?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not know of any results yet, but I am not blaming the bureau for that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to state one reason why it was not reported at $360,000. At the time this appropriation was made at the last session, Members of the House will recollect the fact that the gentleman from Montana on the floor of the House, the House acting under the influence of sympathy for the miners who are destroyed and killed in mining accidents, increased the appropriation $100,000 here on the floor, on the statement that these branch stations were to be extended into the State of Montana and some other States.

Now, the fact is that instead of following the policy that was contemplated at that time the Bureau of Mines has adopted a different policy of furnishing relief in cases of accident and also of instructing miners and mine operators in the use of safety appliances. They have now a car, or several cars, and the railroad companies furnish free transportation for that car and all of the men who are engaged in the service. Consequently, the Bureau of Mines is doing a greater work to-day with far less money than it would have been possible to have done under the increased appropriation if the plan had proceeded of using the permanent relief stations, as I believe they were called, throughout the various mining States.

Mr. GOULDEN. I am very glad to hear the gentleman's explanation. It is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is one of the reasons why the appropriation is not necessary this year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if he has information as to how much the bureau now owes on the cars that it has purchased. I understand that they have purchased equipment that is not all paid for. Is that true?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not say that it is paid for. I think it is paid for or will be paid for out of the current appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They had no right to buy it without paying for it.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not see how they could buy it without paying for it, but I want to say for the Bureau of Mines that this equipment has been purchased at a very low cost. These cars they purchased from the Pullman Co. in Chicago, and have been equipped, and if gentlemen will take the trouble to read the hearings, the testimony of Mr. Holmes, the chief of the bureau, they will see there exactly the amount paid for the cars and what it cost to equip them, how they are equipped, and everything about it. I know that the cost is very reasonable, and I was impressed with the fact that the price paid by the Government for these cars was comparatively small.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think we are all very much interested in this work, and I want to be very certain that the committee in cutting down the estimates has not cut them so low as to hamper this bureau in its work. It is doing a splendid work, a magnificent work. I think the change from the original plan of permanent stations to that of cars is very helpful and beneficial, very advantageous. These cars are purchased at low cost and they are equipped with rescue apparatus and are stationed at some mining center and moved from one mining camp to another, and the miners and operators are instructed in the use of safety appliances and in the method of the prevention of accidents. The mine operators of my own State are very greatly pleased with the work, and the work of the bureau has led to a very considerable expenditure by the mine operators themselves. I think there has been very much more spent by the operators themselves, through the influence of this bureau, than the bureau has expended.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think it a strange proposition for him to say that he wanted to be assured that the committee had not cut this too much in place of saying he wanted some assurance that they needed this increase?

Mr. MONDELL. I imagined that they had not asked for more than they needed.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Upon that assumption this bill would carry one hundred and fifty-five million. If we are to assume that in all cases anything these bureaus ask for they need, then, indeed, we are not going to be able to meet these expenses. Does not the gentleman think that there should be some showing that they need an increase before we give it to them?

Mr. MONDELL. I have been under the impression they need what they asked for, and I was anxious to know if the committee had gone into that very thoroughly and was sure the bureau would not be crippled.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They had an opportunity to show that they needed an increase and they did not do it.

Mr. MONDELL. That is, they did not do it to the satisfaction of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And all the rest of the members of the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; they do not want any more increase.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to emphasize the value of this work and the splendid way in which it is being carried on and the great benefit it is to the miners of the United States. I hope the committee has given the department all that it needs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has given more than it needs.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word with reference to the Bureau of Mines. This bureau, which has been established now about a year, has, to my mind, started on a great work. They have purchased at a very low price a few cars, which have been fitted especially for the work of going to the mines and instructing the miners and operators in the work of rescuing miners when accidents occur, and the best way to prevent these accidents.

They have established these stations in different places where these cars are located, and when necessary they are taken directly to the mine in order to help rescue those who may be entombed and who have met with these serious accidents. I observe the director of the bureau asked the committee for $360,000. The hearings show this.

This bureau is established not only for the rescue of those who may meet with accidents in mines, but for the prevention of accidents. It has much to do with the saving of life and to prevent the crippling of men. I do not want to see any money thrown away or to give any department more money than is needed, but in this kind of work I believe they should have sufficient money to carry on the operations they have started. [Applause.]

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT] will prevail. The gentleman from Iowa has said, and said correctly, that this bureau is a young bureau, but that it is a vigorous bureau. That is true. It is not yet thoroughly organized according to the statement made by the director himself. If this appropriation of $360,000 is not made, the bureau will be handicapped in completing its organization——

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit me to interrupt him there——

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. This $310,000 appropriation has nothing whatever to do with the organization of the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. No; but it has to do with the work conducted by that organization.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; this is an appropriation that relates to the investigation of the causes of mine disasters.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Exactly.

Mr. TAWNEY. And it is an appropriation from which all the paraphernalia and equipment is purchased for the work of instructing men and mine operatives regarding the use of safety appliances. Now, I just want to add this word. The appropriation was made at $360,000 a year ago by an amendment of $100,000, offered by the gentleman from Montana, upon the theory that it would be necessary to equip these permanent relief stations. Now, since then they have abandoned the policy of permanent relief stations and are pursuing a policy of portable stations in the form of cars, and therefore do not need for this purpose one-half the money that was given to them a year ago for the establishment of permanent relief stations.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. It is true that they have abandoned the idea of permanent relief stations.

Mr. TAWNEY. And therefore need less money.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. They have substituted therefor these cars with the equipment in these cars, and in doing so they have made these stations available for a larger territory and in a quicker time after an accident had occurred than otherwise would have been the case.

But that is only one part of the work of this bureau, the investigation of the causes of mine disasters; and the bureau, from this appropriation, has been conducting experiments and expects to conduct experiments with the dust to be found in the different coal mines when it comes up in the air; with the gases to be found in the mines, and with the introduction of electrical machinery and other matters of that kind; with the introduction of moisture and of shale dust, and other materials that are being experimented upon. They are being experimented on for the purpose of preventing these mine accidents. So far as the experiment in the cars themselves is concerned, that equipment is very useful, and has been found extremely useful when an accident has occurred, in that it enables expert workmen to get on the ground immediately and enter the mine with oxygen helmets and bring relief to the men when the accident has occurred. But the greater value of the bureau is the determining of the causes of these mine disasters so as to prevent them, and the bureau is working along those lines. It has done some very fine work in that direction, and this appropriation ought to be made at $360,000 instead of $310,000 to enable them to continue the work along the line; not merely of rescuing men after accidents have occurred, but to determine the cause, so that these accidents can be prevented in the future. I hope the amendment will prevail. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT].

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 37.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Care and custody of the insane of Alaska: For the care and custody of persons legally adjudged insane in the District of Alaska, including transportation and other expenses, $50,000.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Last year, I remember, we passed a bill in this House, which, I think, became a law, providing for suitable places for taking care of the insane in Alaska. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if anything has been done toward the work of erecting those buildings and taking the proper care of these unfortunate people?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If the gentleman has such information, it has not come to me. This is done under a contract with continental United States. They are brought down here.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Did we not pass a law last year with reference to the insane in Alaska?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I would not like to say we did not, if the gentleman says we did, but I have no recollection of it.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I know we passed such a bill through the House.

Mr. COLE. It did not pass the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. These are brought back here and taken care of under contract with the United States.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. My understanding is that the governor of Alaska kept them in the jail, where they could be taken care of by one set of guards. Has the gentleman any such information.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not deny anything the gentleman suggests, but I have no such information.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] if he has any information in reference to the care of the insane in Alaska?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are very adequately cared for under this appropriation in the United States, and they do not need the asylum in Alaska.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. What is done with them until they are brought to the United States?

Mr. FITZGERALD. As soon as they find them they bring them to the United States.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I do not think the gentleman means that they are brought here immediately. They must be taken care of for awhile there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has expired.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At the time the gentleman from Illinois and some others induced the House to pass this bill to provide an insane asylum or detention asylum, I think it was in Alaska, some very exaggerated statements were made as to the conditions under which the insane were temporarily detained there.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It is a question whether that was exaggerated or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course, it is well known that these places in Alaska are not palaces, but so far as this committee has ever been informed——

Mr. COLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In just a moment.

Mr. COLE. The insane have been humanely cared for.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. They have been kept in jails in Alaska with the prisoners of Alaska.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, well, I have known very estimable gentlemen who have been glad to obtain positions where they have charge of jails and live in jails, and have not found any particular fault as long as their salary was continued. A jail in itself is not an opprobious place, except when a person is compelled to live there against his will.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. That is the case with those people who are insane.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The insane, of course, are detained there, but they are detained in an asylum.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. No; they are detained in a jail.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that the facilities there are as good as could reasonably be expected.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOUSTON. From the nature of the point that the gentleman raises, I take it that the provisions he refers to are those providing buildings for the care of the insane in Alaska which have not been completed yet. They are not in a position, as I understand, to care for them yet. The gentleman knows they are not in a position to care for them.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I understand that nothing has been done. In fact, I understand they have not tried to do anything.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This appropriation is to provide for the care of the insane under a contract with the State of Washington. What the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has been discussing is an appropriation of $25,000, if my recollection is correct, to build a small hospital or asylum where those persons who are found to be insane would be incarcerated until the time came when they could be sent to the United States. While that bill passed the House, I do not believe it passed the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Illinois have five minutes more. I want to make another suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] be allowed five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman's time is extended for five minutes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand the gentleman says that nothing has been done to further the building of this institution. That being the case, some provision must be made to care for those people in the State of Washington, as has been done heretofore.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. My question is, What has been done with those people in Alaska, where we provided for an appropriation of $25,000 to put up a suitable building for them until they could be brought back to the States?

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman does not object to that?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. No. I understand those unfortunate people are still cared for in a jail, just as they have been all the time heretofore.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the measure referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] and by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is a very wise and wholesome one and ought to be carried out.

Mr. COLE. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes; I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COLE. This matter was before the Committee on Territories, of which the gentleman from Tennessee is a member, and of which also is the gentleman from Illinois a member. My recollection is that most of these unfortunate people in Alaska lost their mental faculties because they were in Alaska. We did not think it proper to retain them there, in the same climate that was responsible for their mental condition, and therefore we thought it best to bring them back to some institution in the States.

My recollection is—and it is just a little dim at the present time—that they are cared for in an institution in Portland, Oreg., which is conducted by an eminent doctor by the name of Coe, and my information is that it is one of the best institutions of its kind in the United States. My recollection is, further, that we were opposed at that time to the establishment of an insane hospital in Alaska for the reason that the climate there was not a proper climate for people afflicted in that way.

Mr. HOUSTON. We were in favor of establishing those hospitals, and they were established so far as the action of this House was concerned—that is, the House passed the measure but the Senate——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I was perfectly willing that the gentleman from Ohio should make this statement, but there is nothing pending before the committee at all now.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I asked to strike out the last word, and I still have the floor on that proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No. The gentleman has not got the floor. There is nothing now pending.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I yield to my friend from New York [Mr. GOULDEN].

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to get ahead with this bill. There is nothing before the committee.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] whether that appropriation of $25,000 which passed the House last year became a law?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I understand it did.

Mr. GOULDEN. I understand it did not. I understand the purpose of it was for a detention hospital, and the evidence produced before the committee of this House was certainly sufficient to justify the erection of such a detention hospital.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is proceeding.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The time has long since been exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is mistaken. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] was extended five minutes, by unanimous consent, a few moments ago.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Has not that five minutes yet expired?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I was sure it had expired.

The CHAIRMAN. It will not expire while the time of the gentleman from Illinois is taken with other matters.

Mr. GOULDEN. If the gentleman will permit me just a moment further, my impression is that that bill failed to become a law; but I heartily agree that a detention hospital in the District of Alaska is necessary if the evidence produced before this committee was true.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I think the gentleman is entirely correct.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Education in Alaska: To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion and under his direction, to provide for the education and support of the Eskimos, Aleuts, Indians, and other natives of Alaska; for erection, repair, and rental of school buildings; for textbooks and industrial apparatus; for pay and necessary traveling expenses of general agent, assistant agent, superintendents, teachers, physicians, and other employees, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses which are not included under the above special heads, $200,000; so much of which sum as may be necessary for the purchase of supplies shall be immediately available: Provided, That no person employed hereunder as special agent or inspector, or to perform any special or unusual duty in connection herewith, shall receive as compensation exceeding $200 per month, in addition to actual traveling expenses and per diem not exceeding $4 in lieu of subsistence, when absent on duty from his designated and actual post of duty: Provided, That of the sum hereby appropriated not exceeding $7,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, what personal services are here referred to, under this appropriation of $7,000, which may be expended for that purpose in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Personal services in connection with matters in Alaska; for instance, the employment of teachers, and the like.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is all done here?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. All done here.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yosemite National Park, Cal.: For protection and improvement of the Yosemite National Park and the construction and repair of bridges, fences, and trails, and improvement of roads other than toll roads, $50,000.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 152, line 17, insert after the word "dollars" the words "to be immediately available."

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I trust the chairman of the committee will not object to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The object of this amendment is to make this money available earlier in the season. The season in Yosemite Park commences about the 1st of May, and the working season runs from about that time until some time in October. Work on the roads and in the park can be done to much better advantage early in the year than later, and if the appropriation is not available until the 1st of July the work runs so late that some of it has to be carried over, and so the work is divided.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is with great pleasure that I assure the gentleman that if that is true this year, it was true last year, and they must have a lot of money left over from last year's appropriation to spend this spring.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Oh, they have not.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They must have, from the gentleman's assurance that the money can not be spent for work between July and October.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. That is why we want to get the work started, so that it can be going on, and so that the money can be expended in work to be done by the first of November.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. One of two things is true. Either they have plenty of money from last year's appropriation or else the gentleman is mistaken in saying that it can not be spent after the first of July.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Will you advise me how much they have on hand now?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not advise the gentleman, but I know that one of two things is true. Either the gentleman is in error in saying that they can not utilize the money between the first of July and the closing of the season, or else they have money left over, because they had as much money last year as they have this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They had $12,000 more last year than this.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. A good deal of this work will be done by contract, and if the whole thing is made available now, they can make contracts to better advantage.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has anyone in the department made the request that this money shall be made immediately available?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. No; but I have some information about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mount Rainier National Park, Wash.: For protection and improvement of Mount Rainier National Park, construction of bridges, fences, and trails, and improvement of roads, $3,000.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 8, page 154, insert "Wind Cave National Park, S. Dak.: For the improvement and protection of the Wind Cave National Park, $2,500."

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the Wind Cave National Park was created by an act of Congress in 1903 on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior calling attention to that great natural wonder and on a bill prepared in the Department of the Interior. The sum of $2,500 has been appropriated every year since for the maintenance and development of the cave and park. The same amount was carried in the estimates this year, but a clerk from the Interior Department seems to have been before the subcommittee on the subject of parks and in one sentence at the bottom of page 403 of the hearings testified before that committee that the Secretary of the Interior had recommended that the Wind Cave National Park and the Sullys Hill National Park, and the Platt National Park, of Oklahoma, should be ceded to the various States in which they are situated. He proceeds to give no testimony whatever on the Wind Cave National Park, but does give an account of a trip he made to Sullys Hill, in whatever State it may be situated—I have no knowledge—and recounts his difficulty in finding that park, and says it has no practical utility. He then proceeds to a somewhat similar discussion on the Platt National Park, of Oklahoma. The committee appears to have dropped out all three of the parks without any testimony of any value upon the Wind Cave National Park—none whatever except what I have referred to.

It certainly would be a mistake not to continue the appropriation for this park. It is situated in Custer County, S. Dak.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. How do you get to the Wind Cave National Park?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Easiest thing in the world. If there is any impression such as the gentleman's question implies——

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Not at all. I wanted to know how to get there.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It is situated 10 miles immediately north of Hot Springs, S. Dak. Hot Springs is on two great trunk lines, the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy. The park is reached by automobile lines every day. Hot Springs is where the national sanitarium for the national home is situated and where the State Soldiers' Home of South Dakota is situated. Wind Cave is within 40 or 45 minutes' run over a good road by automobile.

It was visited, as the returns showed, by 3,400 people last year.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. What are the particular natural beauties that make it so wonderful?

Mr. ADAMSON. Hot air! [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentlemen here seem to have some merriment over a subject that has attracted the interest of sight-seers and those interested in great natural phenomena for many years.

Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the late hour, I propose to call the attention of the committee to this curiosity. It is probably the largest known cavern in the world. It is supposed to be what has been left from the extinct geyser similar to those found in the Yellowstone National Park. A series of chambers extending over many miles with narrow passages between, and the expenditures by the Government for improvement have been mostly in making openings from one cavern to another. It has reserved 10,000 acres of the surrounding country for a park on the theory that the cave being so extensive it might be penetrated by private enterprise if the park was of a smaller area. I may say before the Government took over this natural curiosity speculators were making large incomes by charging $1 admission to this cavern on public land, and by taking out some of the most beautiful specimens and selling them. It was with a view of preserving its natural beauties in these large chambers and making it accessible to the people of the entire country that the Government reserved the area as a park.

[The time of Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota having expired, by unanimous consent he was granted five minutes more.]

I want the committee to clearly understand that whatever criticism has come upon this park in this proceeding has been because of the grouping of it with these apparently needless parks referred to in the bill. It is upon an entirely different basis, and I will call the attention of the committee to the first official utterance upon the subject in the record. This is in the statement of the Secretary of the Interior in his report of 1900:

> The attention of the department was directed to what is known as the Wind Cave, in South Dakota, the entrance to which is in sec. 1, T. 6 S., R. 5 E., Black Hills meridian, about 12 miles southeast of the town of Custer, as being a cavern of considerable size and possessing wonders of such surpassing interest as that it should be set apart as a park or pleasuring ground for the people. An investigation of the cave was accordingly made by two geologists of the Geological Survey, and from their report, which is set forth more fully in the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, it appears that the cave is of large dimensions, of great interest and beauty, having many miles of galleries branching and reticulating along the joined planes of carbonaceous limestone, and numerous chambers with stalactitic and stalagmitic formations. Owing to the existence of a number of unperfected entries covering lands around the mouth of the cave, it would not be advisable at this time to have the same set apart as a national park. With a view, however, to future action by Congress in the premises, a temporary withdrawal has been made of the necessary lands subject to any and all valid rights acquired by virtue of existing entries.
> The report of the Geological Survey referred to by the Secretary is here submitted:
> "The Wind Cave was visited by two of the geologists of this survey in 1898, who spent several hours in examining its principal points. The cave is of great extent, having many miles of galleries branching and reticulating along the joint planes of the carboniferous limestone. There are numerous chambers of considerable size. There are the usual stalactitic and stalagmitic formations, some of very notable beauty, and much unique 'box work' of thin intersecting veins of carbonate of lime projecting from the walls and ceilings. Altogether the cave is regarded as one of great interest and beauty. It attracts a large number of visitors—over 1,000, it is said, in the summer of 1899. A fee of $1 is charged for admission to and guidance through the cave. This service appears to have been satisfactory.
> "It is the opinion of this office that the cave is of sufficient extent and importance to be reserved as a national park."

On June 10, 1902, the honorable Secretary of the Interior addressed a communication to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate and House of Representatives, as follows:

> DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
> Washington, June 10, 1902.
> SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter of the 6th instant from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the department, with its inclosures, among which is a draft of a proposed bill, prepared in his office on my direction, to set aside certain lands in South Dakota as a public park, to be known as Wind Cave National Park, which contains caverns, chambers, and natural formations of extreme beauty and of most wonderful character.
>
> The letter of the commissioner sets forth the extreme desirability of the creation of the park and of its preservation from spoliation, and he has recommended therein that every effort be made to secure favorable action on the bill during the present session of the Congress.
>
> I concur in the views of the commissioner, and recommend that the bill be enacted into law at the earliest possible date.
>
> I have addressed a like communication to the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, House of Representatives.
>
> Very respectfully, E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

This bill became a law in January, 1903.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The gentleman's amendment provides for $2,500.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I simply restore the item that is carried every year.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Will the gentleman tell me how much of that is used for salaries of persons to look after this cave?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Nine hundred dollars per year is used for the superintendent of the cave.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. How much for other salaries?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. No other salaries whatever.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. What is the balance used for?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The balance of the estimate for this year is $700 for the building of a barn for the superintendent's horses and other animals.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Why does he need a horse in a cave? [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. He does not keep his horse in the cave.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I speak seriously, and what I am getting at is how much is needed to keep the natural beauty of the place and how much for the superintendent and the horses and the barns, and so on.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Nine hundred dollars per year is used for the superintendent's salary, and the balance is used for the further exploration and opening up of new caverns, for the building and protecting of roads, and the maintenance of buildings on the place. There is a public stopping place at the mouth of the cave, a house over the entrance way, then there is a superintendent's house, and some thousand or two acres under fences, and all that is maintained from year to year.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Do I understand the superintendent receives $900, and has a house and a barn and horses to run that cave with? Is that the cost?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It is the smallest appropriation I believe that is carried for the maintenance of any national park.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Does this cave produce anything else but wind? [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It produces something of interest to the public, that is all. I may say, Mr. Chairman, the record as put in here from the Interior Department shows that 3,400 visitors registered at that place during the past year. Of course that is not a large number of visitors in comparison with the Yellowstone Park or the Yosemite, but still if you consider that everyone who goes there comes from some distance to witness this natural curiosity, and the fact that the season when it is mostly visited is not to exceed six months of the year, it means 20 people every day for the season, Sundays included. Before the Government made it a national park its beauties were being despoiled, and as I say, when it became a national park it was by virtue of the action of the department itself in transmitting to this House in June, 1902, a bill prepared by the department, and asking its passage.

Now, something ought to be done to continue the preservation of this natural curiosity. No proposition has been worked out to cede this land to the State. If it were to be closed, it would be again despoiled as it was before.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has again expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota) there were—ayes 20, noes 38.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Three gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> After line 8, on page 154, insert the following paragraph:
> "Platt National Park: For maintenance and protection of Platt National Park, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $5,000."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, my amendment should be adopted. It is right. It is but common justice. The fate of my predecessor does not afford me any flowery beds of ease or allow my hopes to reach any great proportions, but the facts, gentlemen, tersely stated, are these: In 1902 the Government of the United States purchased 640 acres of land from the Choctaws and Chickasaws, a portion of which was at that time covered by the beautiful city of Sulphur. They converted that into a national park, erected bridges and piped the streams, and erected bathhouses and beautified the springs, and beautified scenery there. The springs are bromide and sulphur and have great mineral properties in them beyond all question. It is the only park within our State. The land was paid for by the Government. Later on in 1904 the Government purchased 208 acres more, paying $60 an acre for that, annexing it to the park. They have removed brick buildings and hotels and other buildings and forced men to abandon their homes and forced families to be ejected from the land condemned and ousted them in order to create this park. The park is very much sought after by both the Indians and white people of our State, and it does not cost but a very small amount to maintain the park. The Government has paid a large amount for it, and the people of the State are not able to maintain it and appropriate for it while the State is new.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this a very valuable park?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; it is. I am proud of it. It means much to our State. The water has great mineral properties and there can be no doubt about it. It is naturally a beautiful spot. It should be appropriated for. My amendment should be adopted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Can the gentleman estimate its value?

Mr. FERRIS. We can but partially judge by what the Government paid for it, for it has great mineral properties in the water. The acreage value is but a small part of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What did the Government pay?

Mr. FERRIS. The Government paid $20 an acre for the first 640 acres in its wild state, and for the last 208 they paid $60 an acre, and they removed brick buildings and one very large hotel I have in mind and numerous residences. They had to pay for them also.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman remembers last session the committee reported a provision donating this park to your State.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And you did not want to take it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And you declined to accept it.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman speaks the entire truth about that. My State has been admitted for four years, and any new State has many hardships to undergo and has many burdens to bear, but for the Government to come and crowd these people out of their homes and take this land away from them and create a national park I think it is hardly well taken or generous or liberal or even bordering on justice for the United States Government to come and say, while the State is new and struggling and trying to get a start, "We will dump this expense upon Oklahoma."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Was not there a solemn contract with the Indians at the time the park was created?

Mr. FERRIS. Now, I was going to speak of that. I know the kind of provision the gentleman is referring to, but by three or four distinct positive legislative enactments the United States Government has completely taken full jurisdiction of the park, which, in effect, fully repeals the provision of recession to the State.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It always had jurisdiction of the park.

Mr. FERRIS. And in the enabling act it is expressly stated, in regard to the question of jurisdiction, that no ownership and jurisdiction shall remain in the State. They then waived their right to recede this park to the State.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. We do not deny we have jurisdiction if we want to hold it, but did not we make a treaty with the Indians by which we created this park, and was it not provided in that treaty that upon the organization of the State government that this park should be ceded to the State?

Mr. FERRIS. You did not make any treaty at all. You passed an act of Congress with a proviso on the end of it reciting approximately what the gentleman says, and in three distinct enactments since that time you have overturned that and repealed it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Not at all.

Mr. FERRIS. And so what the gentleman from Iowa says is absolutely of no consequence. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to be disrespectful; I do not mean to treat the gentleman's statement lightly; but I hold in my hand the three acts which absolutely repeal the act the gentleman relies upon.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman will pardon me.

Mr. FERRIS. While I may have been extravagant in my statement about the gentleman's remarks, I feel sure I was in all things correct in what I stated.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I have the acts, and I do not agree with him as to repealing the acts at all.

Mr. FERRIS. If I had the time I could present them; I will present them later so the House can ascertain that I am correct.

It is contended by the gentleman from Iowa and, in fact, the whole Committee on Appropriations, that the original grant makes a recession of the park imperative.

I deny it, and submit to you the law on the subject that conclusively shows that while the original grant makes such reference of recession to the State upon admission into the Union, still the following acts of Congress, which I am submitting here at length, conclusively show complete repeal of that provision:

LAWS AND REGULATIONS RELATING TO PLATT NATIONAL PARK, OKLA.

[Extract from act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 641, 655).]

An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the following agreement, made by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes with the commissions representing the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians on the 21st day of March, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, ratified and confirmed, to wit:

* * * * * * *

64. The two tribes hereby absolutely and unqualifiedly relinquish, cede, and convey unto the United States a tract or tracts of land at and in the vicinity of the village of Sulphur, in the Chickasaw Nation, of not exceeding 640 acres, to be selected, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, within four months after the final ratification of this agreement, and to embrace all the natural springs in and about said village and so much of Sulphur Creek, Rock Creek, Buckhorn Creek, and the lands adjacent to said natural springs and creeks as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior for the proper utilization and control of said springs and the waters of said creeks, which lands shall be so selected as to cause the least interference with the contemplated town site at that place consistent with the purposes for which said cession is made, and when selected the ceded lands shall be held, owned, and controlled by the United States absolutely and without any restriction, save that no part thereof shall be platted or disposed of for town-site purposes during the existence of the two tribal governments. Such other lands as may be embraced in a town site at that point shall be disposed of in the manner provided in the Atoka agreement for the disposition of town sites. Within 90 days after the selection of the lands so ceded there shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the two tribes, from the unappropriated public moneys of the United States $20 per acre for each acre so selected, which shall be in full compensation for the lands so ceded, and such moneys shall, upon the dissolution of the tribal governments, be divided per capita among the members of the tribes, freedmen excepted, as are other funds of the tribes. All improvements upon the lands so selected which were lawfully there at the time of the ratification of this agreement by Congress shall be appraised, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, at the true value thereof at the time of the selection of said lands, and shall be paid for by warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Interior upon the Treasurer of the United States. Until otherwise provided by law the Secretary of the Interior may, under rules prescribed for that purpose, regulate and control the use of the water of said springs and creeks and the temporary use and occupation of the lands so ceded. No person shall occupy any portion of the lands so ceded, or carry on any business thereon, except as provided in said rules, and until otherwise provided by Congress the laws of the United States relating to the introduction, possession, sale, and giving away of liquors or intoxicants of any kind within the Indian country or Indian reservations shall be applicable to the lands so ceded [see section 2139 U. S. Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of July 23, 1892 (27 Stat. L., 260), and the act of January 30, 1897 (27 Stat. L., 506), in relation to introduction and sale of liquors in the Indian country. See also act of May 2, 1890 (26 Stat. L., 81, 97), and section 8 of act of March 1, 1895 (28 Stat. L., 693)], and said lands shall remain within the jurisdiction of the United States court for the southern district of Indian Territory: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed or held to commit the Government of the United States to any expenditure of money upon said lands or the improvements thereof, except as provided herein, it being the intention of this provision that in the future the lands and improvements herein mentioned shall be conveyed by the United States to such territorial or State organization as may exist at the time when such conveyance is made.

[Extract from the Indian Department appropriation act of April 21, 1904 (33 Stat., 220).]

SEC. 18. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to withhold from sale or other disposition the irregular tract of land containing seventy-eight and sixty-eight one-hundredths acres, more or less, lying in the northwest quarter of section 2 and the northeast quarter of section 3, township 1 south, range 3 east, and being within the exterior boundaries of the proposed town site of Sulphur, in the Chickasaw Nation, Indian Territory, and excluded from said town site by order of the Secretary of the Interior, of October 20, 1903, and also to withdraw and withhold from disposition the tract of land within the exterior boundaries of said proposed town site, lying south of and adjacent to the tract above mentioned, containing in the aggregate 138 acres, more or less, and mentioned in the report of Gerard H. Matthes, of December 27, 1903, to F. H. Newell, Chief Engineer United States Geological Survey, and shown upon the map accompanying said report by a yellow line.

The land hereby reserved shall be paid for by the United States at the rate of $60 per acre and in the same manner as the land acquired in accordance with paragraph 64 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, and for other purposes," and such money as may be necessary to carry out this provision is hereby appropriated, from any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and made immediately available.

All improvements upon said land, at the passage of this act, shall be appraised and paid for as provided in said paragraph 64 of the act of July 1, 1902.

The land hereby reserved shall, immediately upon payment therefor by the United States, be and become a part of the reservation heretofore established at the said village of Sulphur, and shall be subject to all the provisions of said section 64 of the act of July 1, 1902, respecting the care, control, direction, use, and occupancy thereof, as if they had been included in the original segregation: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in the absence of other provisions for the care and management thereof, to designate an officer or employee of his department to take charge of the land, whether acquired under said section 64 of the act of July 1, 1902, or under this act, and to enforce rules and regulations for the control and use thereof, and of the waters of the springs and creeks within the reservation: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sell or dispose of any buildings upon the land hereby reserved and upon the land originally reserved, and all money received from such sales, as well as all money heretofore received or that may hereafter be realized for the use of said waters or for the use and occupancy of the land or the buildings thereon, through leases, permits, or otherwise, may be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the care and management of said lands and the preservation of the improvements thereon: And provided further, That if any person, firm, or corporation shall willfully violate any of the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior relative to the use of the waters of said springs and creeks and the use and occupation of the lands in said reservation, such person, firm, corporation, or members or agents therof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not less than $5 and not more than $100, and may be imprisoned for a term of not more than six months for each offense.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to appraise, at their actual value at the time of such appraisement, all town lots held by citizens of the United States within the limits of the tract of land ceded to the United States by the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, at or near Sulphur Springs, in the Chickasaw Nation, Ind. T., and pay for the same to such lot holders severally, or to their legal representatives, the appraised value of such lots by warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Interior upon the Treasurer of the United States; and the amount necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The foregoing appraisal of lots shall be completed within three months from the passage of this act.

An act to enable the people of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory to form a constitution and State government, etc.

SALE, ETC., OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

SEC. 3. (The above provision was incorporated into the State constitution of Oklahoma, adopted July 16, 1907, as art. 1, sec. 7.) * * * And said convention shall provide in said constitution— * * * Second. That the manufacture, sale, barter, giving away, or otherwise furnishing, except as hereinafter provided, of intoxicating liquors within those parts of said State now known as the Indian Territory and the Osage Indian Reservation and within any other parts of said State which existed as Indian reservations on the 1st day of January, 1906, is prohibited for a period of 21 years from the date of the admission of said State into the Union, and thereafter until the people of said State shall otherwise provide by amendment of said constitution and proper State legislation. Any person, individual or corporate, who shall manufacture, sell, barter, give away, or otherwise furnish any intoxicating liquor of any kind, including beer, ale, and wine, contrary to the provisions of this section, or who shall, within the above-described portions of said State, advertise for sale or solicit the purchase of any such liquors, or who shall ship or in any way convey such liquors from other parts of said State into the portions hereinbefore described, shall be punished, on conviction thereof, by fine not less than $50 and by imprisonment not less than 30 days for each offense: Provided, That the legislature may provide by law for one agency under the supervision of said State in each incorporated town of not less than 2,000 population in the portions of said State hereinbefore described; and if there be no incorporated town of 2,000 population in any county in said portions of said State, such county shall be entitled to have one such agency, for the sale of such liquors for medicinal purposes; and for the sale, for industrial purposes, of alcohol which shall have been denaturized by some process approved by the United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and for the sale of alcohol for scientific purposes to such scientific institutions, universities, and colleges as are authorized to procure the same free of tax under the laws of the United States; and for the sale of such liquors to any apothecary who shall have executed an approved bond, in a sum not less than $1,000, conditioned that none of such liquors shall be used or disposed of for any purpose other than in the compounding of prescriptions or other medicines, the sale of which would not subject him to the payment of the special tax required of liquor dealers by the United States, and the payment of such special tax by any person within the parts of said State hereinabove defined shall constitute prima facie evidence of his intention to violate the provisions of this section. No sale shall be made except upon the sworn statement of the applicant in writing setting forth the purpose for which the liquor is to be used, and no sale shall be made for medicinal purposes except sale to apothecaries as hereinabove provided unless such statement shall be accompanied by a bona fide prescription signed by a regular practicing physician, which prescription shall not be filled more than once. Each sale shall be duly registered, and the register thereof, together with the affidavits and prescriptions pertaining thereto, shall be open to inspection by any officer or citizen of said State at all times during business hours. Any person who shall knowingly make a false affidavit for the purpose aforesaid shall be deemed guilty of perjury. Any physician who shall prescribe any such liquor, except for treatment of disease which after his own personal diagnosis he shall deem to require such treatment, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished for each offense by fine of not less than $200 or by imprisonment for not less than 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and any person connected with any such agency who shall be convicted of making any sale or other disposition of liquor contrary to these provisions shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than one year and one day. Upon the admission of said State into the Union these provisions shall be immediately enforceable in the courts of said State.

RETENTION OF FEDERAL JURISDICTION.

SEC. 7. (The above provision was substantially covered by the State constitution of Oklahoma, adopted July 16, 1907, as art. 1, sec. 3.) * * * Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall repeal or affect any act of Congress relating to the Sulphur Springs Reservation as now defined or as may be hereafter defined or extended, or the power of the United States over it or any other lands embraced in the State hereafter set aside by Congress as a national park, game preserve, or for the preservation of objects of archaeological or ethnological interest; and nothing contained in this act shall interfere with the rights and ownership of the United States in any land hereafter set aside by Congress as national park, game preserve, or other reservation, or in the said Sulphur Springs Reservation, as it now is or may be hereafter defined or extended by law; but exclusive legislation, in all cases whatsoever, shall be exercised by the United States, which shall have exclusive control and jurisdiction over the same; but nothing in this proviso contained shall be construed to prevent the service within said Sulphur Springs Reservation or national parks, game preserves, and other reservations hereafter established by law, of civil and criminal processes lawfully issued by the authority of said State, and said State shall not be entitled to select indemnity school lands for the thirteenth, sixteenth, thirty-third, and thirty-sixth sections that may be embraced within the metes and bounds of the national park, game preserve, and other reservation or the said Sulphur Springs Reservation, as now defined or may be hereafter defined.

LAWS OF TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA EXTENDED OVER STATE.

SEC. 13. (The above provision was substantially covered by the State constitution of Oklahoma, adopted July 16, 1907, as art. 24, sec. 2, under the head of Schedule.) * * * and that the laws in force in the Territory of Oklahoma, as far as applicable, shall extend over and apply to said State until changed by the legislature thereof.

[Joint resolution of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., 837).]

Joint resolution directing that the Sulphur Springs Reservation be named and hereafter called the "Platt National Park."

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to change the name of the Sulphur Springs Reservation, an Indian reservation now in the State of Oklahoma, formerly in the Indian Territory, so that said reservation shall be named and hereafter called the "Platt National Park," in honor of Orville Hitchcock Platt, late and for 26 years a Senator from the State of Connecticut and for many years a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, in recognition of his distinguished services to the Indians and to the country.

RULES AND REGULATIONS.

[Regulations of June 10, 1908.]

Pursuant to the authority conferred by the acts of Congress approved July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 656), April 21, 1904 (33 Stat., 220), and the Oklahoma statehood act of June 16, 1906 (34 Stat., 272), the following rules and regulations for the government of the Platt National Park (formerly Sulphur Springs Reservation), in Oklahoma, are hereby established and made public:

1. It is forbidden to injure in any manner any of the springs, mineral deposits, or natural features within the park.

2. It is forbidden to cut or injure any timber or plants growing on the park lands or to deface or injure any Government property.

3. No camping shall be permitted within 1,000 feet of any spring, nor upon any land except such as may be specifically designated for that purpose by the superintendent. Fires shall not be lighted except by the express permission of the superintendent; when so allowed, campers shall use only dead or fallen timber for fuel, and the utmost care must be exercised at all times to avoid setting fire to the timber and grass.

4. It is forbidden for any person to deposit garbage or refuse upon the park lands, except at places designated for that purpose by the superintendent, or to contaminate any of the springs or streams therein, or to divert or conduct the waters of such springs or streams from the natural or regular course.

5. No person shall remove from any of the bromide, iron, or soda springs more than 1 gallon of water in any one day, nor remove from any of the other springs more than 5 gallons in any one day, nor shall any water be taken therefrom for commercial purposes, except in pursuance of a license issued by the Secretary of the Interior. Whenever in his judgment the circumstances warrant, the superintendent may prohibit the use of the waters of any of the springs in the park other than for immediate drinking purposes at such springs, the facts in such case to be reported to the Secretary of the Interior.

6. Hunting or killing, wounding or capturing any bird or wild animal on the park lands, except dangerous animals when necessary to prevent them from destroying life or inflicting an injury, is prohibited. The outfits, including guns, traps, teams, horses, or means of transportation used by persons engaged in hunting, killing, trapping, ensnaring, or capturing such birds or wild animals, or in possession of game killed on the park lands under other circumstances than prescribed above, will be taken up by the superintendent and held subject to the order of the Secretary of the Interior, except in cases where it is shown by satisfactory evidence that the outfit is not the property of the person or persons violating this regulation and the actual owner thereof was not a party to such violation. Firearms will only be permitted in the park on written permission from the superintendent thereof.

7. Fishing with nets, seines, traps, or by the use of drugs or explosives, or in any other way than with hook and line, is prohibited. Fishing for purposes of merchandise or profit is forbidden. Fishing may be prohibited by order of the superintendent in any of the waters of the park, or limited therein to any specified season of the year, until otherwise ordered by the Secretary of the Interior.

8. No person will be permitted to reside permanently, engage in any business, or erect buildings or other improvements in the park without permission, in writing, from the Secretary of the Interior.

9. The herding, grazing, or otherwise trespassing of cattle or loose stock of any kind within the park is strictly forbidden. Stock or cattle may be driven across the park, but must be confined to the roads and kept in motion under competent care while in the reservation.

10. No vehicles will be permitted to travel through the park except upon the roads designated for such traffic by the superintendent, and driving or riding over roads or bridges at a high rate of speed is prohibited.

11. Private notices or advertisements shall not be posted or displayed within the park, except such as may be necessary for the convenience and guidance of the public.

12. The sale of intoxicating liquors in the park is strictly forbidden.

13. No gambling or game of chance shall be permitted within the limits of the park; nor shall any person use profane or obscene language, commit or maintain a nuisance, or be guilty of disorderly conduct or any act involving immorality therein.

14. Persons who render themselves obnoxious by disorderly conduct or bad behavior, or who violate any of the foregoing rules, will be summarily removed from the park and will not be allowed to return without permission, in writing, from the Secretary of the Interior or the superintendent of the park.

No lessee or licensee shall retain in his employ any person whose presence in the park shall be deemed and declared by the superintendent to be subversive of the good order and management of the reservation.

15. Any person who violates any of the foregoing regulations will be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be subjected to a fine, as provided by the act of April 21, 1904, of not less than $5 nor more than $100 and may be imprisoned for a term of not more than six months for each offense.

GENERAL LEGISLATION.

[Sec. 5391, Rev. Stats., U. S.]

PROSECUTIONS UNDER STATE LAWS WHERE NO FEDERAL LAWS ARE APPLICABLE.

If any offense be committed in any place which has been or may hereafter be, ceded to and under the jurisdiction of the United States, which offense is not prohibited, or the punishment thereof is not specially provided for by any law of the United States, such offense shall be liable to and receive the same punishment as the laws of the State in which such place is situated, now in force, provide for the like offense when committed within the jurisdiction of such State; and no subsequent repeal of any such State law shall affect any prosecution for such offense in any court of the United States.

[Act of July 7, 1898 (30 Stat., 717).]

An act to protect the harbor defenses and fortifications constructed or used by the United States from malicious injury, and for other purposes.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 2. That when any offense is committed in any place, jurisdiction over which has been retained by the United States or ceded to it by a State, or which has been purchased with the consent of a State for the erection of a fort, magazine, arsenal, dockyard, or other needful building or structure, the punishment for which offense is not provided for by any law of the United States, the person committing such offense shall, upon conviction in a circuit or district court of the United States for the district in which the offense was committed, be liable to and receive the same punishment as the laws of the State in which such place is situated now provide for the like offense when committed within the jurisdiction of such State, and the said courts are hereby vested with jurisdiction for such purpose; and no subsequent repeal of any such State law shall affect any such prosecution.

[Act of Mar. 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 481).]

CUTTING TIMBER ON RESERVED LANDS, DESTROYING FENCES, ETC.

Be it enacted, etc., That if any person or persons shall knowingly and unlawfully cut, or shall knowingly aid, assist, or be employed in unlawfully cutting, or shall wantonly destroy or injure, or procure to be wantonly destroyed or injured, any timber-tree or any shade or ornamental tree, or any other kind of tree, standing, growing, or being upon any lands of the United States, which, in pursuance of law, have been reserved, or which have been purchased by the United States for any public use, every such person or persons so offending, on conviction thereof before any circuit or district court of the United States, shall, for every such offense, pay a fine not exceeding $500, or shall be imprisoned not exceeding 12 months.

SEC. 2. That if any person or persons shall knowingly and unlawfully break or destroy any fence, wall, hedge, or gate inclosing any lands of the United States, which have, in purusance of any law, been reserved or purchased by the United States for any public use, every such person so offending, on conviction, shall, for every such offense, pay a fine not exceeding $200, or be imprisoned not exceeding six months.

SEC. 3. That if any person or persons shall knowingly and unlawfully break, open, or destroy any gate, fence, hedge, or wall inclosing any lands of the United States, reserved or purchased as aforesaid, and shall drive any cattle, horses, or hogs upon the lands aforesaid, for the purpose of destroying the grass or trees on the said grounds, or where they may destroy the said grass or trees, or if any such person or persons shall knowingly permit his or their cattle, horses, or hogs to enter through any of said inclosures upon the lands of the United States aforesaid, where the said cattle, horses, or hogs may or can destroy the grass or trees or other property of the United States on the said land, every such person or persons so offending, on conviction, shall pay a fine not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned not exceeding 12 months.

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to unsurveyed public lands and to public lands subject to preemption and homestead laws, or to public lands subject to an act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States, approved May 10, 1872.

[Act of June 3, 1878 (20 Stat., 89), as amended by sec. 2 of the act of Aug. 4, 1892 (27 Stat., 348).]

CUTTING TIMBER ON LANDS OF THE UNITED STATES.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 4. After the passage of this act it shall be unlawful to cut, or cause or procure to be cut, or wantonly destroy, any timber growing on any lands of the United States in public-land States, or remove, or cause to be removed, any timber from said public lands with intent to export or dispose of the same; and no owner, master, or consignee of any vessel, or owner, director, or agent of any railroad, shall knowingly transport the same, or any lumber manufactured therefrom; and any person violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be fined for every such offense a sum not less than $100 nor more than $1,000.

I beg to refer you to a recent resolution by the Sulphur Chamber of Commerce, which states quite succinctly the present status of this park. This beautiful young city is deeply interested in this park. Investments have been made on the strength of this Government park and the Government feigns great generosity in tendering this park to the State. The letter follows:

SULPHUR CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND THIRTY THOUSAND CLUB—PLATT NATIONAL PARK—THE GREATEST ALL-THE-YEAR-ROUND HEALTH AND PLEASURE RESORT IN THE SOUTHWEST—SULPHUR, OKLA.

At a mass meeting of the citizens of Sulphur, Okla., held on January 25, 1911, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas the honorable Secretary of the Interior, in his last annual report, has stated that Platt National Park, at Sulphur, Okla., is not of sufficient national importance to be maintained by the Government; and

Whereas we do not believe that this report would have been made had he known of the true conditions of the said park and the treaty by which it was acquired by the Government: Therefore be it

Resolved first, That the park was acquired by the Government by treaty with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians with the provisions that it be kept and maintained as a national park and reservation, for the free use of all the people forever, and that to abandon it now by the Government would be in violation of that treaty, and the land, valuable as it is, would revert to the said nations, and they would dispose of it as other unallotted lands, thereby destroying its usefulness as a health and pleasure resort and a greater loss to the sick and afflicted who come here to be benefited.

Resolved second, That one of the chief considerations that caused the people of Sulphur residing on the land taken by the park at the time it was segregated to give up their holdings there was that it should be kept by the National Government for all time as a health and pleasure resort "free for all people for all time," and to abandon it now by the Government would be in violation of that agreement and work a great wrong on them.

Resolved third, That the said park was named for the late Senator Orville H. Platt, of Connecticut, to commemorate his memory and his liberal ideas of conservation, and for the Government now to abandon it would be like destroying a monument erected to his memory and show great ingratitude for his long and useful service to his country.

Resolved fourth, That we furnish a copy of this preamble and these resolutions to each of the United States Senators and Members in Congress and urge them, on behalf of all that has been stated herein, and in behalf of the thousands of sick and afflicted people who visit this park to drink of the waters and enjoy its health-giving climate, to not allow Platt National Park to pass from the control and management of the United States Government.

The hostility of the Committee on Appropriations is not borne out by the letters from the Interior Department for the years 1909 and 1910, respectively:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, October 21, 1909.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In further reply to your letter complaining of the insanitary conditions in Platt National Park, it will be seen from the accompanying report of the superintendent of the park, to whom the matter was referred, that the condition complained of is principally due to the fact that the sewerage, etc., from the municipality of Sulphur drains into the reservation. The only remedy for the present condition of affairs is the construction of a sanitary sewer, and the work on this can not be inaugurated until Congress shall have made an appropriation therefor. The present unexpended balance of revenues for this park is only sufficient to provide for the administration therein, without making any improvements whatever until June 30, 1910. An estimate in the sum of $25,000 for administration in this reservation and the construction of a sanitary sewer system has been forwarded to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to Congress.

Very respectfully, FRANK PIERCE, Acting Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 28, 1910.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Your letter has been received inquiring as to the appropriations to be made for the Platt National Park during the next fiscal year.

In response thereto I have to state that in the estimates of appropriations for the service of the Government during the year ending June 30, 1911, H. Doc. 177, Sixty-first Congress, second session, an estimate in the sum of $25,000 was submitted by this department for the protection and improvement of Platt National Park, including the construction of a sewer in that reservation.

The revenues from this reservation, which are now used in the administration and improvement of the park, will be exhausted by June 30, 1910, and unless an appropriation is made by Congress for the administration of this park after the 1st of July the department will be compelled to dispense with the services of the superintendent and all the employees connected therewith.

Very respectfully, R. A. BALLINGER, Secretary.

I beg to call your attention to a letter from the superintendent of the park—Col. A. R. Greene—of 1900. This shows a condition that the Government should have corrected long ago. It ought to be corrected now, and the Government under existing law is morally, at least, bound to correct.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PLATT NATIONAL PARK,
Sulphur, Okla., October 4, 1909.

Hon. C. B. EMANUEL,
Mayor, City of Sulphur, Okla.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of a letter from the honorable Secretary of the Interior under date of September 29, 1909, inclosing a letter from Hon. Scott Ferris in regard to the insanitary conditions existing in Platt National Park by reason of the drainage of the sewage of the city of Sulphur into the same. The Secretary requests me to at once look into this matter and submit a report as to the conditions complained of and what steps are necessary to remedy the same.

The object of this letter to you is to invite suggestions as to the proper remedy for the insanitary conditions prevailing, and to this end I trust you will give this matter immediate and earnest attention.

In this connection I may be permitted to quote at length from a letter which I addressed to the department on March 18 last, and which in my views covers the situation as it exists to-day:

"Commencing at Fifth Street east and extending to Fourteenth Street west, including the whole semicircular sweep on the north side of the park, there is a dense settlement the whole drainage of which is emptied into Travertine and Rock Creeks through numerous ravines and gullies which make down from the steep hillsides of the town. This general condition is aggravated at certain points as follows: At the corner of Wapanucka Avenue and Second Street is the Odneal Hotel, which empties its sewage into Travertine Creek near a fresh-water spring from which perhaps 20 families obtain their domestic supply. Near the corner of Davis Avenue and Division Street stands the Deaf Institute, a State institution with 200 attendants the sewage of which courses down a ravine through the most picturesque portion of East Central Park to Travertine Creek at a point frequented by thousands of visitors annually. At the corner of Davis Avenue and First Street west, in the boulevard and immediately adjoining the park boundary, is an unsightly septic tank, which is, however, but little better than a cesspool, and which discharges a large volume of sewage continually down the ravine, which is the natural boundary between East Central Park and West Central Park, into Travertine Creek a few rods above Lincoln Bridge, just completed. The odor from this discharge is so offensive as to be an occasion of unfavorable criticism by visitors and the public generally. It discolors and contaminates the water to such a degree that thirsty animals refuse to drink it. At the south end of Third Street west an artesian well, situated upon block 176, discharges its water through a ravine across the middle of West Central Park into Rock Creek a short distance above the mouth of Travertine Creek. Near the corner of Fifth Street west the discharge from one of the largest artesian wells of the city finds its way across the boundary and enters Rock Creek opposite the center of block 195. A short distance west of the latter is a slight depression in the surface through which is discharged into Rock Creek a constant flow of sewage from the Frisco depot and vicinity. Rock Creek itself at the crossing of Davis Avenue is contaminated by sewage from the north part of town to such a degree as to make the surface highly offensive in appearance and the water so impure that domestic animals refuse to drink it. Immediately west and but a few rods from the bank of Rock Creek is another septic tank in the middle of the boulevard, the discharge from which aggravates the conditions in Rock Creek referred to. From the latter point, following the whole course of the park boundary, the conditions are most insanitary and offensive. Hotels and private houses, barns, livery stables, and outbuildings of every character find their drainage across the park into Rock Creek.

"Manifestly such a condition as I have herein stated can not long exist without destroying the value of the park as a health and pleasure resort."

Also, in a letter to the department, under date of July 5, 1909, I referred to the necessity for the construction of a sanitary sewer in the park. If you have any suggestions to make by which a temporary relief could be obtained from the insanitary conditions existing to tide over until such time as money may be available for the construction of such a sewer, I shall be glad to confer with you in regard to them.

Very respectfully, A. R. GREENE, Superintendent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard for just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] opposed to the amendment?

Mr. CARTER. I am for the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes, and that I have five minutes to reply.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] has spoken about the solemn treaty obligation with the Indian. We hear a great deal about solemn treaty obligations in this Chamber, but it is a sentiment seldom expressed when any real rights of the Indian are actually at stake. This obligation may be very solemn so far as the gentleman from Iowa is concerned, but does not matter one whit to the Indian, and he knows it, and I fail to see any solemn binding obligation on the part of Oklahoma, when the State was not even in existence when the treaty was made. The State of Oklahoma has had nothing to do with the making of that agreement, and recently its legislature has passed an act which I want to read to the committee. It is very short and will not take much time. It is as follows:

House concurrent resolution.

Whereas under the provisions of an act of Congress of the United States entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1902, whereby certain lands in the Chickasaw Nation were reserved from allotment and provisions made for the payment to the Indian tribes therefor by the United States Government, at the rate of $20 per acre, and which said land having been reserved, maintained, and used as a pleasure resort commonly known as "Platt National Park," situated in Murray County; and

Whereas it is expressed in said act of Congress that it is the intention that the lands so reserved from allotment should in the future be conveyed by the United States Government to such Territorial or State organization as might exist when such conveyance was made; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior has construed said last-named provision in said act as casting a cloud on the title of the United States Government to said lands, and has recommended that no appropriation be made for said lands as a pleasure resort by reason of the cloud on the title thereto: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That the said State disclaim any right, title, or interest in and to the lands aforementioned, the same being lands now embraced in what is known as "Platt National Park" adjoining the city of Sulphur, in said Murray County: And be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States is requested and memorialized to make a suitable appropriation to maintain, preserve, protect, and care for said lands for the purpose of a public pleasure resort as it has heretofore done.

Passed the house of representatives this the 13th day of December, 1910.

W. B. ANTHONY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Passed the senate this 14th day of December, 1910.

J. ELMER THOMAS,
President Pro Tempore of Senate.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Inasmuch as the United States wants to get rid of it, and Oklahoma will not have it, do you think we ought to appropriate any money for it?

Mr. CARTER. Well, I will tell you about that. The Federal Government has quite a lot of improvements in this park. There are a lot of bridges and other property of that character. These things will all go to rack if Federal supervision is abandoned. We have a new State down there. On the side of the State where this park lies we have no public internal improvements whatever—no improved roads nor bridges, no courthouses, no public school buildings; and we had to begin the business of State building from the very first foundation stone. Moreover we were handicapped by having a large portion of our property—the Indian lands—nontaxable, so that our young State can ill afford to contract any such obligation as should be embraced in the development and maintenance of this park.

The time will come when the ownership of this park will be sought rather than evaded by this Congress.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Have you a superintendent of that park?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. How much do they pay him?

Mr. CARTER. Fifteen hundred dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. And four rangers?

Mr. CARTER. Two rangers, I think.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. And how about horses and buggies and buildings to house them in?

Mr. CARTER. They have one or two houses.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. And they all live in one house?

Mr. CARTER. I don't know.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. And what is the total expense of keeping them all in that nice park and paying their board?

Mr. CARTER. I really could not give the gentleman that information.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I again revert to the question of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] as to why, if the State of Oklahoma does not want it, and the Government does not want it, should the Government appropriate for a nice home for five gentlemen and their families in a nice park down there?

Mr. CARTER. I tried to explain that once, and if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] does not understand, it is not the fault of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. But I have a pretty clear understanding about this park proposition myself.

Mr. ADAMSON. I very much doubt if the Indians would accept them if we gave this park and the Wind Cave Park back to the Indians.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This park is a little over a section in size. It takes five men to take care of it down there. That is the first object of the national park—to take care of these five men. [Laughter.] Just above the park is the town of Sulphur, which has constructed a sewer system and is delivering its sewage into the park and into these springs, so that the second chief object of this great national park is to receive into its springs the sewage system of Sulphur. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman to yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not. Now, regarding these great national purposes [laughter], on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior we refused to recommend the appropriation of any more money to be expended on this park. I say to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] and I say to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] that so far as I am concerned if they want to offer amendments ceding these two great national parks to their respective States I will make no point of order against them, but graciously accede to their request. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I regret I can not. We have a solemn compact with the Indians that should never be broken, with respect to those parks, and I hope we will keep the compact. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. DICKSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 8, on page 154, insert:

"That the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be required, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of constructing a walk from the national military cemetery at Natchez, Miss., to the sidewalks of the city of Natchez, at the present terminus of the street car line near the city hospital, a distance of about 3,000 feet, the said funds to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, to that amendment I raise the point of order that it is not in order; that this land, where it is proposed to put this sidewalk, does not belong to the Government of the United States.

Mr. DICKSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, one year ago I introduced a bill in accord with the sentiment of the women of Natchez. That bill is left unrequited. We are here to appeal to the Nation's sense of justice; the opposing sentiment of the mercantile age with characteristic merit.

In answer to the gentleman from Iowa, I may risk the opinion that he is in error.

I was so advised by citizens of Natchez, and visited the Secretary of War, the Hon. Jacob M. Dickinson, who advised me a year ago that the funds requisite were not at hand and available for the purpose of constructing this walk. There are some 2,000 and more soldiers of the Republic buried there who died or were killed during the Civil War north of Natchez. This 3,000 feet of gap is now nothing in the world but that which we might correctly term a country road. The Secretary of War, Mr. Dickinson, acceded as to the correctness of my solicitation regarding this, at the instance of the citizens of Natchez, and it does seem to me that it is not without the pale of propriety in any sense whatever. This is a well-kept cemetery, dedicated to the sacred rest of the Nation's honored dead. I am here to-day only to ask that this recognition of a connection with a great and growing city may be had by this small sum of money appropriated to give the opportunity now lacking to those who love to visit this spot. There are but few places along the Mississippi River that are more attractive to those who wish to while away an hour than that beautiful cemetery, kept by the Nation, yet unapproachable during one-half of the time in that latitude of ours, of such humid atmospheres.

That gentleman to whom I refer, the Secretary of War, approved this project in his oral discussion of the matter with me. One year ago I submitted this bill. There has been no report upon it. Accordingly, there is nothing left for me to do but to ask the consideration by the House of this bill, in order that the citizens of the Republic resident and visiting in that community may have access and opportunity for visiting this resting place of the Nation's dead. The sum of money called for by this amendment is but $5,000. Save the mails and a few other incidental items, to which I might revert, there is but little that my people receive from the Federal Government, and I come as a Mississippian, as the son of a soldier of the Republic in one war and a soldier under another banner in another war, asking that this opportunity be afforded to the women who promise to maintain it if this walk of 3,000 feet connecting the city of Natchez is constructed—the largest city in my district and the most important city between New Orleans and Memphis—that they may have opportunity added to their desire to visit the resting place of the soldiers of the Republic, I move the adoption of the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order, that it is not the property of the United States, at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks the gentleman from Mississippi whether the property is owned by the Government?

Mr. DICKSON of Mississippi. I am told that it is owned by the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This is a highway. Where does the gentleman obtain the information that enables him to say that the Government has title to this highway?

Mr. DICKSON of Mississippi. I am told that the city of Natchez ceded the title to the Government; confirmed by the records of the War Department. In conclusion, I do not begrudge any satisfaction derived by the honorable gentleman from Iowa, and leave to him his quarrel with the dead.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The amendment is not germane to this part of the bill, and no definite information has been given to the Chair that the property where the sidewalk is proposed to be located is now the property of the Government. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completing the power, heating, and lighting plant, remodeling the electric layout, and substituting electrically driven for steam-driven machinery, and for other purposes incident thereto, $60,000, which sum shall be paid from money in the Treasury which has accrued to the hospital from pensions under the act of February 20, 1905, and be immediately available.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word. I desire to take only a moment's time. A little while ago in a discussion here it was doubted that we had passed a law for a detention hospital for the insane in Alaska. I now have before me the law, which was approved on June 25, 1910, providing for an appropriation for a hospital at Fairbanks and one at Nome. I want to state that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON], who coincided with me and said that the law had been passed, was correct.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman why no appropriation was made to carry out the law?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The appropriation has been made.

Mr. GOULDEN. Then why has not the hospital been erected?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. That is what I am trying to find out from the committee.

Mr. GOULDEN. Perhaps the chairman of the committee can tell us.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of a suitable building for cold storage and conveyer runways at the central heating plant of the Freedmen's Hospital and Howard University, to be immediately available, $7,500.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 158, line 4, strike out the word "cold" and insert the word "coal."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Suits to set aside conveyances of allotted lands, Five Civilized Tribes: For the payment of necessary expenses incident to any suits brought at the request of the Secretary of the Interior in the eastern judicial district of Oklahoma, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $50,000: Provided, That the sum of $10,000 of the above amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in the prosecution of cases in the western judicial district of Oklahoma, and not to exceed $10,000 of said sum shall be available for the expenses of the United States on appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if the proviso in this paragraph is not a duplication of the second paragraph on page 163?

Mr. TAWNEY. What proviso?

Mr. CARTER. In the third paragraph on page 164.

Provided, That the sum of $10,000 of the above amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in the prosecution of cases in the western judicial district of Oklahoma, and not to exceed $10,000 of said sum shall be available for the expenses of the United States on appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The other paragraph that I refer to begins with line 6, on page 163.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is no appropriation in line 6, page 163. That is—

For the payment of any and all expenses incurred or to be incurred in or about the prosecutions for crimes committed in the United States or the Republic of Mexico in conection with the false making or unlawful procurement of conveyances purporting to affect title to lands in Oklahoma allotted to Kickapoo Indians, $20,000, at the discretion of the Attorney General, the provision of section 3648 of the Revised Statutes to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Those are exclusively criminal prosecutions, and the others, referred to on page 164, are substantially all civil cases.

Mr. CARTER. No; the others are criminal cases, too:

Provided, That the sum of $10,000 of the above amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in the prosecution of cases in the western judicial district of Oklahoma, and not to exceed $10,000 of said sum shall be available for the expenses of the United States on appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Those are civil cases.

Mr. CARTER. No; there is nothing in the language to justify such assumption; that appropriation has been used in the past for criminal prosecutions of the gentlemen who are alleged to have perpetrated the Kickapoo land frauds.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does the gentleman know that the $10,000 to be used on appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States is for criminal prosecutions?

Mr. CARTER. No; I am questioning the first part of the language after the word "Provided."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There is nothing in this paragraph on page 164 which indicates that it is for criminal prosecutions.

Mr. CARTER. That is what it has been used for.

Mr. TAWNEY. It says here in line 11:

Suits to set aside conveyances of allotted lands.

That is not for criminal prosecutions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Oklahoma is mistaken.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from Oklahoma is not mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is to be used in those suits that the gentleman contended were improperly brought.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from New York is himself mistaken. That is not the case at all. This refers to matters in the western district of Oklahoma, and the suits the gentleman from New York has in mind are in the eastern district of Oklahoma.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken; I am familiar with both items and I have gone over them with him.

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the gentleman that he and I have never had any conversation either personally or before his committee about the prosecution of any suits in the western district of Oklahoma.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know that; the gentleman is interested in the eastern district.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; these are known as the kicking Kickapoo land-fraud suits, the same thing as is referred to on page 163.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that there will be no duplication. The officials of the Department of Justice were before the committee, and the understanding was that in one case it was to prosecute criminal cases and in the other to prosecute civil cases.

Mr. CARTER. O Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota is mistaken. I am sure these two items contemplate the same cases. The matter is not in my district, however, and I shall make no further objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the understanding that we obtained from the officers of the Department of Justice. I do not think the department would be so unfamiliar with the business as to come to the committee and ask for two appropriations for identically the same thing. Our understanding is that one is for the prosecution of criminal cases and the other for civil cases.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of bailiffs and criers, not exceeding three bailiffs and one crier in each court, except in the southern district of New York and the northern district of Illinois: Provided, That all persons employed under section 715 of the Revised Statutes shall be deemed to be in actual attendance when they attend upon the order of the courts: Provided further, That no such person shall be employed during vacation; of reasonable expenses actually incurred for travel and maintenance of circuit and district judges of the United States and the judges of the district courts of the United States in Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, consequent upon their attending court or transacting other official business at any place other than their official place of residence, not to exceed $10 per day, said expenses to be paid by the marshal of the district in which said court is held or official business transacted upon the judge's written certificate; of meals and lodgings for jurors in United States cases, and of bailiffs in attendance upon the same, when ordered by the court; and of compensation for jury commissioners, $5 per day, not exceeding three days for any one term of court, $250,000.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question: Does this change the law in reference to the payment of district judges when they are absent on official business away from their place of residence in their own district? I do not object to it. If it changes the law, I am glad of it. I will give the gentleman briefly the reason of my inquiry. The law as it now stands does not permit a district judge who may be holding court in a subdivision of his district other than his residence to receive pay when he goes to hold court. I hope this does change the law, and that the judges may get pay when they go beyond the division of their residence.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that the necessity for this comes from the act passed by Congress, I think two years ago, which makes all the circuit court judges subject to call to sit in cases where it is necessary to expedite business and where they are taken out of their circuits.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes; and there is one provision that requires three circuit judges.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is a fact. We had before our committee the case of a circuit court judge in California who has been taken into the State of Idaho and into the State of Washington for the purpose of meeting the requirements of that law.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I agree with the gentleman that it is perfectly proper. But you say here "and the district judges also."

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; it applies to the district judges where a district judge is required to hold court in his district at a place other than his home. He would then be entitled to traveling expenses.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. He is not so entitled under the law.

Mr. TAWNEY. He is not.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Then this changes the existing law.

Mr. TAWNEY. It changes the existing law in that respect.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I want to congratulate the gentleman, because it is an act of justice to these judges.

Mr. ADAMSON. There is no doubt about that, and it ought to have been done long ago. This matter was brought about in this way: Some years ago Chief Justice Fuller and this artist from Philadelphia, who is a noted artist, whose name I do not know——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Rosenthal.

Mr. TAWNEY. It was at the request of the Chief Justice of the United States, for the purpose of getting together, collecting, and painting portraits of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, that the work was initiated. The work has been done. The Committee on Appropriations has had submitted to it photographs of the portraits that have been painted, and judging from the photographs of the portraits of the men who are now living, in the judgment of the committee, and also based upon the reputation of the artist, we concluded that this is practically the only opportunity we have of preserving the portraits of the men who have served upon the Supreme Court of the United States. There is no other country in the world that has not preserved the portraits of the justices of its supreme judicial tribunal.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Who owns those old portraits now?

Mr. TAWNEY. They belong to the man who painted them—Rosenthal, at Philadelphia—and I am sorry that the gentleman has not taken the trouble to look at the hearings. He would see the pains taken for the purpose of getting accurate data regarding the appearance of the men who have passed and gone, before the portraits were painted.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Did he have any promise from anybody in authority that they would be bought by the Government?

Mr. TAWNEY. He had no promise, so far as I know, from anybody. He had a conference with the Justices of the Supreme Court, and with the late Chief Justice Fuller. We have portraits of the Chief Justices of the Supreme Court, but we have no portraits of any of the associate justices.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is the artist now living?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; he was before the committee and his testimony is in the hearings.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Did the gentleman say that these were portraits of the justices from the foundation of the court? He must have called on his imagination for the portraits, because many of them died long before the artist was born.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have read the hearings and am somewhat acquainted with the artist. In the hearings he said he had the original photogravures of the former justices. Ten of the 15, as he states, have been painted from life. His testimony is on page 896.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Are they as lifelike and beautiful as some of the portraits in the hall just to the south of the Chamber?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Government of the United States preserves the likenesses of cabinet officers, not only heads of departments, but in some cases the chiefs of bureaus. All of these portraits are painted at the expense of the Government, and I think it is only an act of justice to the Supreme Court of the United States and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States that we should preserve the likenesses of the men who have served on that bench.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has the gentleman from Minnesota seen the portraits?

Mr. TAWNEY. We have seen photographs of the portraits.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman know anything about the tints, whether the chiaroscuro is proper, and so forth?

Mr. KEIFER. I do not know what that word means.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Neither do I; but I have seen it in connection with paintings.

Mr. Chairman, I will not buy a pig in a poke and pay several thousand dollars for it. I therefore raise the point of order.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. But it has already been raised.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then I make it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon the point of order?

Mr. MACON. The gentleman from Wisconsin made the point of order.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The gentleman from Wisconsin has made the point of order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I will withdraw it temporarily in order to say a word.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. If you are going to insist upon it, what is the use of talking about it?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think I would feel easier if I were to say a word, in view of the fact that I will make the point of order.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Has the gentleman reserved it?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. He said that he withdrew it in order that he might relieve himself.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I reserve the point of order, and if the gentleman does not insist upon it I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, if I myself were possessed of financial means to purchase 15 portraits for $12,000, I would not do it without having seen the pictures. I would not do that with my own money if I were possessed of that amount of money, and I can not vote away the money out of the United States Treasury to buy something which no Member of the House apparently has ever seen.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman aware that he has already voted $9,000 for painting of pictures you have not seen?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; I know, and that is the reason I will not vote for any more. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. We have already authorized the reproduction of these things that hang on the wall out here, called pictures of past Speakers, and appropriated $9,000 for that purpose without knowing anything at all about what the result would be, whether it would be any improvement on those we have already or not.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand the gentleman to say he was opposed to these portraits because he had seen some of these pictures out here?

Mr. TAWNEY. There is only one completed, which is that of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio; probably that is the reason the gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has this same artist painted——

Mr. STAFFORD. He has only painted portraits of eminent men.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin remember the handsome picture which was bought by Members of the House of the Hon. John Sharp Williams and placed out here in the hall——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. That was a good likeness, too.

Mr. MACON. And that was a pig in a poke, and we paid $500 for it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I could not recognize it until Williams went out there and told me that was his picture. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Is it the same man who painted the portrait of the chairman of our Appropriations Committee?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. I would like to have the portraits brought down and exhibited.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Stonington River (Conn.) Light Station: For repair of sea wall about Stonington Point, Conn., $500.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 177, line 23, after the word "Stonington" strike out the word "River."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman if he will accept an amendment?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; not now. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MANN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 32909, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CONSTITUTION OF NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a message from the President, which was read and referred to the Committee on the Territories.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, etc., passed June 20, 1910, provides that when the constitution, for the adoption of which provision is made in the act, shall have been duly ratified by the people of New Mexico in the manner provided in the statute, a certified copy of the same shall be submitted to the President of the United States and to Congress for approval, and that if Congress and the President approve of such constitution, or if the President approve the same and Congress fails to disapprove the same during the next regular session thereof, then that the President shall certify said facts to the governor of New Mexico, who shall proceed to issue his proclamation for the election of State and county officers, etc.

The constitution prepared in accordance with the act of Congress has been duly ratified by the people of New Mexico, and a certified copy of the same has been submitted to me and also to the Congress for approval, in conformity with the provisions of the act. Inasmuch as the enabling act requires affirmative action by the President, I transmit herewith a copy of the constitution, which, I am advised, has also been separately submitted to Congress, according to the provisions of the act, by the authorities of New Mexico, and to which I have given my formal approval.

I recommend the approval of the same by the Congress.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 24, 1911.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 18542. An act for the relief of Thomas C. Clark; and

H. R. 26290. An act providing for the validation of certain homestead entries.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 7640. An act for the relief of James M. Sweat.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. ASHBROOK was granted leave of absence for five days, on account of sickness of self and wife.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet at half past 10 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet at 10.30 a. m. Saturday, February 25, 1911.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Acting Secretary of War, submitting an estimate of appropriation for pay of the Army (H. Doc. No. 1407); to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting with comment as to phraseology copies of the acts for the relief of E. C. Young and Phoebe Clark, respectively (H. Doc. No. 1408); to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for salaries and expenses of agents and subordinate officers of Internal Revenue (H. Doc. No. 1409); to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 25, 1911.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, our help in ages past, our hope for years to come, we rejoice that we, Thy children, though we seem but creatures of a day, yet share Thine eternity. Because Thou livest, we live; and because Thy years have no end, therefore are we without beginning of days or end of life. As we this day commemorate those who have labored with us for the common good, deepen in us, we beseech Thee, the assurance of Thy grace, and quicken in us the hope of life eternal. Grant, we implore Thee, that neither life nor death may separate us from Thee, in whom we live, move, and have our being.

And so may God, our Father, who hath loved us and hath given us eternal comfort and good hope through grace, comfort our hearts and establish them in every good work and word. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PUBLIC HEALTH AND MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates for increase in certain items for the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, etc. (S. Doc. No. 837), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR PORTO RICO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the speaker of the House of Delegates of Porto Rico, informing the Senate that a resolution had been adopted by that body inviting the appropriate committees from Congress to visit that island, and requesting that action on the pending Porto Rican government bill be suspended until conditions there have been investigated, which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 10691) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 10605. An act for the relief of Aaron Wakefield;

H. R. 22270. An act for the relief of Amos M. Barbin; and

H. R. 32822. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 608. An act for the relief of Charles T. Gallagher and Samuel H. Proctor;

S. 5432. An act to authorize the city of Seattle, Wash., to purchase certain lands for the protection of the source of its water supply;

S. 7640. An act for the relief of James M. Sweat;

S. 7804. An act for the relief of David Jay Jennings;

S. 10318. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant further extensions of time within which to make proof on desert-land entries in the counties of Benton, Yakima, and Klickitat;

S. 10817. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 10818. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 28632. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes;

H. R. 29708. An act to constitute Birmingham, in the State of Alabama, a subport of entry;

H. R. 32341. An act to authorize the St. Paul Railway Promotion Co., a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near Nininger, Minn.; and

H. J. Res. 276. Joint resolution modifying certain laws relating to the military records of certain soldiers and sailors.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented resolutions adopted by the Pan-Hellenic Union, of Boston, Mass., favoring the annexation of Crete with Greece, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULLOM presented memorials of sundry citizens of Illinois, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Granite City and Chicago, in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against any change being made in the present law relative to the printing by the Government of bonds, checks, and securities, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of race-gambling bets, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SCOTT. I present a letter from Edward O. Skelton, publisher, of Boston, Mass., relative to the so-called Sulloway old-age pension bill. I ask that the letter lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOSTON, February 23, 1911.

To N. B. SCOTT.

SENATOR: The pension bill known as the "Sulloway bill," which passed the House and is now under consideration by the Senate, is one which is not rightly understood by the public. The curtailed references to it in the newspapers are misleading, inasmuch as they do not fully explain the slight increase in this bill over the present one under which pensions are distributed. The Sulloway bill does not increase the amount to be expended $55,000,000 yearly, as some of the Senators in their speeches claim. I have been informed that when the Committee (Senate) on Pensions were considering this bill, an expert from the Pension Bureau was called upon to make a statement of just what the increase would be the first year, and he stated that it would be less than $30,000,000; that it would be less each succeeding year. But notwithstanding this official statement, certain Senators, for reasons which are readily apparent, are giving unwarranted publicity to an erroneous figure. Now, passing by the arguments which are advanced against this pension bill and which have been so freely given publicity in the press, I fail to have observed one instance where the daily press gave in any detail the reasons favorable to it, and they are many.

In his message to Congress at the beginning of the session, President Taft urged enactments for the benefit of the Civil War veterans, and up to the present time he has not uttered one word in opposition to the bill under consideration, notwithstanding misleading reports of impending vetoes are freely circulated; and in view of his well-known and often-expressed sentiments that this country can not ever do too much for the Civil War veterans, it is safe to assume that that bill, if it is ever presented to him, will receive his approval. Do these Senators who are so strong in their opposition ever stop to think that if it were not for the men and boys who 50 years ago answered the call to protect the flag, and who through four years of that deplorable fratricidal war, fighting over 2,000 engagements, fought for the preservation of the Union, that there would not to-day be a United States; that there would be no Congress in which they could serve; and that in all probability this country to-day would be a dependency of one or more foreign powers, for defeat of the North would have caused long ago European powers to have swooped down upon us and dismembered what was left of the Republic? Should not consideration be given to-day to the words of that most beloved of Americans, President Lincoln, who, in his second inaugural, at its conclusion, just 40 days previous to his death, uttered this prayer: "With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the Nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphan," etc.

And now, 46 years after that prayer was uttered, when there are less than 500,000 left of the 2,750,000 who offered their very lives if necessary to save the Union, and when they are passing away at the rate of one every 10 minutes of the 24 hours, are bent with age and infirmities, past the time when they can earn sufficient to care for their families, is this Government to forget President Lincoln's promise to them? Is it to ignore President Taft's request? I am fully sensitive to the fact that this Government has done more for the veterans than any nation on the globe ever did for its soldiers; that we have many soldiers' homes in which thousands of the old defenders have a comfortable place in which to pass their remaining days. And in this connection there exists the sad fact that many of them were compelled to go there that their pension, small as it is, might go to the dear wife, the companion who had these long, many years cared for him and his comfort, that she might have the little to keep the breath of life in her. And as the years go on, many, many more will come to the "parting of the ways," and the dear old people separate. Is it right that this Nation should compel its defenders, its saviors, in their hour of extreme need, when they are almost to the setting of life's sun, to make this sacrifice?

The old soldiers do not ask charity; they ask that justice which the Nation's lawmakers have so often and loudly talked of for the veteran be now given to them; that President Lincoln's promise to them be recognized by the Government of the United States, which they made possible of perpetuity.

Very respectfully,

EDWARD O. SKELTON.

Mr. SCOTT presented memorials of the Tri-State Wool Growers' Association of West Virginia, remonstrating against

Mr. HALE presented memorials of Prestile Grange, No. 504; Local Grange of Hartland; Local Grange of Ripley; and Eastern Star Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, all in the State of Maine, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ROOT presented a petition of the Jewish Morning Journal, of New York City, N. Y., praying that an increase be made in the rate of postage on periodicals and magazines, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WARREN. I present resolutions adopted by the Carbon County Wool Growers' Association, of Wyoming, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal agreement between the United States and Canada, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas a treaty has been negotiated by the Departments of State of these United States and of the Dominion of Canada for the purpose of promoting reciprocal trade relations between the two countries, and a bill has been introduced and passed in the House of Representatives of the United States confirming such treaty; and

Whereas by the terms of the proposed treaty the import duty on live stock, consisting of sheep, cattle, horses, and mules, imported into the United States from Canada will be entirely removed, and the import duty on agricultural products imported into the United States from Canada will also be removed, while the duty on manufactured products of the United States exported to Canada will not be removed by the Canadian Government; and

Whereas the duties upon meats, the dressed products of live stock, imported from Canada into the United States, will not be removed; and

Whereas there had heretofore been created by the Congress of the United States a Tariff Commission to investigate the various articles imported into the United States for the specific purpose of ascertaining the amount of duty that should be placed upon such importations by the Government of these United States in order to equitably protect the United States producers of such articles, and in accordance with the principles of protection for American industries; and

Whereas such Tariff Commission or Board has not as yet reported to the Congress of the United States upon any of the articles referred to and covered by the proposed treaty, and to be admitted without duty into the United States by the terms of such treaty, so that the Congress of the United States and the people thereof are unable at this time to know whether or not such lowering or removal of duties will be detrimental to the producers in the United States; and

Whereas the removal of the duty from live stock to be imported into the United States and the retention of the duty upon meat products is detrimental to the farmers of the entire country and to the stock growers of Wyoming, while being favorable to the packing industries of the United States; and

Whereas the adoption of the bill ratifying and confirming said proposed treaty would mean the giving up of the Republican doctrine of protection and the adoption of the Democratic theory of free trade, and would prove to be the opening wedge for the adoption of such free-trade theory; and

Whereas the Republican doctrine of reciprocity has always called for the admission to this country of the products of other countries not competing with those produced here, and the admission, free of duty, by such foreign government of our manufactured and other products of which we have a surplus, causing an equal and equitable exchange of products of the two countries, with a resulting promotion of the balance of trade in favor of this country: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the members of the Carbon County Wool Growers' Association are absolutely opposed to the passage of the House bill ratifying and confirming the proposed reciprocity treaty between the United States of America and Dominion of Canada, upon the grounds that the same, if adopted, would be adverse to the interests of the American farmer and the western stock grower; would constitute a reversal of the Republican doctrine of protection in favor of the Democratic theory of free trade; would be an overthrow of the Republican doctrine of due investigation by the Tariff Board before revision of duties upon any article imported into the United States; would be the adoption of a principle that has heretofore been tried by this country through a reciprocity treaty with Canada in the year 1855, and found to be detrimental to the interests of the American producers; and be it further

Resolved, That we do hereby petition our Representatives in Congress, Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN, Hon. C. D. CLARK, and Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL, to use every effort in their power to prevent the adoption and confirming of this reciprocity treaty in its present form.

CARBON COUNTY WOOL GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,

PRESERVATION OF ELK IN WYOMING.

Mr. WARREN. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Wyoming, which I ask may be read.

There being no objection, the memorial was read, as follows:

House joint memorial No. 1.

A joint resolution relating to the preservation of big game in the State of Wyoming and memorializing the Congress of the United States to make an adequate appropriation to aid the State of Wyoming in providing winter food for and otherwise protecting the big game which range in the national park and in the Jackson Hole region of this State alternately.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring):

Whereas the principal remnant of the big game of the United States, comprised of moose, elk, and deer, range alternately during the winters in the national park and game reserve and the Jacksons Hole section of the State of Wyoming, south of the national park; and

Whereas during the winters suffer greatly and perish from famine in large numbers, which could be, in a great measure, prevented by adequate and systematic provision for feeding and protecting them during storms and blizzards; and

Whereas the State of Wyoming has been and is making appropriations of large sums of money and using every available means within its power to preserve said big game; and

Whereas the sufficient and thoroughly adequate protection of said big game is too expensive and burdensome to be borne alone by the State of Wyoming: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, That the Government of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to cooperate with the State of Wyoming in feeding, protecting, and otherwise preserving the big game which winters in great numbers within the confines of the State of Wyoming; and the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized and requested to make an adequate appropriation of money, to be used aiding and cooperating with the State of Wyoming in the laudable and desirable effort to feed, protect, and preserve from extinction the principal remnant of the big game of the United States which range during the winters principally within the territory of the State of Wyoming; be it further

Resolved, That engrossed copies of this memorial and request be sent to the President of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to the Secretary of the Interior, asking their aid in bringing the object of this memorial and request before Congress and in securing from same an adequate appropriation of public moneys for the noble, humane, and national purpose herein set forth; and be it further

Resolved, That engrossed copies of this memorial and request be sent to the Senators from Wyoming in the Congress of the United States, viz, Hons. CLARENCE D. CLARK and FRANCIS E. WARREN, and our Representative in said Congress, Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL, asking them to use their best efforts to secure favorable action upon the request embodied herein.

Approved February 17, 1911.

STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Wyoming, ss:

I, Frank L. Houx, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed has been carefully compared with house joint memorial No. 1 and is a full, true, and correct copy of the same and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 21st day of February, A. D. 1911.
[SEAL.] FRANK L. HOUX, Secretary of State,
By C. P. MACGLASHAN, Deputy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to state that the memorial which has just been read was passed in the closing hours of the session of the Wyoming Legislature, after it had appropriated, as it had done for some years before, money for the preservation of elk. Severe storms have occurred since, and I have in my hand a telegram from the governor of Wyoming, which I ask may be read. I wish to say that I shall offer an amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill, which I hope we will take up to-day, and will submit it to the Senate for its consent in making an appropriation to feed and remove those animals.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, as follows:

CHEYENNE, WYO., February 23, 1911.

Hon. F. E. WARREN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Wyoming is spending $20,000 annually to protect elk; this herd largest in United States—probably 35,000. They drift with first snows to settled valleys and destroy haystacks and fences in quest of food. The State is trying to save several thousand from starvation. Such men as Easton Kendrick, game warden, and others say it is practicable in spring and fall to move the surplus elk, which die annually from starvation, to the Big Horn and other mountains where there is an abundance of food without interfering with stock interests. The State has good game laws and is doing everything possible to protect the elk. When the elk are fat, they are in Yellowstone Park; when starving, they are in the settled valley. Can you and your associates get $20,000 in an appropriation and a company of cavalry to aid in moving the surplus elk? This driving must be in part this spring; finish next fall. Two hundred mounted men required. Experienced cattlemen will aid. State has available appropriation to do its part. The herd may be saved, otherwise they will have to starve or be destroyed.

JOSEPH M. CAREY, Governor.

Mr. LODGE. I present a letter from Prof. Hornaday, of the New York Zoological Park, on the same subject, which I shall be glad to have printed in connection with the telegram which has been read.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK ZOOLOGICAL PARK,
ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-FIRST STREET AND SOUTH BOULEVARD,
New York, February 14, 1911.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This appeal is addressed to you, because you are a member of the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, and I have been informed that the chairman of that committee, Senator BRANDEGEE, is ill.

I have just been informed by a reliable person in Jacksons Hole, Wyo., Mr. S. N. Leek, that "5,000 elk will perish in Jacksons Hole within the next two weeks unless fed." I have been personally acquainted with Mr. Leek for the past 13 years, and I know that he would not thus appeal for outside help in behalf of the starving elk unless the need for it was very great. I am aware of the fact that the Legislature of Wyoming is about to appropriate $5,000 for the purchase of hay for the distressed elk herds; but that will be only half sufficient to meet the necessities of the case.

I respectfully point out to you, and to Congress, the fact that the 30,000 elk from the Yellowstone Park, and now wintering in Jacksons Hole, belong, at least one-half of them, to the people of the United States. If our vested right in that elk herd were attacked, our National Government would be quick to defend it. Does it not now become the imperative duty of the National Government to contribute something to save those elk from perishing by thousands, even as occurred in the winter of 1908 and 1909, in spite of the help that was afforded by the State of Wyoming? At that time $7,000 were expended by the State, and the conditions to-day are much more serious than they were then.

I respectfully suggest that the Senate Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game should at once procure the passage of a joint resolution, appropriating $5,000 for immediate use by the Bureau of Forestry in the purchase of hay for the starving elk. It will be an easy matter for Congress to safeguard the whole transaction.

The final settlement of all questions pertaining to the permanent conservation of the Wyoming elk herds in winter can be taken up in the future; and it now seems clear that the problems involved can not be solved a day too soon. It is, however, utterly impossible for anyone to say, just at this moment, what should be done to place our great elk herd on a basis that hereafter will be permanently satisfactory all the year around. I think the questions involved can best be settled by the Biological Survey and the Forestry Bureau, after a thorough investigation of all conditions. The need of the hour, however, is for an emergency measure that will avert an impending calamity.

Very respectfully, yours,
W. T. HORNADAY,
Chairman Committee on Game Protective Legislation and Preserves.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In connection with the matter just presented by the Senator from Massachusetts, as the writer of the letter suggested that the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game should report a joint resolution in accordance with his recommendation, I desire to say that the committee thought, upon consultation with the Senators from Wyoming, it would be much more likely to pass at this stage of the session if the course indicated by the Senator from Wyoming were adopted.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES BUILDING.

Mr. LODGE. I present a memorial from a committee of the executive council of the American Historical Association relative to the construction of a national archives building. I move that the memorial be printed as a public document and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds (S. Doc. No. 838).

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 22d instant, proposing to appropriate $65,000 toward the erection of an armory building for the National Guard of the District of Columbia, etc., intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment and moved that it be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which was agreed to.

Mr. NIXON. From the Committee on Coast Defenses I report back favorably with amendments the amendment submitted by the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] on the 6th instant, proposing to appropriate $150,000 for the acquirement by the Secretary of War of certain lands at Cape Henry, Va., and so forth, intended to be proposed to the fortifications appropriation bill, which I ask may be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I submit a letter from the Acting Secretary of War in reference thereto, which I ask may accompany the amendment to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DILLINGHAM, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. FOSTER on the 20th instant relative to the proposed enlargement, equipment, and effective operation of the immigrant station at New Orleans, La., etc., intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it with amendments, submitted a report (No. 1248) thereon, and moved that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I submit my views as a member of the minority of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads on House bill 31539, the Post Office appropriation bill, relating to the item of the rate of postage on second-class matter, which I ask may be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Oklahoma will be complied with. (Rept. No. 1242).

M. H. PLUNKETT.

Mr. GALLINGER. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 1342) placing M. H. Plunkett, assistant engineer, United States Navy, on the retired list with an advanced rank, and I submit a report (No. 1241) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to it.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, in line 9, to strike out the words "June 29, 1906," and insert "the passage of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That M. H. Plunkett, assistant engineer, United States Navy, retired with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), may, in the discretion of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be placed on the retired list of the Navy in the grade of passed assistant engineer with the rank of lieutenant, and that this promotion and the increased pay incident thereto shall take effect from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARINE BIOLOGICAL STATION IN FLORIDA.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on Fisheries I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 10430) to authorize the establishment of a marine biological station on the Gulf coast of the State of Florida, and I submit a report (No. 1246) thereon.

On behalf of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] I ask for its present consideration. I wish to say that a similar bill passed the Senate, except the Senate bill carried an appropriation. This House bill has exactly the same provisions in it except the appropriation as passed by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary has not the correct print of the bill at his desk.

Mr. OVERMAN. The chairman of the committee handed me the bill. Is it not with the papers?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. While looking for that bill, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business No. 1140.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is not here. It is necessary for the Secretary to have the correct print of the bill at the desk. Unless the Senator from North Carolina objects, the Chair will leave the matter on the desk until the Senator has found the correct bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. BURKETT. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks for the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection.

OUACHITA RIVER BRIDGE, ARKANSAS.

Mr. MARTIN. From the Committee on Commerce I report back the bill (S. 10882) to authorize the county of Ouachita, Ark., to construct a bridge across Ouachita River, and I submit a report (No. 1243) thereon. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask for the regular order. There was unanimous consent given for the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to proceed at the conclusion of the morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. The bill will go to the calendar.

H. S. ROBINSON.

Mr. OLIVER. From the Committee on Claims I report back the bill (H. R. 18512) for the relief of H. S. Robinson, of Allegheny County, Pa. I should like to have unanimous consent——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska has requested that the regular order be proceeded with, which is equivalent to an objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 10889) granting an increase of pension to Isabella S. Snyder (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 10890) for the payment of certain claims for damages to and loss of private property; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FOSTER:

A bill (S. 10891) granting a pension to Clementine Chapman (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 10892) granting an increase of pension to Christopher C. Showalter (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BRIGGS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $45,000 for improving Absecon Inlet, N. J., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DIXON submitted an amendment relative to the protection of game in Alaska, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BANKHEAD submitted an amendment relative to the commissions of pharmacists in the Navy, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relative to the status of mates in the Navy, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,650.05 in settlement of the claim of Rittenhouse Moore, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $35,000 for establishing an adequate system of lighting in the channel leading to Norfolk Harbor, Va., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM submitted an amendment relative to the settlement of the accounts of volunteer officers of the Navy who served in the War with Spain, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $12,000 for the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among the natives of Alaska, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment authorizing the Attorney General to institute suit against all persons and corporations or others who may have or pretend to have any right, title, claim, or interest to land along any part of the Anacostia River or Eastern Branch, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 to investigate and test the underflow of the streams, and also the artesian waters, in western Oklahoma, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relative to the issuance and publication of periodical publications, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

INSURANCE COMPANIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 369), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and is hereby, directed to continue, during the Sixty-second Congress, the preparation of the Code of Law for the regulation and control of insurance companies doing business within said District, authorized by Senate resolution of May 16, 1910, with all the powers conferred therein.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 370), which was considered by unanimous consent and agree to:

Resolved, That the Attorney General be directed to transmit to the Senate a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredation cases, not heretofore reported, requiring an appropriation by Congress.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY DIRECT VOTE.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 134) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States, which was reported by me from the Committee on the Judiciary on the 11th ultimo, be printed with the amendments omitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE SENATOR DOLLIVER.

Mr. YOUNG. On the 18th instant, when I submitted my remarks in memory of the late Senator DOLLIVER, I was unable to procure a copy of a letter which I desired to incorporate in order that it might be in the permanent volume. I now have that letter in print, written by Gen. James S. Clarkson, who knew Mr. DOLLIVER better than any other one living knew him. I ask leave to present it, not to be read, but to become a part of the memorial volume when it is printed, it being necessary to its completion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter presented by the Senator from Iowa will be prinfed as requested.

Mr. YOUNG. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MR. CLARKSON'S FAREWELL TRIBUTE TO DOLLIVER.

[From the Des Moines (Iowa) Register and Leader.]

In a telegraphic dispatch I have already responded in part to the request of the Register and Leader for "an expression on the death of Senator DOLLIVER." In that I expressed my sense of the Nation's loss and of my own personal grief in this untimely end of his great career. There will be those who will think that his death, largely if not wholly due to his incessant and faithful overwork in the cause of the people, will have contributed even more than he could have done if living to the cause that he espoused so earnestly and powerfully, and this may be true. Yet, for my part, I believe that he was plainly in the line of destiny to serve a still greater part in this cause than he had yet been able to do, much as he had done. He had already become the leader of the public thought of the Nation on the great reforms so imperatively demanded in some of our leading national policies and in our business systems, and to me he was becoming plainly the choice of the people for the supreme leader in the final action which will put these demands for change and reform in the national statutes, or such reforms as will bring the country and its business and its people back to normal balance, with corporations and property having all the protection that they deserve and yet with human rights always having preeminence over property and all material things.

DOLLIVER'S heart was as much the embodied heart of the American people, the struggling and "uncounted millions," as he so fondly and so felicitously termed them, or the great masses who in their relative poverty have a fairer and larger life in this Republic than the same class of people have in any other country of the world, just as much as the heart of Lincoln was the embodied heart, not only of all the struggling and suffering millions but also of all patriotic Americans in the years before the Civil War. Besides this almost divine sympathy for the people at large and his desire to save the working people of this country from being degraded to a peasantry similar to the peasantries of Europe, as Lincoln desired to free the millions of human beings from slavery at that time, he also spent long years of studious and incessant investigation into all economic questions and learned to know the just basis on which the readjustment in this country should and must and will finally be made. He was among the earliest to see the force of the resistless evolution which has been going on in this country particularly, and also all over the world in a lesser degree, and among the first to know that the tide could not longer be resisted.

Instead of his views as so conspicuously announced in his speeches of unequalled power and persuasion in the debates in the Senate on the Payne tariff bill—the speeches which so unprejudiced an authority as the Springfield Republican, first of all political and literary critics in New England, pronounced as having brought the Senate debates of this time to be judged as equal in merit with the debates of the days of Webster, Clay, Randolph, and Calhoun—being the zealous views of a new convert, I personally know them to have been in fact his own personal views for many years, for these views long have been my own, and I often talked them over with him in the intimacy existing between us, and we both agreed, over 20 years ago, that no tariff duty should any longer be imposed, except in such measure as would protect the American laborer in the difference between American and European wages. These were not only his private views but often as frankly expressed public views. In fact I have always felt that it was the plank in the Iowa Republican platform in 1895, as I remember the date, in the State convention held in Cedar Rapids, declaring that "the tariff shall never be allowed to become a shelter of monopoly," and which was presented by George Roberts and DOLLIVER, that put Iowa in the lead of a rising revolt against any further high or increasing tariff. It was this plank that ushered in what finally became nationally known as "the Iowa idea." In the years since then I talked frequently with Mr. DOLLIVER, and found him increasingly in favor of lowering instead of increasing the tariff duties. I talked with him several times during the debate on the Payne bill, when he came to New York hunting for the actual facts as to the important schedules into which he made such complete and unsparing investigation, and consulted with me and other customs officials in this port. He never stopped until he got the entire truth in detail, which truth he used with such terrific effect in his speeches in the Senate and with such overwhelming proof as ought to have defeated the schedules that he assailed.

Besides his own tireless work and overwork, which at last and not slowly brought to him the fatal penalty which his country now deplores, in investigating for the truth, he had the service for several years, and in the last year or more the constant service, of Henry D. Tichenor, the best posted man of this time in all the intricate details of the tariff—the son and student of Col. George C. Tichenor, the greatest tariff expert this Nation has ever had and who, as a high official of the Treasury Department, was the expert authority and adviser of Congress in the preparation and enactment of the Wilson bill, the McKinley bill, and the Dingley bill. Thus, his speeches in the Senate were based not only on his own long and profound study of the economic conditions of this country, but also on ascertained and established official facts gained by him with such an exhaustless and exhaustive research and with such hard labor on his own part, and through the invaluable help of the first tariff experts, as no other public official had ever attempted or utilized.

This great testimony of incontestible facts which he gave in the Senate served the one great purpose of convincing the great masses of the people—"the uncounted millions," as he termed them—but failed to convince the majority of the Senate, which had determined not to be convinced. Thus did he place on the great trestle board of the Nation's progress the truth, so imperiously demanding long-needed reform in the reduction of the tariff, and with it the plan for accomplishing it. This plan that he thus presented to the wisdom of the Nation and the conscience of Congress will surely yet be enacted into law; and it is more than probable that he himself would have been called to the Presidency as the insurance of its being done. He had not lived to lead in fulfilling his utterance as a prophet, but in a not distant time his prophecies will have become the statutes of the land and the full protection of the people.

That Senator DOLLIVER worked with Senator CUMMINS in the final struggle in Washington was from the fact that Senator CUMMINS was right also and not because anyone or any power than his own conscience led DOLLIVER to take what his own 20 years' experience in Congress had shown him to be the only thing left to do. I was in sympathy with the most that he did, and yet, as a much older man and a man of the older generation that had passed, could not share fully in the views of the new generation in holding so many of the old party leaders as having been unfaithful. For they had served in a far different period in the evolution and upbuilding of this Nation, and had, in my opinion, served as faithfully the demands of their time as were DOLLIVER and the other leaders of the new generation proceeding to fulfill their duties now. While I approved his general course of protest and appeal in the Senate, and had plainly increasing admiration for him for the rare powers he was so plainly and so constantly showing, I advised him to vote at last for his party under protest, and place the responsibility on it. Yet I am free to say that in this he showed himself possessed of more courage and more loyalty to the people's interest than I did, or the courage of this newer and braver and perhaps better era in politics. In any event he plainly met his duty as he saw it, and died proud of his action; and the coming time is not unlikely to find posterity calling it not only the bravest, but the greatest of all his many acts in his long and brilliant and always faithful career.

One who has lived as long as I have and personally watched the course of things in 50 years of politics can look with admiration upon the great leaders of the new day and the new order without joining in the too prevalent present tendency to impugn the motives of the great leaders who led in the great legislation in the generation just passed. For my part, I believe that these denunciations should cease and the party be brought together to agree upon the legislation which is to enact in the statutes the reforms now so irresistably demanded by the public interest and the public will. The party should be brought together instead of daily being separated more and more. I do not mean that there should be the least surrender on the part of the new convictions or any lessening of the demands for changes so imperatively needed, but I do believe that 95 per cent of the Republicans of this country want to find in an amicable manner the right way to settle these questions. All that is needed is to ascertain and to enact into law what will be just to property and the people alike, and yet with the rights of the people always above the rights of property. In my judgment, two such great leaders as Senator ELIHU ROOT, so consummate in knowledge of corporation law and corporation rights, and yet conscious of the rights of the people, and Senator DOLLIVER, representing so completely the interests and wishes of the people, could have come together any time in the past two years and made a draft for three or four statutes which would have ushered in and made the laws of the land what the people are so imperatively demanding and will continue to demand until their will and wish are complied with. The great, greedy 1 per cent, or the capitalists, who constitute not over 1 per cent of the population of this country, who have had their way too much and too long, will not much longer continue to defeat the people in their determination to readjust the Government to a basis absolutely just to all interests alike.

On the personal side of Mr. DOLLIVER'S life I could easily fill a whole page of the Register and Leader—or even all its pages—and I will venture to add something on that line to an article already too long. His life readily groups itself into four stages:

First, the stage of his boyhood and education in Virginia, where under the loving care of his father and mother he was making the struggle of the son of a poor preacher for a liberal education. Those who knew the parents know that he had an inspiration from them both which was almost divine, for both were of the best of earth; and those who knew him intimately, and especially in his early days in Iowa, know his love for them amounted almost to worship. His father—who as a minister rode the lonely circuits of the mountain districts of Virginia, carried more than even the gospel of the Master to a frontier people—was himself a great man, and a man who was so devout and so human himself as to be one of the greater pioneers in the vast and faithful work and uplift of the people of the early Republic. Much of the rare power of oratory Senator DOLLIVER possessed came from his own devout nature, inherited from his parents, with whom the Bible was always the highest platform not only for human thought, but for human action; and nearly every great speech he ever made was informed and made, nearly inspired, by apt and irresistible quotations from its sacred pages. In a speech that he delivered on Abraham Lincoln, on Lincoln's birthday, before the Republican Club of this city four years ago, he naturally found in the character and career of Lincoln an inspiration to quote from the highest summits of the Bible; and it was to such splendid and impressive effect as to elicit from President Roosevelt, who was present, the remark to me that he thought it was the greatest and most impressive speech he had ever heard. It may be said that the church gave Senator DOLLIVER to public life and to his great work on such a high plane, and also made him to be what the Tribune, of this city, calls him to-day, "an orator without a rival in either of the great parties."

The second stage of his life begins when, fresh from college and law schools, he started West to earn his own living and to aid in the support of his father, who had been largely incapacitated by the loss of a leg. He stopped first in Illinois one winter to teach school; but nature and temperament and perhaps a higher power kept his great abilities from being long employed within such narrow borders, and he went on to Iowa to practice law at Fort Dodge and to enter into the great career which he finally achieved. The gates of Iowa never opened in more of fortune to the State than when they opened to admit this young pioneer from Virginia. The record to be written now, the record which will grow constantly larger as time will pass, is that while a great State has bestowed its greatest honors upon this poor young immigrant since that time, he has in return bestowed still greater honors upon it in the theater of the wider field of the whole world. For in faithful and mighty measure he has added to the respect, the admiration, and the love which the world has come to have for the Commonwealth now so great, then just rising into its promise of challenging greatness.

I first saw Mr. DOLLIVER late in the winter of 1884 at Fort Dodge, where I had gone to see Gov. Carpenter, the lovable man who was one of the noblest and the best of Iowans. The governor, who knew the Register was always watching for new stars arising in Iowa, told me of DOLLIVER and said he was the making if not already the greatest orator in the State, and asked me if I would not stay over until the next day and he would have a meeting called in the courthouse with a speech by DOLLIVER. I told him my engagements required I should be in Des Moines that night, and the governor started to take me to the train in his buggy from the farm. As he was driving through a street in Fort Dodge he suddenly said, "There's DOLLIVER now," and drove up to a group of men working in the street; and there, working in a ditch in the street, in his bare feet, working out his poll tax, was the future great Senator. It was typical of the man, for while he had not yet come to have any income as a lawyer only of the slenderest size, he was meeting his duty as a citizen by manual labor, which honored him, and living in his little law office, with an oil stove, doing his own cooking, and sending all possible money that he could earn and save to his father in Virginia. Later in the same year, when he was brought into the national campaign and won such an instant and complete victory as an orator and won so much praise, Chairman Jones, of the national committee, expressed to me this fear that such great and high praise would turn the head of any young man. I told him then of this instance in Fort Dodge and said that a man who started in life in such a manner would always be secure against any mere flattery or any undue vanity.

This day in Fort Dodge Mr. DOLLIVER met me in such a manner, and his greatness was so brimming in him even then and in everything he said, that I was immediately won by him, and there began one of the two or three most cherished intimate friendships of my life, and which through all the passing years has changed only to deepen and increase. I at once decided to stay over and hear the new orator and see the new star in his own orbit. He more than justified Gov. Carpenter's ardent measurement of him.

In March or April he had our State convention to elect the Iowa delegates to the national convention of 1884. Gov. Carpenter and I used our influence with the State committee and had Mr. DOLLIVER chosen temporary chairman of the State convention. There he made the famous speech which not only surprised and delighted the convention and all the people of Iowa, but also captured the country at large and was published in many papers. From that day DOLLIVER'S fame and future high usefulness were certain and secure.

In that year Iowa gave its vote and its heart to Blaine. I was made the member for Iowa of the Republican committee—one of the generous State's many gracious kindnesses to me—with Mr. Blaine finally insisting that I should go to New York for the campaign as a member of the executive committee, which I reluctantly did, although I then not only had no ambition for national reputation, but instead had firmly resolved never to leave or to desire a larger field than Iowa, a resolve which I have often regretted I had not always kept. In a conference between the committee and Mr. Blaine in choosing the larger speakers for the national campaign, I suggested DOLLIVER, and the other members, mainly eastern men with the usual prejudice against the West, thought it personal partiality on my part. But Mr. Blaine spoke up and said, "If that's the young man who has been showering Iowa and the West with epigrams, we certainly want him, for his speeches show him to be a man of rare and unusual power." So DOLLIVER was invited. He reached New York while the executive committee was in session, and I had him brought into the room and introduced him. He had the natural timidity of a young man among famous men, knowing that he was under critical and none too friendly inspection. After he left the room I said to Mr. Hobart (afterwards Vice President): "You are to have an opening meeting to-morrow night at your home in Paterson in the big skating rink which you say holds 10,000 people and will be filled. All of us on the committee here will accept an invitation to spend to-morrow night with you and attend the meeting. I want you to invite DOLLIVER to speak there. If he does not then more than prove all that I have said of him, he will go back to Iowa." We went; the great rink was filled to overflowing. Hobart presided, and we as fellow committeemen sat around him as wax figures for the occasion. Hobart put up other speakers, and gradually the audience began to melt away. I finally told him if he wanted to save his audience to put up DOLLIVER, and I would guarantee that no more people would go out, and that in less than five minutes the applause he would receive would call back the people who had left. He reluctantly consented and put DOLLIVER up, and in less than five minutes he had captured the audience and New Jersey and, through the papers printing his speech next day, the country at large. After that that national committee could not send DOLLIVER to one in a hundred of the places he was wanted and asked for. Mr. Blaine asked to see him, and at once took him on a special train with him for an oratorical tour of New Jersey and Pennsylvania. This completed the final arrival of DOLLIVER in the lists of national fame, and from that time until the close of the campaign he was kept away from Iowa and in the national service until the election.

His first great personal feat in American politics was in the great speeches he made in Ohio in the campaign made that year for the State election in October for the election of a State ticket. His campaign was so inspiring and his persuasion so infectious that he gave new life to the Republican Party there, and it was admitted that he had saved the State from what had been expected to be a Democratic victory. Mr. Blaine always held Mr. DOLLIVER not only in great admiration for his rare ability as an orator and leader, but also in much of personal affection; and gradually and quickly the young western leader came to be greatly beloved of all the principal party leaders of the Nation.

The third stage in Mr. DOLLIVER'S evolution into a great career was in the years when, in 1889, he was elected as a Member of the lower House of Congress; his early rise to unusual power and influence in that body; his four reelections to the House, and the constant increase of his prestige and usefulness; his large participation as a member of the Ways and Means Committee in the creation of the McKinley tariff law, where he learned much of the information which he used in the debate on the Payne bill; and finally, after he had become one of the accepted leaders and greater orators of the party, his transference to the Senate, where he came into such close and intimate relations with Senator Allison, so loved and honored alike by all Iowans and all Americans, who accepted him as a colleague who could give as well as receive strength and help. He grew to have still more affection for the venerable leader than he had had before, and proved a very Jonathan and a very pillar of strength to him in his later years, extending to such a defense of him in that last pathetic year of life and such a defense of equally unexampled devotion and strength as no Iowa man had ever before been given. DOLLIVER'S campaign in Iowa for Allison's last election was such a demonstration of strength and courage as no other Iowa man has ever shown. Himself a man of the newer generation and the new order, instead of going the safe and easy way of affiliation with his own generation and making sure of his future without doubt or hardship, he voluntarily and gladly took up the cause of a great and noble man, who at best was very near the end of his days, and cheerfully and gladly gave him his support, and such a support and based on such devotion, and despite the very possible sacrifice of himself, as not one man in a million would ever give even to his dearest friend. This one act of lofty courage and fidelity should and will in a State with hearts such as the people of Iowa have, of itself make the name of DOLLIVER forever sacred and loved by the people who honored him so much and so often, and who in loyal and grateful return honored them still more.

The fourth stage in DOLLIVER'S life, or last, covers the closing years, which will now always have an historical pathos which will be inseparable from his undying fame. It covers the two years of his greatest achievements, of his proudest victories in his service to the people, which will always be a model because of its usefulness and purity as well as for the luster of its legitimate greatness.

In the widening circle of his growing power he had come into the consecrated approval of the people of the whole Nation—a people who had already come to look upon him as the desirable and inevitable man for the supreme place in the near future. He had made his way to this high place purely by his own ability. He had such help alone as the inspiration of the devoted love and help, first of his parents, and next of his wife, who was so worthy of him in all his greatness and of his ambitions and purposes, and the loving help of his noble sisters, and all the others who found a new joy and pride in being admitted to his friendship and unchanging affection. His own sad and sudden death recalls to those who knew and loved the brother, too, for his many noble qualities, the sudden death of his brother Victor.

For Iowa it may be said—and I remember as I say it many thousands and tens of thousands of good hearts I personally know in the State, a State I love as I love no other—that in none of its many acts which it has rendered for the benefit of the world and the service of mankind has it honored itself more than in giving to the public service of the Nation and to the cause of the people a man so pure and so great and so useful as Senator DOLLIVER.

In the closing years of my life, when, with everyone who is nearing the end of the long journey, I find a greater and yet more radiant and revealing light shining on the acts of all men, I discover even in the earlier public acts of Senator DOLLIVER more of useful contribution to the public good and more of lasting benefit to his fellow men for all time than I discovered then. They were the forerunning prophecies and promises of the greater things to come in his ministry and help since for the waiting millions whom Lincoln consecrated with the now sacred title of "the plain people." And as I see now the fruitage of the great results of those early efforts, and review the unselfishness and the purity as well as the greatness of his life and his work, I find it one of the proudest titles I can set down for myself that I was given to gain the confidence and the unchanging friendship and affections of the man whose name, not only in the years but in the centuries to come, will be quoted as that of one of the Americans most to be quoted for the emulation of all young men, and to the honor of a Republic which could develop such a man for the larger service of his own and all other people. Plainly, and from the first, he "lifted his eyes unto the hills, from whence all strength cometh."

JAMES S. CLARKSON.

AFFAIRS IN ALASKA.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I present an article by Rex Beach, taken from the Saturday Evening Post, on "What is the matter with Alaska?" I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks for the printing of certain matter. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH ALASKA?

What is the matter with Alaska? It is generally agreed that she is sick, but no one seems to have diagnosed her ailment. Much has been written to prove her invalid condition; publishers have prescribed their own patent medicines; consultations have been held in Washington—which broke up when the doctors began to pull hair and gouge and accuse each other of unprofessional conduct—but no one has thought to ask the patient herself how she feels or exactly where the pain lies.

As a matter of fact there is nothing serious the matter with Alaska. The trouble lies with her self-appointed doctors. She suffers from overadvertising.

There is a certain industrious body of men in the theatrical profession who have never trod the boards and who never intend to, whose duty it is to sit at roll-top desks and dream out advertising schemes. They are the ones who meet incoming steamships with brass bands, rob prima donnas of diamonds, arrange milk baths for leading ladies, and marry chorus girls to dukes. They worship space, not truth; 10 sticks of type are to them more sacred than the Ten Commandments. Whether Alaska's press agents have been unscrupulous or blindly enthusiastic matters little; she has been vastly overtouted. She has been boomed as a land overflowing with milk and honey, a land inlaid with gold and with billions in coal and minerals, from which we common people are kept by the strong-armed, hairy-chested trusts. Certain magazines are, in the main, responsible for this misconception; also certain individuals who have endeavored to serve their own political ends by wholesale exaggeration. The former are in need of sensations—the latter are quacks; neither have paid much attention to truth or to actual conditions. It is, perhaps, unchivalrous to liken anything so harsh and cold and tough as Alaska to a music-hall artist; yet she has been exploited in quite the same theatrical manner. She has seen her rhinestone bracelet described as a necklace of blue-white diamonds, her rabbit skins changed to sable and ermine, and her voice heralded as a thing of surpassing richness. Yet, when it came her time to go on and do her turn, the stagehands began to fight and she was forced to wait in the wings. She knew she was a headliner, for she had read all the advance stuff; but the audience was interested in the rough-and-tumble and forgot all about her. The operator in the balcony turned his spotlight on the commotion; and when it was all over the crowd decided it was time for them to go home. The next day the police closed the house.

It was a very bad opening, but she still believes she can sing if she gets a chance. Her press agents continue to enthuse over that diamond necklace, they have discovered a plot to steal her furs, they give her all the publicity the papers will stand—but she can not eat press notices; she wants work. She has enough pawn tickets now to paper a skating rink, but if she is not booked before long she will not have sufficient wardrobe left to appear in when she does get a job.

Much has been said lately about the conditions and needs of Alaska; there has been also a certain amount of speculation as to who owns it—the corporations or the Government. Both claimants have been heard; in fact, everybody has been heard except the Alaskans themselves, but no decision has been rendered. I claim to be a "sourdough" by temperament and experience if not now by actual residence; consequently I believe I know something about the country and its needs, just as I know something about the fellows who live there and their wants.

Comfortable gentlemen who have never been north of the Canadian border have decided that, first of all, Alaska needs a new form of government; but they are hung up over the question of whether it shall be territorial or commissional. As a matter of fact, Alaskans are so restless under present conditions that most of them don't care a tinker's hoot whether their officials are appointed from Washington or chosen by cutting the high card in the Bucket of Blood Saloon, at Fairbanks, so long as they get some land laws. That is what they need most—land laws and a settlement of the coal controversy; for the latter is the key to the whole situation and until it is disposed of they can not develop their Territory on a permanent basis. In addition to this they want capital and transportation, which in a way are synonymous. Neither of these is possible, however, until definite and lasting titles to the land are established.

When De Lesseps was digging at the Panama Canal the Paris office at one time sent him a shipload of snow shovels. With equal judgment Congress has saddled Alaska with a set of hot-weather coal regulations that are quite as useless as were the snow shovels at Colon. There are ample laws in Alaska to safeguard the life and liberty of the inhabitants and, on the whole, her form of government is probably as good as anything Congress could or would give her until she is ready for complete territorial government—which is not yet. But her land laws are in bad shape.

Alaska sends a Delegate to Congress; but why she does so nobody seems quite to know, for he has no vote and is about as useful to his constituents as a tailfeather to a frog. Under the present inadequate, chaotic, and conflicting land laws a large part of her development has ceased. Unless something is done quickly she will go broke, not in minerals, perhaps, but in men and in ambition, which are quite as valuable.

I said in starting that she has been overadvertised. I might better have said overguessed, for very little is known about her, up to date. This is no attempt to minimize her resources, which are even now considerable, although nothing like what some enthusiasts claim. I do intend, however, to show that under existing conditions she offers a most unattractive field both for the poor man and for the rich man, and until these conditions are improved neither men nor money will flow northward. She will require more capital and more men than any country we know of, yet opportunities for the prospector are not now what they were a few years ago; and the capitalist who would invest there under existing restrictions would certainly need to have his head thumbed by a phrenologist.

Let us begin with those resources of which we have heard so much and find out what they really are. Gold in large quantities has been coming from the placer fields for 10 years, but the supply from proved camps is rapidly decreasing and, unless the Iditarod surpasses expectations, Alaska has certainly reached the maximum of her placer production for an indefinite period. So far, the production of quartz has been confined to the coast range of mountains and almost entirely to the southeastern part of the country, but after 30 years of lode mining there are in all of Alaska, which has an area one-fifth the size of the United States, but four—possibly five—gold-quartz mines on a dividend-paying basis; and three of these are on Douglas Island. There are others that produce some ore and there are many prospects, for hope runs high in the Northland; but smelter checks are very rare.

Copper is found in various sections of the country, but cheap prices for that metal have closed down all low-grade properties. There are but three high-grade copper mines along the entire coast—one is shipping considerable ore, another is shipping a little, the third is reported to be worked out and upon the verge of abandonment.

The completion of the Copper River & Northwestern Railway this year will afford transportation for a large copper-bearing district toward the interior, a section about which much has been written and more has been predicted as to richness and extent, but in which little ore had been developed. The Bonanza mine, owned by the Alaska Syndicate—meaning the Morgan-Guggenheim combination—is the only one with sufficient ore in sight to ship.

TOP-HEAVY FINANCE IN ALASKA.

It is worthy of note here that when the Guggenheims bought the Bonanza it was claimed that there were from $25,000,000 to $60,000,000 of copper ore blocked out and measured up; in consequence, this district was heralded as the coming source of the world's supply. As development has progressed, however, these figures, perhaps owing to the Alaska climate, have shrunk amazingly, until they now total but $6,000,000. The Alaska Syndicate expects to reap a profit out of the Bonanza, over and above the mine expense, of about $5,000,000; but, in order to do so, it is spending $20,000,000 for a railroad to haul the ore after it is mined. Now, though it is true that this road will serve the rest of the copper belt if it ever develops into a copper belt, and will also serve the Bering River coal fields if they are opened up on a shipping basis, nevertheless its construction represents such a top-heavy investment that level-headed Alaskans have been badly frightened for some time lest the "Morgan-heims" get discouraged and quit, thus putting an end to the only railway project of consequence in the entire Territory and seriously retarding the development of the country at large. No one seems to know precisely where or how they are going to get back that other $15,000,000 after the Bonanza is worked out, and it is public gossip that, had George W. Perkins, Mr. Morgan's partner, gone to Alaska prior to the summer of 1909 and before so much money had been actually sunk in the enterprise, the syndicate would never have gone ahead with its $20,000,000 railroad, but would have closed down and waited at least for a settlement of the coal controversy.

One thing seems to be certain from all that can be ascertained, namely, that the "Morgan-heims" are not overdelighted with their railroad investment as it stands to-day, regardless of all we hear to the contrary; realizing, as they must, that it is certain to be many years before any Alaska trunk railway can pay for itself. The ultimate financial success of such a road will even then hinge upon many contingencies that no man is wise enough to forecast with any surety.

I have no doubt that even this plain statement of fact will shift me from the ranks of the muckrakers and gild me with Guggenheim gold; but, to an observer who is familiar with the real, not the magazine, resources of Alaska, the actual and not the theoretical conditions, it seems that the Morgan-Guggenheim outfit has been very neatly and very effectually promoted. No one who is posted seems to think they would do it all over again; and yet their investment promises to result in the one and only permanent improvement that Alaska will have for some time to come, the one and only means of transportation that will afford a medium for development.

To return to her inventory of resources—a workable deposit of gypsum has been opened up on Baranof Island and a marble quarry on Prince of Wales Island. Tin, zinc, lead, and antimony are found, but not in quantities to pay.

The furs of Alaska amount to practically nothing and, broadly speaking, the timber is fit only for local use. The fish, however, are of great value and with proper husbanding will constitute a source of wealth for generations. The fisheries are and have been for years very well developed. Large areas of coal are found in all sections of the country, but only in the Bering River and Matanuska fields is it found in such location and of such grade as to make it of general commercial value. Surface showings indicate large veins in both of these fields, but no development work has been done and all estimates of tonnage are wild guesses.

Engineers are agreed that the quality of the coal is such as to give it wide commercial use and the quantity is sufficient to justify the construction of railroads from tidewater, although the surface in both regions indicates extensive faulting, which will diminish the minable areas. More than 900 coal claims have been located in these two fields, but not one has been patented and no coal whatever can be mined until some of the claims are allowed to go to patent or until Congress provides another way of getting at the matter.

FARMERS WITHOUT A MARKET.

Let us take the one remaining resource, which is agriculture. In certain favored spots experimental stations have grown lovely lettuce, fat potatoes, crisp radishes, and other nice, toothsome vegetables, together with some hay and certain grains; but in the whole length and breadth of the country, which, as we have said, is one-fifth that of the United States, there is not one thrashing machine and not more than half a dozen mowing machines. Alaska offers a wide diversity of soil and climate, to be sure; but the population is so scattered that farming does not pay, and, even if transportation is provided and a permanent population grows up, it is extremely doubtful if she will ever be able to grow more than enough for her own consumption. I have heard it stoutly maintained that her agricultural possibilities are equal to or better than those of Norway and Sweden, but no sensible Alaskan believes it. He would dearly love to see farming put on a paying basis, but he is perfectly willing that somebody else should try it.

It seems reasonable to forecast that Alaska will never export enough produce to make farming pay, but with the building of roads and the settlement of her mineral areas she will develop a market of her own and thus make agriculture profitable to a limited extent. If it were undertaken now on a large scale, however, the farmers would have to eat their own fodder; not until the country's present needs are satisfied will these conditions change.

To summarize briefly: Her fisheries and her placer gold fields are producing their maximum; there are five dividend-paying gold-quartz mines and two established copper mines, with a third about to be opened up; some gypsum and marble. Add to this her coal and her uncertain farming possibilities, and we have a very meager total.

It is rather a disappointing outlook in view of all we have read about Alaska's untold wealth, our heritage in her precious metals and our per capita share in her many hidden treasures. As a matter of cold fact, the developed resources of the country are at present incapable of sustaining a larger population than she now possesses—some 37,000 white people—and when the placer mines are exhausted to the point where the individual miner can not work his ground at a profit she will lose 10,000 of those 37,000. That may occur at any time, and once it comes to pass there will cease to be many opportunities for the poor man. Even now it is a country essentially for large capital, well directed.

Whatever the resources may be in the future, it is certain that the tremendous exaggeration that now prevails can do nothing for the permanent and lasting benefit of the country. Unless the truth is known and capital is encouraged in every proper and legitimate way, we can look for very little advancement during this generation.

At present the crying need is for proper and efficient land laws and an immediate settlement of the coal dispute. President Taft advocates a commission government, but it will do no great good to appoint a body of six or a dozen men to supplant the present governor, unless they are given more power than he has. Unless they are clothed with authority to administer the public domain they will merely fill the place that is now occupied very successfully by one man. It is hardly to be expected that Congress will ever part with its authority over the public land, hence it is up to that august body to get busy on a proper code and let the actual form of government take care of itself.

In puncturing these iridescent bubbles I do not wish to give a wrong impression. Alaska is rich, but her riches are locked away securely, and it will take long years of extensive and expensive development to get at them. The poor man will continue to delve with pick and shovel at the gold placers, and his contribution to the total output will not be insignificant, but so far as real, permanent, and extensive values go there are, so far, but three proved sources, namely, the fisheries, the lodes, and the coal fields. The fisheries are well developed, and are producing about $10,000,000 a year; the lodes are yielding in a few places, as we have seen above, and show promise of increasing their production as the country grows; but the coal, which it is claimed contains the greatest value of all, is the one resource that will afford the country permanence. Under present conditions, not only the exploitation of the lode deposits, but also the establishment of railroads depends largely upon the development of this fuel. No coal, however, can be mined until Congress or the Department of the Interior takes some action.

Before we inquire into the real commercial value of the Alaskan coal deposits let us first sketch a brief history of them and explain how they came to be tied up to the serious detriment of the country. To begin with, let us eliminate the vast deposits that are scattered over the interior, the practical value of which at present is absolutely nothing, and confine ourselves to the Bering River and Matanuska fields, which seem to contain the best qualities and are for various reasons the only ones possible of development. The former field is within about 100 miles of a deep-water harbor, the latter, approximately 200 miles. In extent they are much larger in the aggregate than the Pennsylvania fields, and they contain both soft and hard coals—bituminous and anthracite—some of which is equal to the best found in Pennsylvania or Wales. It is the only coal fit for naval purposes found on the Pacific coast.

In June, 1900, Congress, realizing that some coal regulations were necessary in Alaska, passed an act extending to that country the provisions of the United States laws. It was some time before the nature of this merry jest became apparent. The United States laws provided that none but subdivided, marked-out, and plotted land could be taken up by a claimant. At that time there was not a land survey in the whole of Alaska, and the rest of Federal action in that bedeviled land has been of a piece with that grim and egregious folly. The next joke was nearly as humorous, for it provided that only tracts of 160 acres could be located, and took no account of the impossibility of attempting to work a tract of that size in the wilderness. That was as possible and profitable as truck gardening on a city lot in the Sahara.

Under this second act, passed in 1904, about 50,000 acres were located, boundaries fixed, notices filed, surveys made, and in many cases the purchase price of $10 an acre was paid. Alaska is a difficult country. Supplies and tools with which to prospect were packed on men's backs from 20 to 200 miles, trails were cut, cabins built. Surveyors do not work for nothing, and I am told that the development and survey of a single 160-acre tract often cost $5,000. In the Matanuska district $300,000 or more was spent in this way and over $4,000,000 on a railroad. In the Bering River fields an equal amount was expended. Then, on November 12, 1906, all coal lands in Alaska were withdrawn from entry and so far as coal development was concerned everything stopped abruptly.

This is now A. D. 1911 and the coal is still locked up. The Alaska Central Railway is rapidly becoming a streak of rust; the coal claimants are hustling grubstakes and waiting for Congress to do something.

Let us see why these coal lands were withdrawn. According to the law of 1904, under which most of the land was staked, a locator was required to swear that he had made no promise or deal beforehand either to sell or receive money for his coal land; in short, that it was intended for himself, and himself alone. Theoretically that sounds very fine as a conservative measure; but, inasmuch as it is a physical and financial impossibility to open a profitable coal mine on 160 acres, particularly in a wilderness without railroads or other transportation, the parties seeking to enter the land began to think of consolidations. This was prohibited by law and made perjurers out of nine-tenths of the miners. The abuse of the power of attorney law also made itself felt and the locators began charging each other with fraud. The titles in both fields became so obscured in an atmosphere of suspicion that President Roosevelt ordered the withdrawal of all public lands in Alaska on which "workable coal is known to occur."

That happened in November, 1906, more than four years ago, but not one of those disputed claims has gone to patent. There were many bona fide, honest locators among the total number, but the innocent and the guilty have suffered alike.

In 1908, to be sure, Congress, realizing the injustice that was being done, passed another act designed to relieve coal locators from any possible fraud by reason of an ultimate intention to work more than 160 acres in conjunction, and permitting the grouping of 2,560 acres. Now, there are some who stoutly maintain that even this amount of land is insufficient to justify the expenditures for plant and equipment under the existing physical conditions; but, whether it is or whether it is not, there is another proviso in the law that renders it absolutely futile so far as permanent development of the coal goes.

COAL IN PLENTY BUT NONE TO BURN.

The act provides that, should two or more of these groups be thrown together, should there be any combination in restraint of trade, any selling of coal by a joint understanding, or anything in the nature of a trust, the title to the land shall be forfeited to the Government. Now, the object aimed at is commendable; but, as may be shown in a few words, it effectually bars out the necessary capital to open up the fields—for who would put money into an Alaskan property the title to which might be invalidated at any moment by some act of the men in control, unknown to their backers? An attempt has been made to have this part of the law changed so that the acts above mentioned should constitute a criminal offense and thus serve the purpose equally well, but so far this attempt has been without success.

This, then, is the status of the coal resources of Alaska: Ten years have elapsed and no entries have been perfected. Twice the law has been amended to permit the perfection of titles, but both attempts have failed in their purpose; and meanwhile, with enough good coal underfoot to supply the entire Pacific coast for a thousand years—to quote certain authorities—Alaska imports a million dollars' worth of poor coal every year from British Columbia.

If the existing claims, or those of them that prove valid, are allowed to go to patent, or if Congress will enact laws permitting the mining of coal, the industry is capable of supplying a means of livelihood for several thousand people; and, in addition, it will aid vitally in the mineral development of the country at large.

It is laughable to think of a country that is so badly in need of transportation forcing a railroad to import inferior coal from Canada, at a high price, when its own tracks run over coal beds of infinitely better quality. It is more laughable still—to every one except the railroad people—to think that they have to pay a stumpage tax of 50 cents a cord for all the timber they cut for fuel along their right of way. On the Yukon there is bituminous coal at the edge of the river, but the steamers have to use cord wood cut from the banks or import fuel oil from California, several thousand miles distant. There is a little railroad up in the Tanana Valley that burns wood in a most wasteful manner and pays $15 a cord for it plus the stumpage. Part of the roadbed is laid over an extensive bituminous coal field, but if a fireman picked up a lump of that outcrop to throw at a hen ptarmigan there would be a riot that could be heard in Patagonia.

This winter the residents of Alaska, many of whom believe that they own the best coal on the Pacific coast, are paying from $10 to $15 a ton for a British Columbia grade at Cordova and from $25 to $30 a ton at Fairbanks. Those coal miners who can't afford to buy coal are chopping wood and paying the benign Government a tax of 50 cents a cord for the blessed privilege. It is a remarkable situation and one demanding immediate relief if for no other reason than for the sake of Alaska herself. She needs fuel more than any section of our country and she surely ought to have the right to burn her own coal.

HONEST MINERS IN HARD LUCK.

Suppose a real-estate owner agreed to sell you a piece of land and entered into a contract of sale at a fixed price, and you made him a substantial payment on account. Then suppose you came around to pay the balance and take title, but he refused to carry out his agreement and insisted upon keeping the land. What would you do? If you considered it a good purchase you would probably try to force him to live up to his contract, or perhaps sue him for damages. Suppose, in addition, he not only refused to pass title, but also refused to return you the money you had given him. Would that make you sore? That is precisely what our Government has done with the fellows who located the Alaska coal measures. Of course there were certain fraudulent entries, and these should be refused; but there are others that were made in good faith, and those men ought to have their land. There are honest miners even in Alaska, and conservation doesn't spell highway robbery.

It is generally understood that Alaska's coal is of supreme commercial importance to the whole Pacific coast, and that there is a plot on foot to gobble it all. It is claimed that, once this coal is opened up, we shall see a reduction in the cost of fuel from Seattle to San Diego, unless the corporate interests combine to hold up the price; and that by exacting a substantial royalty from the coal tonnage our Government will realize a fabulous sum for us fellows who sit around at home. This seems to be of a piece with the general exaggeration and misconception that prevail about Alaska resources in general.

As a matter of fact, Alaska coal will have to compete with California oil, of which there is an abundant supply, and the cheaper grades of Washington and British Columbia fuel. Unless workable deposits of iron ore are found easily accessible to the Pacific coast it will take many years to develop a market for Alaska coal. California oil is being delivered at the Treadwell mine in southeastern Alaska at a coal equivalent of $2.80 a ton; and it is estimated that the Bering River coal will cost $2 a ton on top of the ground, leaving transportation, profit, and royalty still to be reckoned with. By many it is doubted if Alaska coal could be landed in the State of Washington at a cost low enough to warrant its use for steaming purposes, although the hard coal would doubtless find a ready market for household uses. On the other hand, a geological expert estimates that there is a present annual market for some half million tons of Alaska coal and another market for, say, a million tons, in which it would have at least equal chances with that from other fields. He says, however, that these estimates are little more than guesses, and it is worthy of note that in his reports he has used exceedingly low freight rates and low fixed charges.

To eliminate tiresome statistics, it seems that Alaska coal is available for local consumption and will have a limited market on the Pacific coast provided cost of production can be made as low as it is in the United States; but the wild estimates of the wealth represented by those deposits are quite on a par with the usual method of reckoning profits in the poultry business. One can buy six hens and a rooster and then, with the aid of a pencil and pad, figure himself out to be the owner of 10,000 laying fowls in the course of two years. It doesn't work out in practice, however, and neither does the Alaska coal.

As a matter of fact, that fuel will need to be worked on a conservative basis by capital that is content with a low rate of interest, and a market will have to be gradually built up. Our per capita share of that "heritage" will figure out mighty small.

This is no excuse, however, for keeping it locked away securely in the Interior Department, nor does it give Congress any cause for permitting the continuance of the present land laws. There is one reason outside of Alaska's needs that should be sufficient in itself to put an end to the apathy regarding the matter—and that is the need of our Navy. Alaska has the only coal on the Pacific coast fit for naval use, and yet the fuel burned in our Pacific ships is hauled from West Virginia, Pennsylvania, or Wales, around the Horn, at a cost greatly to exceed the cost of coal from that north country.

It is sufficiently humiliating to a proud Nation to realize that in case of war she would have to buy foreign ships to transport coal to her battleships; but why rub it in by making her buy foreign coal with which to load those foreign bottoms when she has plenty of her own close at hand? No fleet can be permanently stationed on our Pacific coast without a vast extravagance for want of Alaska's fuel. Our prosperity and safety demand that it be developed.

TEN YEARS ON THE OPERATING TABLE.

Mr. Carnegie, Mr. TAWNEY, and others scoff at the possibility of war with—let us say—Japan, for instance, stating that we are amply safeguarded by our isolation; and yet we are not isolated at all toward the West. On the contrary, we are spraddled out all over the map and are spending $400,000,000 to build the Panama Canal, largely for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of our Navy. We are fortifying that canal, moreover, and we are fortifying Hawaii also. Other authorities, perhaps, as intelligent as the ones just mentioned, are equally certain that we shall have war with Japan. While we are spending countless millions to build naval strongholds in the Pacific, why not develop enough coal for the Navy to burn and save sufficient money in the process to fortify the Alaska coaling stations? It will help to put us on a war footing and aid in developing a country that is badly in need of assistance. Alaska may some day prove the key to the strategic mastery of the Orient. At any rate, economy, if not patriotism, should compel us to burn her coals in our battleships' boilers.

Alaska's population has grown from a few score Americans to about 40,000; her trade, from a bare nothing to exceed what we have with China and its open door, or the Philippines with their millions of people and their millions of cost. Traffic has grown from one steamship a month to about 30 on regular runs. Her gold and copper fields, despite the current exaggeration, compare favorably with those of our richest States. She has the largest per capita production of any community, Territory, State, or country in the world; and yet the one resource that will make her permanent is securely locked away by a governmental policy that can in no sense be put down to anything except ignorance and indifference. Congress has had the patient on the table now for 10 years, and this is a plea to quit bickering and get the operation over before she dies from the ether.

Her two prime needs are land laws and transportation. How badly she needs the latter is shown by the fact that the annual freight bill for every white man, woman, and child in the interior is $350. Her present paralysis shows the need for the former. The Interior Department must determine the validity or invalidity of the titles to the coal land, and Congress must adopt some method of disposition of the public lands in general before the population can increase. Her needs are few, but such as they are they must be attended to or her development will halt; she will remain a land of scanty and unstable population. Once a comprehensive and efficient system of land laws is determined upon, Congress must then adopt some plan for securing cheap and uninterrupted transportation to the interior, where are the only lands to which a population will attach itself. It is doubtful if any railroad through the coast range will be able to maintain itself for the first 10 years without assistance—and yet the railroads must come before the population does.

A WORD ABOUT THE LOBBY.

This does not mean that governmental aid should be offered to every meal-ticket railroad scheme that comes up, for it is this very class of enterprise that is responsible for a large share of her present troubles. A competent board of Army engineers should do the recommending; and assistance should be rendered only in a way to give open and fair opportunity to all and secure the maximum results from a minimum guaranty.

There is a perennial crop of mischievous railway promoters and lobbyists hanging about Washington, and they are worthy of a word in closing. During the past five years a number have wintered there at the expense of their victims, trying to persuade Congress to grant railroad franchises with a guaranty of interest on bonds for construction. These men have been and are opposed to any scheme for the development of transportation that does not make their own particular projects the subject of its legislative favor.

Railroads must be built; and if the Government will not build them she will be called upon to assist, for, once the land laws are properly framed and the coal made available, it is the railroads that will lend Alaska the secret of bloom—the magic of economic creation. Without them she must remain locked away in the dark of her mountain shadows, her potentiality sealed in the womb of something that never was and never will be.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 10691) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was, on page 4, to strike out lines 3 to 6, inclusive.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

H. R. 10605. An act for the relief of Aaron Wakefield; and

H. R. 22270. An act for the relief of Amos M. Barbin.

H. R. 32822. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, Executive clerk, announced that the President had, on February 24, 1911, approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

S. 574. An act to authorize J. W. Vance, L. L. Allen, C. F. Helwig, and H. V. Worley, of Pierce City, Mo.; A. B. Durnil, D. H. Kemp, Sig Soloman, J. J. Davis, S. A. Chappell, and W. M. West, of Monett, Mo.; M. L. Coleman, M. T. Davis, Jared R. Woodfill, jr., J. H. Jarrett, and William H. Standish, of Aurora, Lawrence County, Mo.; and L. S. Meyer, F. S. Heffernan, Robert A. Moore, William H. Johnson, J. P. McCammon, M. W. Colbaugh, and W. H. Schreiber, of Springfield, Greene County, Mo., to construct a dam across the James River in Stone County, Mo., and to divert a portion of its waters through a tunnel into the said river again, to create electric power;

S. 8736. An act providing for the releasing of the claim of the United States Government to arpent lot No. 44, in the old city of Pensacola, Fla.;

S. 9443. An act providing for the naturalization of the wife and minor children of insane aliens making homestead entries under the land laws of the United States;

S. 10011. An act for establishing a light and fog-signal station on the San Pedro Breakwater, Cal.;

S. 10404. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to grant a right of way through lands of the United States to the Buckhannon & Northern Railroad Co.;

S. 10431. An act to authorize the Argenta Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, Ark.;

S. 10574. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the withdrawal from public entry of lands needed for townsite purposes in connection with irrigation projects under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and for other purposes," approved April 16, 1906;

S. 10596. An act to authorize the Rainy River Improvement Co. to construct a dam across the outlet of Namakan Lake at Kettle Falls, in St. Louis County, Minn.;

S. 10690. An act providing for aids to navigation along the Livingstone Channel, Detroit River, Mich.;

S. 10757. An act to amend an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minn.," approved February 26, 1904;

S. 10836. An act to authorize the Minnesota River Improvement & Power Co. to construct dams across the Minnesota River;

S. J. Res. 131. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point two Chinese subjects, to be designated hereafter by the Government of China; and

S. J. Res. 140. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Confederate veterans' reunion, to be held at Little Rock, Ark., in May, 1911.

BATTLESHIPS FOR ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certain resolutions come over from a former day. The Chair will not lay them before the Senate because the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] requested the Chair not to do so yesterday, and the Senator from Wisconsin seems not to be present at this time.

PEND OREILLE RIVER BRIDGE IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, during the morning hour I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 10785) to legalize a bridge across the Pend Oreille River in Stevens County, Wash. A statement of a word will perhaps justify my request.

Congress enacted a law authorizing the construction of the bridge referred to in the bill. There was a lapse between the passage of the act and the approval of the plans for the bridge by the War Department. This bill is intended to ratify the act that was done pursuant to the act of Congress, but not in time. It will take but a moment to pass the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. BURKETT. What is the character of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a bridge bill.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask that the bill may go over. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has given notice to the Senate of his desire to speak this morning; and as we know our time is somewhat limited, I ask for the regular order. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the bill relative to the Canadian reciprocity agreement, for the purpose of permitting me to make some remarks thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill referred to by the Senator from North Dakota, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 32216) to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, there was laid before this body for its consideration yesterday evening a bill which, in its ultimate results, is more important not only to the agricultural interests of the country, but, to my mind, as well to the manufacturing industries of the country, than any that has been before this body since I have been a Member of it. I have tried to give the matter adequate consideration; I have tried to ascertain whether there were two sides to the question, but I have been unable to find anything but the evil side. I shall, therefore, in the brief argument which I shall present to the Senate, consider its immediate effect upon all of the agricultural interests of the country and its resulting effect upon all our other great industries.

Mr. President, several years ago, in addressing a gathering of farmers in my State upon the question of a protective tariff and their relation and duties in reference thereto, I stated in substance:

There are no people in the world to-day whose interest demands the retention of the protective tariff more than does the interest of the farmers of the Northwest. With that policy maintained in its vigor as a national principle, the agricultural horoscope shows a more resplendent field of progress and prosperity than has ever been within their fairest dreams. We are to-day upon the threshold of conditions heretofore unknown in this country. Our food-consuming population has increased enormously out of proportion to our food-producing population. In 1870 the population in this country was about two-thirds agricultural; to-day it is one-third agricultural. In less than 40 years the protective system has changed this country from a condition in which two men were producing the food for one man to eat to a condition where one man is producing the food for two men to eat. You are to-day reaping the benefit of the latter condition in the enhanced value of your every commodity. That system has built up vast cities and mighty populations to consume the farmer's products right at his door, and not from three to six thousand miles away where they must compete with the world's products. That system is rapidly reducing our surplus of food products, and we all know that it is the surplus that depresses the price of any article. A very small surplus will always greatly depreciate, and a very little deficit will always greatly increase the value of any commodity. Hence the very best and only proper way to enhance the value of our farm products is to increase the home demand until we lower and finally extinguish the surplus.

Slowly and patiently you have been working toward this end. For years you have borne the greater burden of a protective policy, with the conviction that the time would soon come when you should receive equal benefits and others should equally share in its burdens. For years, without serious complaint, you have sold your surplus in the unprotected markets of the world, while you have purchased all of your necessities in the highly protected markets of this country. In this you have manifested a patriotism for the upbuilding of your country and the cause of your fellow laborers unknown elsewhere in the whole land.

Now, when you are about to reap the full direct benefit of the policy you have by your vote sustained, will you be able to maintain that policy? I tell you frankly a great danger confronts you. And as surely as night follows day, great injury and injustice will befall you unless you are so organized that you can defend your own interest. For when our grain production in this country no longer exceeds our consumption, and our farming population for the first time in its history finds a market, not depressed by that everlasting surplus, and we are about to secure the full benefit of that condition in increased values, there will then be a cry over the whole manufacturing section of the East and in all the large cities for free food—for an untaxed loaf of bread—and the effectiveness of that cry will not be lessened by the fact that it requires less expended energy on the part of the laborer or other purchaser to buy the loaf of bread than on the part of the farmer to produce the grain that enters into it.

This is no idle fear. I tell you again that the greatest opportunity that ever knocked at the farmer's door is knocking to-day. And back of that opportunity is the jailer Fate with shackles to bind you for another century. You can open the door to this opportunity, which will emancipate you from an industrial thralldom that has existed for ages, or you can by inactivity allow the gyves to be placed about your wrists.

And, Mr. President, knowing what was coming, I have been for years pleading with the farmers of the country for such an organization as should enable them to make their wants known and their voices heard in the Halls of Congress, as every other industry in the country has been organized, and that they should be ready to meet this issue, which was sure to come.

And, Mr. President, we have had some result, I think, in my State from the addresses I have given there for the last few years in support of a protective policy, for when our legislature this winter passed a resolution condemning the proposed reciprocity agreement, which places all farm products on the free list, they emphasized the fact that our State is a protective State and that we will stand for protection, not only to the farming interests, but to every other industry in the country.

In the direction of organization they have made some progress. And wherever they have organized you have heard their protest against this greatest industry in the country being sacrificed for the benefit of practically every other industry.

And, Mr. President, when the great assault was made upon the protective policy by the whole press of the country because of our failure to put print paper on the free list in 1909, I did as much as was in my power to keep the farmers of my State from being stampeded by the violence of that assault, again and again warning them that the very first blow that would be struck by reason of this crusade would be struck at their own interests.

Mr. President, I am now coming directly to the question, Do we, the farmers of the country, need any protection? I have heard it stated here so often in discussing the question of farm prices that those prices were made by Liverpool—that erroneous proposition has been made so often that it seems that Senators and Representatives are themselves beginning to believe it. What is it that fixes the price of the food products of the world? It is not Liverpool any more than it is Hamburg or New York or Minneapolis or any other grain center in the whole world.

The world will require for the year 1911 a certain amount of food products; it will require for 1912 a certain additional amount of food products, and just so far as the world's product is equal to that demand, just to that extent will our prices be normal; but whenever the world's supply is a little short of the world's demand prices go up, and when the supply is in excess of the world's demand prices go down. So, it may be said, as a general proposition, that the price of food products is determined by the world's supply and demand, modified by the local conditions; and it is the local conditions, Mr. President, that most directly concern us.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. For a question. The Senator has studied this matter carefully. Is it not a fact that the demand for food products, not only in this country, but throughout the world, is increasing more rapidly than the supply of food products in this country and in the world, and that the disproportion has been steadily widening?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; Mr. President, a greater error could not be uttered——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am asking the question.

Mr. McCUMBER. And before I get through I am going to be able to demonstrate even to the satisfaction of the Senator from Indiana that within 10 years Canada alone will be able to produce more wheat along our own border line than we will need in the whole United States, although we should raise not a single bushel.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator did not mean it in that way I know, but he did not answer the question. My question is not in relation to the future. I am asking now on this point of the Senator's argument, whether it is not a fact that the demand for foodstuffs, not only in this country but in the world, has been increasing more rapidly than has the supply of foodstuffs in this country and the world?

Mr. McCUMBER. No, Mr. President, the world's supply has been able to meet the world's demand.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is not the question I am asking.

Mr. McCUMBER. And without any great increase in the price of any commodity.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is not the question I am asking; and, of course, if it is not agreeable to the Senator to answer I will take my seat.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is perfectly agreeable, and I shall be glad to elucidate the proposition in answer to any question that any Senator may desire to ask.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am asking for information. I think it is quite the gravest subject that confronts our own or any other country. The question is whether it is not the fact that the demand for food products in this country and throughout the world has been steadily increasing faster than the supply of foodstuffs in this country and the world—not whether the world has managed to get along, but whether it is not the case that the pressure of consumption is constantly growing heavier on the sources of production? Is not that the fact? I will state it again, so that the Senator will get it if I am unfortunate enough not to make it clear.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is it not the fact that for years the demand for food products, not only in this country but in the world, has been increasing more than the supply of food products in this country and in the world? I do not ask what the future may bring; I do not ask whether we have gotten along or whether the world has gotten along, but if that is not the fact?

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought I answered the question before, but I will answer it again. So far as the world's product is concerned, no; so far as consumption in the United States as compared with production in the United States is concerned, yes, certainly. As I stated in the beginning, we have changed this country in 40 years from a condition in which two men were producing the food for one man to eat to a condition in which one man now is producing the food for two men to eat. That answers the Senator's proposition.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator two specific questions, then? Is it not the fact that not only our exports of wheat are gradually falling off, but also that the exports of wheat from Russia, which is the next great wheat producer, are also steadily falling off?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is an academic question that follows the other.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; that is a question of fact.

Mr. McCUMBER. As long as the increase of our city population is so much greater than the increase of the rural population, of course a greater percentage of our products will be consumed in the United States and a less percentage of them will go into the export trade.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. With the Senator's permission, so far from its being an academic question, it is a specific question which can be answered by statistics, and that is whether or not not only our wheat exports are gradually diminishing, but also those of Russia. Then I will ask the Senator another question, if the Senator will just answer that "yes" or "no."

Mr. McCUMBER. Propound your other question. I have answered the first one.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not think you did, and other Senators think likewise.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then they were likewise inattentive.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Take the question of the supply of rice. Is it not a fact that the supply of rice is diminishing in comparison with the consumption of rice? I merely take those two illustrations.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; there is a greater demand, probably, for rice now. It is becoming more of a universal diet and, of course, takes the place of some other diet. For example, the consumption of wheat per capita in the United States a few years ago was about eight bushels. To-day it is only about six bushels. The reason is that we are consuming rice and other articles of that kind.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is it not true that the reason——

Mr. McCUMBER. But I intend to cover all these matters before I get through. I have now answered the Senator——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota intimates that he would prefer not to further yield.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can go into the details of that——

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me for one question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has said whereas two farmers produced food for one person originally, now one farmer produces the food for two. What is the Senator's opinion of that condition? Is it not because the profits of the farmer are less than the profits in other vocations, and if we reduce those profits, will we not reduce the production instead of increasing it?

Mr. McCUMBER. That is because the flow of population will always be in the direction of the greatest remuneration for a given amount of expended energy, and people will go to the city just as long as they can live better in the city than they can in the country.

Mr. WARREN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator a question on that?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator states as a proposition that the flow of population to the cities is because they get more wages there than they can make on the farm. Do I understand the Senator to say that?

Mr. McCUMBER. You understood the Senator to say that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well. Now, I want to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that one cause of the drainage of the country population to the cities is not at all because it gives a greater remuneration, but because of the greater variety of city life, the greater amusements of city life, the establishment of trolley systems, bringing the farmers' boys and girls into town, where they have more amusements and many things than they think they can get on the farm? Is not that recognized as one of the great causes which is gradually draining our country population to the cities and not at all because they can make more there?

Mr. McCUMBER. That argument reacts on itself.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But is it not a fact?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will give the Senator the statement and give him the facts. First, the earning capacity of the dwellers in the city is entirely out of proportion to the earning capacity of the inhabitants of the rural districts. Secondly, the farmer will be able to have practically as many of those comforts, because he is now situated generally near a city, if he has an earning capacity that will allow him to have those luxuries. As I stated before, it is because of the drift of our population into the cities that we are draining the country, and it is because there are greater remuneration, more comforts, more luxuries for a given amount of expended energy in the cities.

I want to change this condition, modify it until the earning capacity of the two sections shall be about the same.

Now, Mr. President, I would like to go on with this discussion. Senators comprehend very little about the country that is immediately north of the United States and lying west of the Red River of the North. There are five or six great Provinces, and any one of those Provinces would make five or six of the average States of this Union, and every one of them is fertile and every one of them is capable of producing a greater per-acreage crop than can be produced in the United States.

I am going to call attention to only three of them. I will take the Province of Saskatchewan, which lies right north of the western portion of my State and of eastern Montana. It has 160,416,000 acres, and it has a tillable acreage of 86,826,240 acres. I will ask that this table may be inserted without reading it all. But I want to call attention to the salient points in it.

Manitoba has 27,000,000 acres of tillable land. Alberta has 100,000,000 acres of tillable land. I think there is considerably more than that, but that is a very conservative estimate. That means 213,826,248 acres of tillable land in those three Provinces, and the average of wheat production for 1909 was 21 bushels per acre in those Provinces.

But let us suppose that all of the tillable land was cultivated and the yield only 10 bushels to the acre, and I am speaking now only of these three Provinces and the tillable sections thereof. If it was 10 bushels to the acre those Provinces alone would produce 2,138,000,000 bushels of wheat. I want to compare the size of any one of these Provinces that Senators may comprehend the danger that lies at our door with any of the great wheat-producing States in the Union.

Let us take Saskatchewan, with her 250,000 square miles. That is as large as the States of Idaho, Iowa, Illinois, and Michigan combined, all of them great agricultural States, and that Province is capable of producing as much or more than all of them combined. That is only one Province.

Here is Manitoba. It is larger than North Dakota. Here is Alberta, with its 253,000 square miles; larger than Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota combined.

I ask that this table may be printed with my remarks.

The table referred to is as follows:

Area of Provinces and States.

Provinces and States.	Number of acres.	Number of acres tillable land.	Number of square miles.
Saskatchewan	160,416,000	86,826,240	250,650
Manitoba	47,188,480	27,000,000	73,732
Alberta	162,000,000	100,000,000	253,125
Total	369,604,480	213,826,240	577,507
Minnesota	53,353,600	----------	83,365
North Dakota	45,307,800	----------	70,795
South Dakota	49,696,000	----------	77,650
Nebraska	49,606,000	----------	77,510
Idaho	54,272,000	----------	84,800
Iowa	35,856,000	----------	56,025
Illinois	36,256,000	----------	56,650
Michigan	37,705,600	----------	58,915
Wisconsin	35,865,600	----------	56,040
Total	397,919,000	----------	621,750

Manitoba larger than North Dakota.
Saskatchewan equal in size to Idaho, Iowa, Illinois, and Michigan.
Alberta equal in size to Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Again I want to call attention, by the use of a map, to what is regarded as the wheat-producing States and the wheat-producing section of Canada west of the Red River of the North. This map, with its colored sections, will give you the comparative area of the several divisions in Canada and also in the United States, with their acreage and their possibilities for the future.

Mr. President, I know something about the productive capacity of that section of the country, and I know almost all about its size and the land that can be put under cultivation. It will take you 36 long hours of riding over a fertile country from Winnipeg up to Edmonton, upon the Canadian Northern Railway. It will take you about 20 hours to ride south from there until you get down as far as Calgary, on the Canadian Pacific, and it will take you another 30 hours to get back to Winnipeg, and all of the country you will traverse is, every acre of it, tillable land. There are little bunches of timber here and there, just enough to furnish firewood for the farmers who may settle that country in the near future.

And all the grain that can be produced in these Provinces will be in competition with the grain of the United States. And while I am speaking of Liverpool prices, let me have the attention of those Senators who declare we will not suffer any by reason of placing our products on the free list. Let us see whether we will suffer or not. For the last 10 years, although we have been exporting, I think, in that time as high as 125,000,000 bushels of wheat in a single year from this country, nevertheless our range of wheat prices throughout the Dakotas and Minnesota has been on an average of 10 cents a bushel better than on the Canadian side. The Great Northern Railway runs through our State for 400 miles east and west. The main line is about 100 miles south of the Canadian border, and every 25 to 35 miles there is a spur that runs up and across the Canadian line, and there are little towns on these spurs or feeders on each side of the boundary. One instance is that of Portal and North Portal. It is all one city, with the British flag flying on the north side of the street and the American flag on the south side of the street of the same town.

Just before this reciprocity matter was reported to Congress, and having an idea of what was coming, I wrote to my friends along the border line to get the market price for wheat in every one of those towns, and I have 27 of these towns here in a table which I have prepared which shows the difference in the value of wheat and barley on one side and on the other side of the line and which will be of value in determining whether protection does protect our cereals.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I wish the Senator would read some of those figures.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am going to do that, Mr. President.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Do I understand that the prices are on one side of the street and the prices on the other side of the street in the same town?

Mr. McCUMBER. Absolutely. Go up to Portal, and if you will buy wheat on the side over which the British flag flies you will pay 10 cents a bushel for it less than you will on our side to-day, or at least that was the case until this reciprocity agreement came before Congress.

I will give the Senator the figures—and Portal is one of the towns and North Portal another. But I am not only going to give him the figures now, but I intend in another table to give him the figures that will cover every Saturday evening quotation for two years, so there can be no question about the fact that it is the rule and not the exception.

I will take December 31, 1910. Wheat in Kermit, in the United States, 90 cents a bushel. The nearest town in Canada is Estevan, where the price was 76 cents a bushel. These towns are 15 miles apart, and there is 14 cents difference in price of wheat, and the freight is exactly the same where the grain goes through the United States in bond.

January 10, Pembina, in the United States, wheat, 97 cents. In Emerson just over the line, about 4 miles apart, 82 cents—a difference of 15 cents.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; just a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I just wish to recall the first British quotation that he gave and the second British quotation that he gave.

Mr. McCUMBER. The first was Kermit, in the United States, and Esteven, in Canada.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I mean to say——

Mr. McCUMBER. Pembina, in the United States, and Emerson, in Canada.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, what was the Estavan quotation for wheat and the Emerson quotation for wheat?

Mr. McCUMBER. You want to cross them? All right; I will do that if you wish.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish the two British quotations.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have given them. Do you wish me to repeat them?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me repeat them. Kermit, the American city, wheat, 90; Estevan, the British city, 76—14 cents difference. On January 10 Pembina wheat was 97 and Emerson 82.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to ask the Senator a question there.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He gives the two British quotations for towns in practically the same neighborhood, in the same region.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In the British towns one was 76 and the other 82—a difference of 6 cents.

Mr. McCUMBER. The price quoted in the first instance was for December 31 and in the second for January 10. Wheat fluctuates. It may go down considerably in a few days.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That was within 10 days.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is the same difference on this side; but the difference between the Canadian and United States towns is about 10 cents a bushel right along. The Senator will find these figures correct and very interesting.

Now, I come to Portal. Portal, December 31, 1910; wheat, 90 cents a bushel on the American side. North Portal, across the street, 75 cents a bushel; 15 cents a bushel difference. That is the town the Senator asked me about.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. DU PONT. Does the Senator think the difference, the lower prices of Canada, are due to a restricted market?

Mr. McCUMBER. Due to what?

Mr. DU PONT. The restricted markets or a less cost of production?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is due to the tariff. That is all. The Canadians have to pay the duty, or, rather, the duty is divided, as it is on most articles, between the producer and the importer, and the difference in the market value ranges just about, on the average, half of the tariff.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does it cost more to produce a bushel of wheat immediately across the line than it does to produce a bushel of wheat just this side of the line?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Wait a minute—outside of the value of the land?

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I thought not.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very little.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is no difference in the cost of production?

Mr. McCUMBER. At least not in the Northwest section. In my section of the country that you are speaking of there is practically no difference in the scale of wages.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In the cost of production?

Mr. McCUMBER. In the scale of wages. The cost of production depends upon the cost of your machinery and your horses and your cattle and the value of the land.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Ah, the value of the land!

Mr. McCUMBER. These other things go into the cost of production, and on our side it costs a great deal more.

I shall go over one or two other items. I do not want to tire the Senate on this. I will take St. John. On December 31, 91 cents. Boisseran, on the other side of the line, 81 cents, and so I can go on through the whole table.

But here is another cereal which will be still more seriously affected by this reciprocity agreement, and that is barley.

January 10, 1911, barley in Pembina was 67 cents a bushel, and in Emerson, 4 miles from there, 42 cents, or 25 cents a bushel difference.

Barley, January 10, 1911, in Neche was 66 cents and in Gretna it was 38 cents, or a difference of 28 cents.

Mr. President, I ask to have the table inserted.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will the Senator from North Dakota allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I was very much interested year before last, when we had the tariff under discussion, in hearing a very eloquent speech from the Senator in regard to the prosperity that comes to our country from the tariff. Last year I was appointed on the committee to look into the cost of living. That condition went on from the time we began until the present, and it is no less acute. It has reached such a stage that the President of the United States has recommended this Canadian reciprocity agreement. Were we not informed during the discussion of the tariff that the tariff had no direct influence upon the cost of living, and do I understand the Senator now to be claiming that the price of wheat must be raised and the price of flour must be raised? Then what is going to become of the consumer?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am going to come directly to that point in a very few moments, and I will answer the Senator. While there was no such claim made, I will show that it would add little if anything to the price to the ultimate consumer, but it would add very much to the price to the producer, because the price to the ultimate consumer is so many hundred per cent greater than the price the farmer receives for it, and the percentage of duty that the farmer gets for it is so infinitesimal when compared with what it is retailed and sold for, that it would not and could not be a factor of any moment in influencing the cost of living.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAMBLE in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If I caught the Senator aright, he said we paid the difference of duty, and the duty is 25 cents a bushel. So the tariff duty would be 12 or 12½ cents a bushel. It takes 4 or 4½ bushels of wheat to produce a barrel of flour. The duty now is 60 cents. It costs about 60 cents on the wheat to produce a barrel of flour to get it from Canada or to protect the Americans on this side, and the difference is $1.20 a barrel extra to the consumer, and the ordinary family consumes 2 or 3 barrels a year.

Mr. McCUMBER. The duties are not added, necessarily, to the price to the producer. I have stated that it was shared, in my opinion, about equally between the producer and the immediate purchaser.

Now, I want to call attention, so as to clinch this argument, to a table which I have used before in the discussion of this matter. What is the effect of this reciprocity upon the barley crop of the United States? Do we need protection? If we are not receiving too much for our barley to-day, if we need all we are receiving, then we need the protection to hold it up to its present price.

I want to meet the proposition of those in Indiana, Ohio, and other places who represent both the farming and the manufacturing interests. I want to show to the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Ohio just how much we have suffered and how much we will suffer in our barley products by the removal of the tariff on barley. For whose benefit will the removal of duties be? For the benefit of the ultimate consumer? No; not by any means, Mr. President, but for the benefit of the American brewery interests in the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It no doubt has struck the Senator, as it has me, as being a very significant fact that in this schedule barley malt is made to bear a tariff of 40 cents a hundred pounds while the oats and the barley of the farmer must come in free.

Mr. McCUMBER. Every manufacturing interest is looked after in this agreement. Here is a table upon the rates of duty upon barley showing the amount we imported, the value during the time when barley was upon an ad valorem basis of 30 per cent, which was about 12 cents a bushel, and when it is upon a basis of two and one-half times that, or 30 cents a bushel.

In 1895 barley was then on an ad valorem duty of 30 per cent, and we imported from Canada 2,074,076 bushels. We were importing more than two millions at that time. The importations remained about two millions until 1897, when we passed the Dingley law and made the rate 30 cents a bushel, and they immediately dropped from an importation of about 2,000,000 bushels to 10,220 bushels. If you will look over the schedule of values in this table you will see that the prices of barley advanced as importations declined.

So all the way through this table there is conclusive evidence, Mr. President, that we are receiving the benefits that are derived from a protective tariff, and the whole question is, Shall we surrender those benefits for the benefit of the American brewers of the United States? I submit the table, as follows:

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have another table here which I promised the Senator from Indiana I would introduce. It gives the quotations of wheat in Winnipeg and in Minneapolis on the Saturday of every week, commencing with July 10, 1909, and ending with January 28, 1911.

It is a most interesting table to those who want information upon this subject. I will call attention to a few of the items. Remember now, this covers several years, and remember also that the Winnipeg quotations are made on Fort William delivery. Winnipeg, as I understand, has no great terminal elevators, and the grain purchased upon the Winnipeg market means delivery at Fort William, while that purchased at Minneapolis is delivered in Minneapolis. So we will probably have to deduct from the Winnipeg quotations sufficient to cover the cost from Winnipeg to Fort William. I may possibly be in error about that at the present time, but I think I am correct.

Now, we will take Saturday, August 9, 1909. The closing price in Winnipeg was $1.12. That was when wheat was rather high. At Minneapolis it was $1.28. On the 14th of August, at Winnipeg it was $1.10, and in Minneapolis $1.43. That last quotation is not a fair average, as I think there was a corner upon the Minneapolis market at that time, and the result was that the prices were out of proportion. But let us follow this down.

Coming now to 1910, on January 8 the Winnipeg price was $1.05; Minneapolis, $1.15⅝.

The next week, Winnipeg, $1.03½; Minneapolis, $1.13½.

The next week, Winnipeg, $1.03⅝; Minneapolis, $1.14⅜.

So we can follow down to the very last item, January 7, 1911, Winnipeg, 93½ cents; Minneapolis, $1.08½.

On the 21st, Winnipeg, 94½ cents; Minneapolis, $1.04⅜.

On the 28th, Winnipeg, 94½ cents; Minneapolis, $1.03⅝.

The table referred to is as follows:

[1] The day cited in each case is Saturday. [2] Holiday.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, I want to call your attention, Mr. President, to a most significant fact. On the 7th day of January there was 14 cents difference in our favor. On the 14th there was still a difference of 13 cents in our favor. On the 21st it was about the same. On the 28th, after we had a report of the effect of this reciprocity agreement and its likelihood to pass this Congress, Winnipeg went up and Minneapolis went down. Winnipeg went up about 1½ cents, from 93 to 94½, and Minneapolis went down from $1.08 to $1.03; so it made a difference of about 6½ cents a bushel, resulting from the fact that the bill had been reported to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Temporary?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; not temporary, but permanent. That is the condition now. The difference is very little at this time.

Mr. President, I want to bolster up this proposition and I want to clinch it again with indisputable argument from the trade reports as they are published in the Minneapolis Journal. I will take the Minneapolis Journal of February 11, 1911. Here is the heading:

May wheat declined 4½ cents this week. Possibility of reciprocity principal cause of severe break. Little in developments to favor the holders of wheat. Some slight improvement shown in the flour market.

The price of wheat goes down and some improvement is shown in the flour market.

I want Senators, if they will do me the honor, to listen to two or three of these trade reports. I will take the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, February 11, 1911.

Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, February 11.—The bottom broke out of the wheat market late this week and prices suffered the worst decline in several months. Early prices registered moderate declines, and this was followed by a moderate reaction. Both May and July closed Saturday below the dollar mark. This severe break was caused principally by the developments favorable to the adoption of reciprocity with Canada.

On Monday Minneapolis May opened at $1.02⅞@⅞ and early Monday sold at $1.02⅞, the week's highest price. Following there was a moderate and gradual decline to 99⅞ cents. On Wednesday and Thursday there was a moderate reaction and the near month sold up to $1.02 late Thursday. On Friday and Saturday prices suffered the sharpest break in several weeks. May sold down to 98⅜ cents, the lowest price for this contract since August, 1909. The near month fluctuated in a range of 4½ cents for the week, and the same contract in Chicago showed a difference of only 3⅜ cents. It was thought that reciprocity with Canada would have a more depressing effect on the price of Minneapolis wheat than Chicago, because of the geographical situation. The price fluctuations of this week seem to confirm this theory.

Of course it does, because the grain that enters into the Chicago market can not get to Minneapolis; the cost of freight is too high. We need all of our North Dakota and Minnesota wheat for home consumption. We can use this year considerable of the same kind of wheat from Canada, for the purpose of mixing with the different grades of the softer wheat of the Middle and more Southern States, so as to secure high standard grade of flour, and that maintains the price of wheat along the entire border at a higher rate than it otherwise would be, were it not, first, for the tariff protection; secondly, for the home demand, and thirdly, the question of freight rates, and so forth, which always enter into these matters. Let me read a little more, Mr. President:

There was little in the developments of the general situation to encourage holders of wheat. News was mostly all depressing in regard to the price of wheat. The sharp decrease in local receipts was fully offset by the increase in stocks and the heavy amount of wheat in store in local terminals. European countries are being offered wheat at prices that would not be profitable for Americans to export it.

Now, I want Senators to understand that, especially those Senators who claim that Liverpool fixes our prices.

The decline of this week has put the United States nearer an export basis, but still further declines will be necessary to allow this country to enter the European market with any profit.

What does that mean, Mr. President? Why, simply that the Liverpool market is way below our market, taking into consideration the freight, and so forth. The American wheat could not go into the Liverpool market at all prior to February 11. Now, with the present prices and the Canadian reciprocity, our wheat price will go down until it reaches the level of the world's prices. That is exactly what this dispatch signifies:

Many of the local trade were predicting that domestic prices would decline until this country was on an export basis.

That is what reciprocity means to the farmers of the United States.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the large terminal elevator companies of Minneapolis, who are buying and keeping wheat for profit, both in the wheat and in the storage, are now very anxious that this reciprocity bill should be postponed until another crop. The price of wheat has gone down so that it would entail great loss upon them if the bill should pass at this time, and they want it to go over until another crop, so that they can dispose of the wheat they bought at higher figures before the reciprocity agitation began.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is correct, Mr. President. I want now to address myself to the representatives of Michigan, whose State produces some barley, as does Wisconsin and Minnesota; some barley is produced in Indiana and considerable in Illinois, and I want to bring home to Senators here the effect of this Canadian reciprocity upon the barley market to-day. Until this reciprocity idea was brought forth barley was selling as high as a dollar a bushel in Milwaukee. Now, let us see what the effects of this reciprocal arrangement are. Here is a letter from the Cargill Commission Co., and it calls my attention to the condition of the barley market as reported by a concern in Milwaukee, the city that consumes the greatest amount of our product. In this letter the writer says:

CARGILL COMMISSION CO.,
Duluth, Minn., February 9, 1911.

Hon. PORTER J. McCUMBER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The malting barley of the United States is raised almost exclusively in Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Iowa. These States have been encouraged to go into the raising of barley because the duty of 25 or 30 cents per bushel allowed them a fair price. When the duty was 10 cents per bushel, Ontario raised practically all of the barley used by eastern maltsters—

I call attention to the table which I introduced a few moments ago, and which showed the great amount of importation during the period when the duty was about 10 cents.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator whether barley is used as an edible product for mankind, or if it is used for beer; and beer is 5 cents a glass.

Mr. McCUMBER. Practically.

When the duty was 10 cents per bushel Ontario raised practically all of the barley used by Eastern maltsters. Owing to the very light crop raised this year barley, up to the announcement of the proposed reciprocity treaty with Canada, advanced steadily, selling at $1 per bushel in Milwaukee, Chicago, and Buffalo, and 95 cents in Minneapolis.

To-day there is practically no barley market and barley is almost unsalable at a decline of anywhere from 12 to 20 cents per bushel. We quote the following letters received to-day from commission firms in Chicago and Milwaukee.

And this is most interesting reading, Mr. President, to those farmers who were receiving a dollar a bushel in Milwaukee for their product, and who will receive it never again if this agreement becomes a law.

Berger-Crittenden Co., Milwaukee, say:

The market was as dull as ever with only a few cars of Wisconsin sold. Outside of this a few cars of Minnesota were sold, whereas all the other cars carried over for the last three or four days were again carried over to-day, maltsters and brewers still holding back. We naturally will have to await developments.

What developments? The Canadian reciprocity agreement.

Here is another from the Mohr-Holstein Commission Co., of Milwaukee. They say:

Our market is perfectly lifeless—nothing doing. Not any of our maltsters would make a bid on anything to-day. It certainly does not look at all encouraging to us. The trade here feels bearish on account of the pending reciprocity treaty with Canada.

And yet speakers go through this country and assert that the farmers will not be at all affected. I take another report. This is from the Brewers' Daily Bulletin of January 31. Remember that this agreement was made public upon the 25th of January:

It is very evident that the brewers are in a waiting mood and that purchases of malt are confined to what is absolutely necessary to carry on business. The uncertainty which exists in the minds of the trade in regard to the Canadian reciprocity treaty and the possibility of its ratification has created a bearish sentiment and the trade in general is disposed to await further developments before supporting the market with buying orders.

These communcations are so pertinent to our barley interests that I am going to take time to read another:

I feel that a grave injustice is being done the farmers and grain trade. Barley, from the States named, is rarely sold for feeding purposes and is used almost exclusively for malting. If the duty is removed, it will undoubtedly shut out these Northwestern States from the eastern market and will probably reduce the price an average of fully 20 cents per bushel. Now, all of this will simply go into the hands of the brewers and as between the brewer and farmer, it seems to me that it would be an economic blunder and a political crime to favor the brewer. Barley in no sense is a food product and there can be no excuse for putting it on the free list, if the only objects in this reciprocity treaty are to cheapen the cost of living and broaden our trade with Canada.

I trust, therefore, that you can at least prevail upon Congress to omit barley from the free list. It will cause untold injury to our farmers and, as already stated, will benefit only the brewers. It would not even give cheaper beer.

Barley is selling to-day at 49 cents in Winnipeg; top grades in Minneapolis and Duluth, 84 cents; Chicago and Milwaukee, 86 cents.

Yours, very truly, A. M. PRIME.

Notice the difference. Here is a telegram that I ought to read, so that it may go into the RECORD, from a man who well knows the crop conditions and the prices. He wired me on February 15, as follows:

LEWISTOWN, MONT., February 15, 1911.

P. J. McCUMBER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

Please wire me here whether, in your opinion, reciprocity will pass the Senate or not. Twin City papers not reliable; wheat has dropped 12 cents or more per bushel at Minneapolis since reciprocity announced.

J. E. PHELAN.

And, Mr. President, remember that we are receiving a great deal less for our wheat this year than we received for the last two years, when we were raising a great deal more in the United States. Our product this year can not exceed 625,000,000 bushels of wheat, and yet it is lower than it has been for the last two or three years.

I will read another from a member of the American Society of Equity, and this is from Chicago:

CHICAGO, ILL., February 10, 1911.

Senator PORTER J. MCCUMBER, Washington, D. C.:

Wheat declined 3 cents on rumor reciprocity had passed House.

JOHN R. MAUFF.

And it had already declined 5 or 6 cents on previous rumors.

I will read another from the Society of Equity, in which the writer states:

Wheat 5 cents, barley 13 cents, oats 3 cents lower to-day than day before reciprocity agreement was made public.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have not seen the figures presented by the Senator from North Dakota, and I inquire if he will allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MCCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The quotations, I take it, as to the contraction in the market are based upon the threatened reciprocity with Canada. I tried to pay as strict attention to the Senator as I could. Do I understand that in the malt business it is complained that they can not put out their contracts for fear that this great influx of barley will tend to lower the price still further?

If I caught the Senator's argument correctly, the people on this side who produce wheat and are dealing in wheat are afraid that if this agreement goes into operation the price of wheat would break and there would not be a profit—a reasonable profit, to use the phrase used on the other side—to the producer. Is it not reasonable to suppose that if the price of wheat declines the price of flour will likewise decline, or does the Senator contend that, though wheat declines, the manufacturers of that article who put it in form for the people to eat will still maintain their monopoly of the manufactured article? That is the point I want to get at.

I just want to get this point: Will it tend to cheapen the cost of the food products to the great mass of the people who on one side do not own the farms and on the other side do not own the factories and are dependent upon the sweet will of their employers to know how much they are going to get to meet these exigencies?

Mr. MCCUMBER. I am going to answer that proposition thoroughly before I get through.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I shall be very glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I have been pointing out, Mr. President, the immediate danger to and the immediate effect of this agreement upon our farm products. Now I want to go into the question of its effect in the future. I have given you the table and the map, showing the vast area of wheat and barley producing country in Canada, whose very nearest market would be Duluth and Minneapolis.

I know that despite facts and figures we find many people in this country, some in my own State, who still contend that we not only now are not benefited, but we will not be benefited in the future by retaining our protective duties on food products. They speak without consideration. To all such let me ask this question: The demand over the country for reduction of tariff on food products is in response to the cry of the "high cost of living." Now, if our tariff on wheat, barley, rye, poultry, eggs, vegetables, and cattle is in any way responsible for this high cost of living, it must be because it raises the value or price of those commodities and because the farmer receives more for his product. If it does not raise the price, as they claim, then it certainly is doing no harm and need not be changed.

We must accept one horn or the other of the situation—either that the tariff does raise the price and the farmer gets the benefit of it, or that the removal will not reduce the cost of living. That is the first branch of the proposition.

The fact that farm products are the only ones that are placed on the free list is conclusive evidence that the framers of this reciprocity agreement conceded that our farmers were benefited by a tariff and the Canadians would be benefited by having that tariff taken off and free access given to the American market for all their food products.

Mr. President, the people of this country, and especially those who have had to do with this reciprocity agreement, have little conception of the vast product of Canada which in the near future will be dumped into this country, and the gross injustice that will be perpetrated upon the farming portion of this country. Let me show you the danger that confronts the farmer.

I want to go back to a single one of these Provinces whose wonderful advancement in the production of wheat is challenging the attention of the world. Saskatchewan in 1898 raised 4,780,000 bushels. I want Senators to comprehend the meaning of the figures I am about to quote. Saskatchewan in 1898, with only a minute portion of tillable land under cultivation, raised 4,780,000 bushels of wheat. The same Province 11 years afterwards raised 90,215,000 bushels of wheat—several thousand per cent of increase—with only about 12 per cent of her occupied land under cultivation. In 1898 that Province raised 1,500,000 bushels of oats; in 1909 it raised 105,500,000 bushels of oats; that Province raised in 1898, 182,000 bushels of barley; it raised in 1909, 7,750,000 bushels of barley; that Province raised in 1898 not a single bushel of flax; it raised in 1909, 4,448,000 bushels.

I will ask that the details of this statement be printed in my remarks without further reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The entire statement referred to is as follows:

Growth of wheat production, Saskatchewan.

	Wheat.	Oats.	Barley.	Flax.
1898	4,780,440	1,589,412	182,859	----------
1899	6,083,508	2,518,248	160,604	----------
1900	3,443,671	1,604,561	150,822	----------
1901	11,956,069	5,517,886	354,703	----------
1902	13,110,330	6,975,796	298,632	153,709
1903	15,121,015	9,164,007	655,593	285,697
1904	15,944,730	10,756,350	589,336	166,434
1905	26,107,286	19,213,055	893,396	398,359
1906	37,050,098	23,965,228	1,316,415	710,689
1907	27,691,601	23,324,903	1,350,265	1,364,716
1908	50,654,529	48,379,838	3,965,724	2,589,352
1909	90,215,000	105,455,000	7,833,000	4,448,700

Mr. MCCUMBER. Now, remember that the wheat acreage of Saskatchewan for the year 1909 was 4,080,000 acres. The total area of grain acreage for 1909 was 7,016,000 acres. This area, owned by 80,000 farmers, was less than 12 per cent of the estimated arable acreage in the Province south of parallel 55. Suppose it is about one-tenth and they raised 90,000,000 bushels of wheat in 1909, what will they raise in this section when you come to multiply the acreage by 10? They will then raise over 900,000,000 bushels.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MCCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am interested in these figures, and I am trying to get the Senator's line of argument so as to follow him intelligently. Does he consider the proximity of these great Canadian wheat fields, with their fertility and the vast increase in their production, as a menace to American welfare? Is that what I understand him to mean?

Mr. MCCUMBER. Certainly, Mr. President. If I did not think so, I would not be here arguing this case.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Now, do I——

Mr. MCCUMBER. I call the Senator's attention to the map in my hand. He will see the red portion in Canada and he will see the corresponding red portion in the United States. That red portion represents the wheat-producing capacity of the two countries west of the Red River. There is more wheat land west of the Red River of the North in Canada than west of the Mississippi River in the United States, and it is all so situated that its product can be dumped upon our nearest markets, Duluth and Minneapolis, and that would be the course of the trade.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then the Senator contends that it would be a terrible disaster to America to have cheap bread. Is that his argument? I would like for the Senator to answer that question.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Oh, Mr. President, I am going to show the Senator, if he will have patience with me, that it will not make any material difference in the cost of a loaf of bread.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I would be glad if the Senator would do that, for that is the very point that I want brought out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. MCCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been denied the privilege of listening to the Senator until this moment, but he touches upon a point that interests me. I have seen it stated in high quarters that we need not fear any disaster to our agricultural or other interests because of this agreement, for the reason that Canada does not produce enough to make appreciable inroads on our markets. I want to ask the Senator if we give Canada a market will not Canada produce enough, has she not the soil, has she not cheap labor, and has she not everything that gives her farmers an advantage over ours?

Mr. McCUMBER. In her eastern section she has better soil, for it has not been worn out as badly as ours, and cheaper labor; in the western section she has very much cheaper land, with equally good soil, and labor comparatively the same.

Mr. GALLINGER. And plenty of land.

Mr. McCUMBER. And plenty of land now and for a century to come to furnish us all the wheat we will need for bread.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Would not that mean cheaper bread? Has the Republican Party in its protective ideas got to where it wants to tax the bread of the people?

Mr. McCUMBER. Bread is as cheap a thing as there is in the market to-day.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Well, what is it made of?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is so cheap that when you go down to the Senate restaurant they do not charge you any more for it than they do for a glass of water, and the farmer can not produce it for very much less than it is being sold for to-day.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask why do you then insist that wheat shall be protected?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is impatient.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can only take up one section of a proposition at a time. I will assure the Senator that I will answer his proposition before I get through. I am now discussing the immense field of wheat supply we have just across the Canadian border.

Mr. President, the commissioner of agriculture of Canada, in his report of the 1908 crop, places the yield of that portion of the empire west of the Red River as 125,000,000 bushels of wheat. The acres under cultivation were 8,000,000. The same report shows 125,000,000 acres of practically the same kind of land already occupied awaiting only the plow to become equally productive. In a few years this section of the country can raise enough wheat to supply the demand in the United States. There has been an increase of about 650 per cent in eight years in the production of wheat in Manitoba and contiguous territory.

Where is the nearest market for this grain? Right over the North Dakota and the Minnesota line in the United States. And the moment our prices, through the increase of home consumption, reach a stage above the world's level of prices, that moment the Canadian current of grain trade will be turned wholly into our territory, and the farmer for another century will have to be content to sell his product in competition with the free product of the world.

Mr. President, in the year 1909 even this small percentage of Saskatchewan cultivated land advanced Saskatchewan to third place in comparison with the States of the Union and the Provinces of the Dominion as a producer of wheat and oats, the wheat crop for Saskatchewan being, according to Government figures, 90,215,000 bushels, and the oat crop 105,465,000 bushels. Minnesota, the greatest wheat-producing State, with 94,000,000 bushels of wheat, and North Dakota with 90,700,000 bushels of wheat, are the only States that produced more wheat in 1909 than did Saskatchewan; and remember that Province as a grain producer has come into existence during the last decade.

The average yield in Minnesota was 16.8 bushels per acre, North Dakota 13.7, the United States 15.8, and Saskatchewan 22.1 bushels per acre. Only two States in the Union produced in 1909 more oats than did Saskatchewan, namely, Illinois with 159,000,000 bushels and Iowa with 116,000,000 bushels, as against Saskatchewan with 105,500,000 bushels. Saskatchewan also produced in 1909 7,833,000 bushels of barley and 4,488,700 bushels of flax.

Mr. President, we can scarcely comprehend the enormous opportunity for the development of the great Canadian northwest. With our immensely increasing population in the United States and with all that we could possibly hope for, Canada would be exporting grain to this country for at least 100 years to come, if we were to open our market for all of her products.

Not only in Canada but in Sibera there are millions of acres that will in the future be producing wheat; in South America the grain product can be multiplied tenfold, and the ability of food production in Mexico is almost beyond computation.

I now want to return to the Senators from the Eastern and Southern States, and the Southeastern States, and call to their minds a little of the history of this country. There was a time when your lands in New Hampshire, in Vermont, in Connecticut, and in Massachusetts were worth $100 to $150 per acre.

Then suddenly the great Illinois prairies began to be turned over and to produce, and that was followed by Kansas and Iowa and Wisconsin and Minnesota and the two Dakotas, and in a very short time your farmers were entirely out of business and left their farm lands and went to the cities in order to earn a livelihood. That blight which struck you about 50 years ago you never recovered from until within the last 10 years, when consumption and production so nearly equaled each other that the farmer saw in the future a possibility of bettering his welfare, and your lands began to rise.

I could have bought about 160 acres of good land in the State of New Hampshire when I first came to the Senate 12 years ago, with buildings on it that you could not have duplicated for $3,000, with a beautiful little stream running through it, and with a beautiful little lake on its border, for $850. It is to-day worth three or four times that. Its value has increased because consumption and production can now look each other in the face and each feel that it has no great advantage over the other.

Then, as the prairies began to be turned in Minnesota and North Dakota, land in the State of Ohio which had been worth a hundred dollars and a hundred and fifty dollars dropped down to $60, $50, and $40 an acre.

What was the cause of this? You could not compete with the great prairies of the Northwest. Your lands began to decline in their fertility. In order to make a living you were compelled to skimp and to exhaust your land as rapidly as possible, without giving any portion of the acreage a rest. You went on in that way until the fertile prairies of the Northwest brought wheat to your doors cheaper than you could raise it yourself.

Mr. President, with all of those conditions your farmers went struggling on, trying to live, hoping for the better time when there would be a greater demand for their products, and you had to wait until the population grew sufficiently to consume the great surplus, or a portion of it, right here at home.

But we are reaching the time in the United States when we will consume about all we raise. While population will keep on increasing, until the ocean runs dry we will not be able to increase our available acreage one foot.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Right on that point——

Mr. McCUMBER. The farmer is getting the benefit of that. Remember, we can still produce in the United States all the wheat and cereals we need and can keep abreast of consumption for many years. North Dakota, I think, has less than 25 per cent of her prairie sod turned over, and yet she raises, under normal conditions, more than 90,000,000 bushels of wheat, besides all her other products. Eastern Montana has not yet been scratched by the plow, and its lands are about the same as western North Dakota. Other sections of our country, now virgin soil, can be cultivated, and they will be cultivated, just as soon as farming is made as profitable as occupations in city life.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I want to ask a question right in this connection. I thought the Senator was going to try to explain why it was that he was so anxious to keep this wheat up. He said in his argument that the eastern part of the country went out of business because the western part could produce wheat, the basis of bread, cheaper than the eastern part of the country. Now he is making an argument to prove that the time has come when consumption and production have reached their limit and are running neck and neck, and therefore that in order to keep the people from getting the benefit of God's great wheat fields of other countries he would put this wall around America and mulct the people who eat bread in order to benefit the few farmers who own the wheat fields.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, the great trouble with the Senator from South Carolina is that he does not distinguish between wheat and bread.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I never did see the difference——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina must not interrupt until he has first addressed the Chair and has the consent of the Senator occupying the floor to proceed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I beg pardon. I will not be guilty of that again, but it seems to me——

Mr. McCUMBER. I make no complaint——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. It seems to me if the Senator from North Dakota would come to that point, I would not have felt it necessary to commit that breach.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me call the Senator's attention again to what I have stated over and over again, that the little protection which the farmer receives upon his raw products is so infinitesimal when compared with the retail price of the finished product that it should hardly be taken into consideration.

There is no more relation between a bushel of wheat and a loaf of bread served down there in your restaurant than there is between a Texas steer and a four-dollar order of steak down there.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I just want to ask this question. The Senator says the protection on the farmers' wheat is so infinitesimal that it does not affect the price of the manufactured article. Why, then, should the western wheat grower, with his fertile acres and his abounding wheat, drive the eastern grower out of the market?

Mr. McCUMBER. Because he can put, not bread, but wheat, cheaper at his door. Now, I have answered that four times. I have made my proposition absolutely clear.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will allow me——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator further yield?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Did not the bakers of the country threaten, while we were in session considering the cost of food products, to shorten their loaves if we could not do something to lower the price of flour? The Senator from North Dakota wants to be fair in this argument. Is it not a fact that flour has advanced from 50 to 75 per cent? A barrel that could have been bought for $4 is now from $7.50 to $8, and bread is made out of flour.

Mr. McCUMBER. And is it not equally a fact that while wheat has gone down 10 cents a bushel since this reciprocity treaty was made public flour has gone up?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from North Dakota further yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will examine the market reports——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator further yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think if the Senator will examine the market reports right now he will find that flour has declined at a greater ratio than wheat. If the Senator has the reports, I would be glad for him to read them. I have some.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have had the reports where it has gone up, but I do not think it has declined materially. I will reach the point in a moment. I will ask the Senator to be patient, because I want my argument to be logical.

There is not a single Senator here, including my friend who has just addressed me, who will have the audacity to say that the taking of the tariff off of any article which the farmer produces will materially affect the cost of living. There is not a Senator in this Chamber who does not know that the increase in the cost of a raw product by reason of the tariff is such an insignificant percentage of the retail price of an article made from it that it would not, and could not, be computed as a factor in the retail price.

Now, as I have shown, I think, the farmer ordinarily gets a protection of about half of the amount of the duty; that about half of it is paid by the producer on the other side of the line, and the farmer gets the other half of the protection. I have noticed in 10 years of observation that our grain is about half the amount of the tariff higher than on the Canadian side; and now I am coming right down to the proposition that was asked by the Senator.

Suppose that our present tariff therefore raises the price of a bushel of wheat 10 cents. A bushel of wheat will make about seventy-five 5-cent loaves of bread, on which there would be realized by the retailer $3.75. If the 10 cents a bushel were therefore added to the cost of a loaf of bread, it would make a difference of one thirty-seventh of 1 cent per loaf. That is the difference it would make if it were added to it. If it were taken from it, it would take from it one thirty-seventh of 1 cent on that loaf. After we have secured free trade, will a loaf of bread be sold for four and thirty-six thirty-sevenths of a cent, or will it be sold in the market at 5 cents a loaf?

Now, here is something about Quaker Oats. A bushel of oats, we will say, has 7½ cents protection. A bushel of oats will probably make the equivalent of 23 packages of Quaker Oats, sold at 10 cents a package, which would realize to the retailer $2.30. The tariff would therefore amount to about seven two hundred-and-thirtieths of 1 cent a package, or about one thirty-third of 1 cent.

Not only this, but while the farmer would receive, say, about 33 cents a bushel, the retailer would receive $2.30 a bushel, an increase of 700 per cent, excluding the value of the by-products, which probably could be sold to an advantage which would be equivalent to another hundred per cent, or 800 per cent higher than what the farmer receives for it.

I will take another article, which is the most expensive article of diet—meat. The agricultural experiment station's report is to the effect that the dressed weight of a beef is on an average of about 65 per cent of its live weight. I especially want to present this to the farmer Senators, who will verify what I am saying. This dressed beef may be divided into percentages, as follows: Ribs, 9 per cent; loins, 19; chucks, 27; plates, 13; shank, 3; rounds, 23; flanks, 3; suet, 3; total, 100 per cent.

I have a table here based upon the market price of these several kinds of meat in this city, and from it we are able to realize what a steer that weighs 1,200 pounds would realize at the market where we buy our products. The following table is based upon the evidence of a retailer. For some unaccountable reason I notice, however, that the bills which we receive give very much higher charges than he places in his bill. But we will assume his figures to be correct.

I will introduce the table, but will call attention to some of its items now. For instance, here are 72 pounds of ribs. They are sold at 18 cents a pound, the loin at 23, chucks 15, plates 8, shank 3, rounds 15, flank 8, suet 4.

I am a little inclined to think that some of the plates become loin, and once in a while the chucks will be ribs when they are delivered. But I will assume that he is a good, honest dealer and we are getting just exactly what we bargained for. The table is as follows:

	Ribs.	Loins.	Chucks.	Plates.	Shanks.	Rounds.	Flank.	Suet.
Weight.....pounds..	72	152	216	104	24	184	24	24
Price per pound, cts.	18	23	15	8	3	15	8	4

According to this table, an 800-pound carcass will retail at $120.90. Add to this about $12 for hide and by-product and the retail price would be about $133. The farmer probably received from fifty to sixty dollars for this beef. The retailer's gross profit would be about 125 per cent.

If you would then follow the same beef, as I have on another occasion stated, into what would be called a first-class restaurant in this city, the percentage of increases would be enormous.

I gave you a table, I think, about a year ago in which I showed that the steer that the farmer sold for about $80 would realize about $2,500 at your best restaurants.

Here is another matter that I want to speak of for the benefit of my friend who has asked me questions about the price of our products. The Senator from South Carolina thinks that the price of bread is always dependent upon the price of the grain that enters into it. The price of bread is a great deal more dependent upon the price of the labor that goes into manufacturing it after the grain leaves the farmer's hands, and the high-priced city labor compared with the farmer's low-priced labor, where he and his family work for absolutely nothing but their board and clothes.

The value of farm labor that enters into the grain is almost nothing in comparison with the labor which is employed in manufacturing it, and changes it into gold after it leaves the farmers' hands.

J. R. Cahill, an investigator for the labor department of the Board of Trade of England, was sent over here to investigate the prices of food products, laborers' wages, and so forth. We were then shipping a great deal of wheat to England. Speaking to a Chicago Tribune reporter, he says:

> I can not understand how we can buy bread in England for one-third the price you pay in Chicago, when you send us our wheat.

That will begin to answer the Senator's question.

> You have to pay 5 cents for 14 ounces of bread, while we get a loaf weighing 64 ounces for 10 cents, made out of your own wheat. Our 4-pound loaf never costs more than 12 cents, and usually only 10 cents.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. In just a moment.

It is not surprising the Britisher was puzzled, and the answer to the puzzle is that the cost of labor placed upon that wheat in Great Britain in converting it into flour and baking it into bread is less than one-half of what it is in this country, and a much less profit is demanded by the baker. In other words, this last labor is nearer on a par with the farmer's labor.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator is getting down to just the point that I wanted to bring out in the beginning of my questions to him.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am glad I am approaching it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. He states that the cost of conversion, the high price of labor that enters into the making of this bread, is largely responsible for the additional cost. This additional high-priced labor comes necessarily through high protection to the manufacturer. If the manufacturer were not protected he could not pay the labor this high price.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is certainly true to a certain extent, but if he did not have protection he would not be able to buy at a much less price.

The VICE PRESIDENT. One moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 315, relative to the election of WILLIAM LORIMER as a Senator from the State of Illinois.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside to enable the Senator from North Dakota to conclude.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from North Dakota will proceed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will just finish this question, and I think it is the last one I will ask the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator can ask any question he likes. I shall make no complaint.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to state in this connection that I intend now to ask permission to address the Senate upon this subject immediately upon the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] upon Monday, but I want to state right here, for fear that I may not have that opportunity, that I shall attempt to bring out the fact that in the President's message Mr. Taft has shown himself in this emergency as the greatest patriot who has occupied the White House in several generations by insisting that the American people shall have relief in spite of the fact that his party stands pledged that they shall not have the relief.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am afraid they will all need relief if this reciprocity bill passes.

Mr. President, I wish the people of this country, including the Senator who has just spoken, could appreciate how little the tariff affects retail prices. If they could be once made to understand that, there would be an end to the cry that our tariff was in any way responsible for the high cost of living or the raise in the cost of living, and the political demagogue would be compelled to invent some new device to mislead the public.

What is true of food products, Mr. President, is also true of manufactured products. I want to give a little illustration here. A Senator told me the other day that he bought a couple of little woolen stocking caps for two of his children. The Senator is one who has had a great deal to do in the handling of wool and manufacturing it into cloth, and he understands what the raw material costs, what it costs to manufacture, and also what profit the manufacturer reaps. Will the Senator excuse me if I use the illustration? He says he paid $2.50 apiece for those little woolen caps. He then weighed them and began to compute, because he has a good analytical mind; and if I remember his figures correctly, he stated that the wool for each cost the manufacturer about 15 cents, and that 15 cents additional would be a good price for the manufacturing of each of them. That would make the cost about 30 cents each.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. So that the Senator will have it absolutely correct——

Mr. McCUMBER. I want it that way. My memory may be in error.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to call attention to the fact that the wool in the two caps costing retail $5 amounted to 46 cents.

Mr. McCUMBER. In the two?

Mr. SMOOT. In the two. The cost of making them could not have exceeded 15 cents apiece, which would amount to 30 cents, making a total of 76 cents.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is correct, Mr. President, and yet——

Mr. SMOOT. They were sold for $5.

Mr. McCUMBER. The golden touch of American labor was laid upon that wool, and it immediately advanced from the farmer's and the manufacturer's price 1,000 per cent.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. I wish to say to the Senator from Utah and to the Senator who is now addressing the Senate that if the wool in the two caps cost only 23 cents and the labor about the same amount, as I understood the Senator from North Dakota to say, I should like to know why those Senators made a law two years ago which made that thing possible in this country. I simply want to know who is to blame for that sort of thing.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will answer what is to blame for it. The law had nothing to do with the principal cause. Its our course of doing business, the intermediate handling of the goods, the many different profits to be made by many different men handling them. Answering the query of the Senator from Missouri, I will give him another reason why we did not try to lower the labor cost. First, we wanted to maintain the price of labor in the United States. We wanted to allow the laborers in this country to live in the same kind of homes that they had been living in, we wanted them to have the same leisure, the same opportunity to clothe and to care for and to educate their children that they had been having in this country. We wanted them to be prosperous as they had been in this country; and we rather expected that if we continued that policy they would compliment us, the farmer element, by, at least, wishing us godspeed in our own prosperity. Instead of that it seems that many of them are coming here and asking for the highest character of protection upon their products and asking that the farmer be relieved of any protection that he has on his own.

That is but a partial answer. I am going to answer it more in detail as I reach another phase of this argument, but I can say generally that it is in the course of trade. It is in the vast number of people who have been driven from the farm into the city who have to make a living, and therefore have to receive enormous profits on the things which they sell in order to pay their rent, pay for the money invested in their business, and pay the overhead charges, and such like.

Mr. SMOOT. And for advertising.

Mr. McCUMBER. And the immense sums that are paid out for advertising their wares. That is what adds to the cost of living.

Now, Mr. President, I want to give another illustration, not for the purpose of bringing up the old ghost of tariff reform, but for the purpose of showing to what a small extent the tariff enters into the retail price of any article. I have here the analysis of the cost of all-worsted men's winter suits from the raw material to the retail selling price, which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Analysis of cost of an all-worsted men's winter suit from the raw material to the retail selling price.

Fourteen pounds grease wool in 3¼ yards finished cloth.

Net mill cost of 1 yard of cloth	$1.19
Net selling price of 1 yard of cloth	1.28
Net mill profit on 1 yard of cloth	.09

This cloth is sold to the wholesale clothier for $1.28 net per yard.

Calculating liberally for the amount of cloth required for one suit at 3¼ yards, we have the cost in one man's suit as:

3¼ yards at $1.28	$4.48
Cutting, making, and trimming	3.62
Shop expense (which includes a profit) 10 per cent	.81
Finished cost of suit to wholesale clothier	8.91
This suit is sold at wholesale for $12.50, less 10 per cent for cash	11.25
And is retailed to the consumer at	18.00

Recapitulation of the respective profits on a suit of men's clothing of the wool dealer, the manufacturer of the cloth, the wholesale clothier, and the retail clothier:

	Profit.
Wool dealer, 14 pounds grease wool, at 1½ cents per pound	$0.21
Manufacturer of the cloth, 3¼ yards, at 9 cents per yard	.31½
Wholesale clothier $11.25, less cost $8.91	2.34
Retail clothier $18, less $11.25	6.75

Analysis of cost of an all-worsted man's winter suit from the raw material to the retail selling price.

Thirteen pounds grease wool in 3¼ yards finished cloth.

Net mill cost of 1 yard of cloth	$1.19
Net selling price of 1 yard of cloth	1.28
Net mill profit on 1 yard of cloth	.09

This cloth is sold to the wholesale clothier for $1.28 net per yard.

Calculating the average quantity of cloth required for one suit of ready-made clothing is 3¼ yards, we have the cost in one man's suit as:

3¼ yards, at $1.28	$4.16
Cutting, making, and trimming	3.35
Finished cost of suit to wholesale clothier	7.51
This suit is sold at wholesale for $9	1.49
And is retailed to the consumer at	15.00

Recapitulation of the respective profits on a suit of man's clothing of the wool dealer, the manufacturer of the cloth, the wholesale clothier, and the retail clothier:

	Profit.
Wool dealer, 13 pounds grease wool, at 1½ cents per pound	$0.19½
Manufacturer of cloth, 3¼ yards, at 9 cents per yard	.29¼
Wholesale clothier	1.49
Retail clothier	6.00

Estimate of an all-wool suit costing $40 to $50, showing the amount of wool furnished and the farmers' protection on the same.

Three and one-half yards cloth, at $1.25, $4.38.
Three pounds raw wool to 1 yard cloth.
Average price paid the farmer for wool January, 1911, was 17½ cents per pound.
Ten and one-half pounds wool, at 17½ cents per pound, $1.83.
Farmers' protection on same (11 cents per pound tariff), $1.15½.

Mr. McCUMBER. I call attention to the fact that it takes 14 pounds of wool in the grease to make the 3½ yards that are necessary to make the cloth. The net mill cost of that yard of cloth was $1.19. The net selling price of that yard of cloth was $1.28 or a profit of 9 cents a yard.

This cloth sold to the wholesale clothier for $1.28 net per yard. Calculating liberally for the amount of cloth required for one suit at 3½ yards, we have the cost in one man's suit as follows:

Three and one-half yards, at $1.28, $4.48.
Cutting, making, and trimming, $3.62.
Shop expenses, including 10 per cent profit, 81 cents.
Finished cost of suit to wholesale clothier, $8.91.

This suit is sold at wholesale for $12.50, less 10 per cent for cash, or $11.25, and is retailed to the consumer at $18. Therefore the wool dealer furnished 14 pounds of greased wool, and at 1½ cents profit he received 21 cents. That is the farmer's interest in it. The manufacturer of the cloth received 31½ cents profit. The wholesale clothier received $2.34 profit, and the retail clothier $18, less $11.25, or $6.75 profit.

I am not complaining that the retailer charges any too much. If you will walk down the business streets in this city you will find them lined not with large stores, as a rule, but with little shops having only one little room just large enough to turn around in, commanding a rental of from $300 to $400 a month. The products handled have to be sold high in order to pay those enormous rents, charges, clerk hire, advertising, insuring, and so forth, and still allow a fair profit. I am not complaining of retail charges.

I also introduce, on the same subject, without reading, two other items showing the cost of producing an ordinary suit of clothes that would run from $40 to $50 tailor-made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that there is not a woolen mill in the United States that would not be perfectly willing and anxious to make contracts for every yard of their product, not only for one year but for a number of years, if they could but receive a profit of 7 cents a yard. All the profit that they could possibly receive in a suit of clothes would be three and a half times 7 cents a yard, which would be 24½ cents for a suit of clothes. I might add that many of them would be satisfied with a profit of only 5 cents, making 17½ cents upon a suit of clothes.

Mr. GRONNA. That fixes the blame on the retail merchant.

Mr. SMOOT. It fixes the blame upon the mode of distribution in this country, the expensive mode of distribution.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have just stated that I did not consider that the retail merchant was getting any too much, for he has all the overhead charges, and the wholesaler's profit, the commission man's profit, the transportation, the insurance, the storage, and the thousand and one things that have to be added, to pay for which he must charge the customer.

Mr. GRONNA. If my colleague will yield to me for a moment, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that less than 5 per cent of the retail merchants of the United States succeed in their business.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is true, Mr. President.

Now, what fixes the price of any commodity? You say supply and demand. Mr. President, that is not sufficiently accurate. Ability to buy is what makes the price. Ability to buy bread has very much to do with the cost of bread in the United States. Inability to buy bread in Great Britain reduces it to one-third of what it is in the United States, although they get the wheat from the United States that enters into it. All prices are based upon the financial ability of the public. If the earning capacity of the public is increased, everything will go up to meet that increase.

Our method of doing business now admits of so little competition that it is ability to buy rather than ability to do a living business that establishes prices.

I understand that all the necessaries of life sell 25 per cent higher in the city of Washington than they do in the city of Baltimore. Why? Because the earning capacity of the people of Washington is so much higher than the average earning capacity of the people of Baltimore. The merchant here sells for what he can get. The merchant in Baltimore sells for what his customers are able to pay.

Prosperity, Mr. President, always makes high prices. The first wave in the increasing tide of prosperity is always manifested by higher wages to labor and all commodities produced by labor advance because of the advance in labor values. And all other commodities respond to a certain extent because the laborer is better able to buy them.

Mr. President, we do not need Canadian reciprocity in order to secure lower prices. The values of all commodities are bound to depreciate, including farm products, because of our threat to surrender the general protective policy and the consequent return to hard times.

Mr. President, I have here the expense account of a reciprocity Senator at one of the leading hotels in the city of New York. He rides from the depot to the hotel, a few blocks, and he pays for hack hire $1.50. He can ride upon one of the trains of the railroads 75 miles for exactly the same price. He pays for his breakfast $1.25; for his lunch, $1.75; for his dinner, $2; for 3 cigars, 75 cents; 3 tips to the waiter, $1.50; tip to the bell boy and elevator boy, $1; and then here is another item which I will not mention, $4—Mumm's the word. [Laughter.] He pays for his room $15, making $19.75.

Now, Mr. President, that is for only one day's expense at a great hotel for this reciprocity Senator. As this Senator steps out and looks across the street he sees a dairy lunch sign, "Fresh buttermilk, 5 cents a glass." The exorbitant price of that farmer's beverage makes him dizzy, and he comes into the Senate Chamber and records his vote against the excessive cost of buttermilk. Had he entered the neat little lunch place he would probably have been able to read a sign in good, clear print, "Try our 15 cent farmer's dinner."

Ah, Mr. President, what a fraud is this cry that the price of the farmer's product is responsible for the higher cost of living. To bring into relief our monstrous extravagance and to show how infinitesimal is the farmer's share in these prices, I want to reduce these items in this Senator's expense account for a single day to their equivalent in the products of the farmer in my own State, at the prices the farmer has been generally receiving.

Without spying, Mr. President, I will ask permission to follow this Senator from the time he leaves the train until he returns to it after a day's sojourn at the hotel.

As he leaves his cab he pays fare for having been driven, say, 8 or 10 blocks, 6 bushels of oats, and as a compliment to the driver for his very moderate charge he tosses him 15 heads of cabbage. He registers at the hotel, and is shown by the bell boy to the elevator. As he nears the tenth story he responds to the expectant look of the elevator lad with 3 dozen eggs. The bell boy lingers at the door of his room and is rewarded for his anxiety over the comfort of the guest with a bushel and a half of barley. It takes a quarter of a ton of hay for this Senator's breakfast. [Laughter.] He gives the waiter 2 bushels of potatoes. His noon lunch is an average size sheep, with a bushel and a half of carrots for the waiter. In the evening he consumes 4 bushels of rye, and the waiter has a bushel of onions to dream on. When he settles for his room the landlord is the recipient of a half carload of turnips.

Mr. President, it is the grossest extravagance that makes the high cost of living. The actual cost of the articles that make up our diet is but the slightest percentage of the cost of living. It is the service that we are receiving.

Let me illustrate: There was a tramp here in the city the other morning, as I have read, who met a business man, and he said: "Please, Mister, I am starving; I have not had anything to eat for three days; will you not give me just a nickel?" With the usual activity of the Washington resident the nickel was forthcoming, but as the tramp opened his hand to receive it the stranger saw a quarter in his palm. He said to him: "Why, you have got a quarter there already." "Oh, yes;" replied the tramp, "but that is to tip the waiter." [Laughter.] That is the trouble, Mr. President; it is the service and not the cost of the article itself.

Did it ever occur to you Senators that the farmer does not get 4 cents out of the average meal consumed by you?

The fraud in this whole scheme is the fraud on the farmer. Why is he singled out for slaughter? Why is it that no other article that is liable to come from Canada is placed on the free list? I know of only a few things that Canada could give us—agricultural products, lumber, a little coal, and probably some lead ore. We will get no machinery from Canada, because we are exporting machinery to Canada.

I do not know any place where she manufactures any machinery that we would accept on this side of the line.

What will the farmer secure from Canada as a partial return for his sacrifice? Will he get pineapples from Labrador? Will he get oranges from Assiniboia? Will he get peaches from Manitoba? Will he get fence wire from Saskatchewan? Will he get farm machinery from Alberta?

But, you say, maybe he can get lumber a little cheaper. Without stopping now to compute the exact difference (I think there is about 75 cents a thousand difference), let us suppose he builds a house and uses 5,000 feet of lumber once in 50 years, at 75 cents a thousand you can estimate how much lumber profit he gets out of this scheme; and if you divide that profit by 50 you will get an average of how many cents he will save in a single year in his lumber bill by reason of Canadian reciprocity.

But while he is securing a little advantage, which may amount to 5 or 10 cents a year, he is losing $1.50, $2, or $3 an acre every year. But my friend from South Carolina is looking after the interests of the ultimate consumer. Well, what does he get out of this agreement? The Beef Trust gets the Canadian steer free, but the dear people still have to pay for protected meat. The millers have free wheat, but the people have protected flour. The brewer gets free barley, but he sells protected beer. The sheep with the wool on his back comes in free, but the farmer with sheep's wool on his back gets fleeced 80 per cent.

Will the shoe factories of British Columbia come to the farmers' rescue? Will the woolen and cotton mills of Winnipeg furnish fabrics to clothe his family?

Mr. President, I noticed the other day that the lower branch of the Legislature of Kansas voted in favor of this reciprocity agreement. What is the gold brick that the farmer legislator of that body bargained for in that resolution for reciprocity? You increase the purchase price of everything the farmer buys which under this bill would be exported to Canada by the well-known law that increased demand increases the cost. The greater the demand for wagons the less liability there is for a decrease in the price of those wagons. If you are to increase the output of your factories into Canada you increase the demand, if there is anything in it, in Canada, and therefore prevent a decrease in the product itself to the American consumer, while the American farmer has to sell his products in competition with the cheaper products of the entire world.

Mr. President, that is the farmers' side of it. Now, let us see what the manufacturer is to get out of it.

It is said we need this reciprocal agreement because we want to increase our trade with Canada; we want to import American goods into Canada. It is said we do not want to gauge this proposition by the yardstick of commercial equality, but by some sort of ethical rule that shall recognize people of our own blood, and to carry out this idea we give Canada everything and we receive nothing in return.

We are like the good lady I read about once who had $12 which she intended to expend for herself and her two daughters for grand opera, but on the afternoon of that day her conscience seemed to smite her, and so she took the $12 and gave it to a poor woman, who had also two daughters, that they might purchase clothes and necessaries, and she felt contented and happy during the balance of the day because of her generous, thoughtful deed. But what was her astonishment and consternation to learn on the next day that this poor woman and her two daughters had used her $12 for three tickets to the grand opera, while she and her daughters had remained at home. [Laughter.]

This is the position, Mr. President, which the United States is asked to occupy in this matter of Canadian reciprocity. It is altogether too altruistic for one who knows the injuries that will result from it.

But do we need this agreement even for our manufacturers? Not at all. I am afraid those people who are looking for so much expansion in the exportation of manufactured articles into Canada have forgotten to inquire how much Canada imports and what proportion of her imports we already have. We are increasing our imports without any reciprocal agreement. The only benefit that will be derived will be to those who are now exporting into Canada and who will be relieved of the higher duty. Whatever they save in duty they will be able to add to the profit side of their ledger, but the people, the consumers, will get no benefit.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that we will increase our export trade to any appreciable extent. Why? Simply because we have practically all of the Canadian trade now. Certainly about all that we could hope to get. I find that the total imports received in Canada for 1909 were $376,000,000; the imports from the United States were $223,000,000; leaving a balance of imports from other sources of $153,000,000. Canada therefore imports from the United States now more than 60 per cent of her total imports. She can not import tea and coffee and sugar and spices and the thousands of oriental and South American products. They can not be imported from this country, and I think that I am perfectly safe in saying and that it is a conservative estimate that we could not increase our exports more than 10 per cent. We would then have practically all of the Canadian imports, except what she would have to import from these oriental and South American countries. We would then have, say, about 70 per cent of her imports, or about 10 per cent more than we are exporting without any trade agreement. And what does Canada secure in return for this slight increase in our manufactured products?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator if there is not a pretty interesting object lesson in our former experience with Canada under a reciprocity treaty?

Mr. McCUMBER. There is a painful one.

Mr. GALLINGER. That treaty existed from 1854 to 1865. At that time we were exporting $9,000,000 worth of goods to Canada, while at the end we were exporting but $15,000,000 worth; in other words, we had increased our trade $6,000,000. Canada, previous to that time, was importing into this country $12,000,000 worth, and when the reciprocity treaty was abrogated she was importing into this country $27,000,000 worth. So we had given Canada $15,000,000 of trade and we had received an increase of $6,000,000 in return. When the reciprocity treaty was first agreed to we were selling Canada twice as much as Canada was buying, and when it was renounced Canada was selling us about twice and a half what we got from Canada.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me predict right here that if this treaty goes into effect we will increase our importations into Canada not to exceed $15,000,000 worth, and Canada will increase hers $150,000,000 worth.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is true beyond any possible question.

Now, what does Canada secure in return for giving us, say, $15,000,000 more of importations? She secures a market for 167,000,000 bushels of wheat at the present time and for a billion bushels in a comparatively few years; a present market for 55,398,000 bushels of barley; a present market for 2,213,000 bushels of flax; a present market for 353,466,000 bushels of oats; a present market for immense quantities of poultry, eggs, live stock, butter and cheese, hay, potatoes, and garden vegetables.

Ah, Mr. President, we are courting Canada for a $15,000,000 addition to our manufactured exports, and Canada is asking us to give her in return a market for $150,000,000 of importations of wheat alone into this country and a market for as much more in other agricultural products. Why do we not treat Great Britain the same way if we want to really help the man who buys clothes, and so forth? We sell to Great Britain an average of over $500,000,000 worth of goods a year and buy back only about $200,000,000 worth a year. There is an opportunity for us to enter into a reciprocal agreement where we could get great benefit if cheaper goods are a great benefit. I do not admit they are a benefit when secured at the expense of closing our own mills and pauperizing our own labor. I am for holding the tariff prohibition against Great Britain and every other country whose standard of living is below ours. But if we want a consistent reciprocity, we should look to our British trade. If we want to consider language and history and blood, there is an opportunity to do so. You shudder when you contemplate allowing manufactured articles to come in free, but look complacently on a proposition to swamp the country with all the agricultural products of Canada.

Mr. President, as we are not to secure any appreciable benefit for our manufactures and as the farming public will suffer beyong measure, what is the secret back of all this demand for reciprocity? The public press makes the sentiment; the press wants free print paper; and to give the press what they say will be worth $6,000,000 a year to them, we are to punish our people in an amount that would be equivalent to a loss of more than $150,000,000 annually.

To a certain extent, Mr. President, the farmers of the country are themselves responsible for the condition that confronts them at this time. In a period of temporary excitement they forgot the faith of their fathers and bowed to the will of the god of yellow journalism. In 1909 the press of the country, through its representatives, made a demand upon Congress—upon the Republican majority of the Committee on Ways and Means and the Finance Committee, which would be responsible for tariff legislation—for free print paper. If they received that concession, it mattered little what the rest of the tariff bill might be. If they received that concession, they would be satisfied to pursue their course, following whatever fad, fancy, folly, or falsehood their management might decide upon to quicken public interest and increase their circulation. If they did not receive it, the whole tariff proposition would be attacked and the wrath of the press and the journals would be visited upon the administration and the party.

They did not secure all that they demanded, and we all know the result. They made good. We secured, in my opinion, the best tariff bill that we could under all the conditions. It was not perfect; none has ever been perfect; and undoubtedly with proper information, which could be secured through a commission or a board, we could without unsettling business in the least remedy any defects in the law.

While the tariff measure was under consideration it was made manifest by the press that every man who should vote for the final measure should be marked for slaughter, and every Representative or Senator who should surrender to their demands should be crowned with journalistic glory.

A campaign was started which, for rankness, has never been equaled in the country. A single man was selected in the Senate and one in the House, blackened, horned, and winged like a vampire, until the public regarded him as a political monster. The political virtue of every man in Congress was measured by the number of times he happened to escape voting the same way as these blackened individuals on any question or any amendment. If he voted half of the time the same as the chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate he was half as bad, no matter what the proposition might be. The question of the right or the wrong of it was wholly immaterial. If he never voted once the same way he was a patriot and pure. Courage of conviction was a sin and craven fear a virtue. And no explanation of a vote, no question of its propriety, was discussed or considered. The atmosphere was systematically and persistently poisoned, and when the fever was high argument was not demanded; it was enough to charge that some one voted with the "interests." How, where, or in what way, or to what extent his vote affected any interest was carefully concealed. It was a wonderful opportunity for those who love gallery play. Men in Congress and out of Congress reveled in the press applause and notoriety. Natural conservatism lost her balance and everything in the tariff measure was condemned. That we needed money to run the Government was lost sight of, and a wave of free-tradism that would have destroyed every vestige of protection and left the Government without revenue swept over the country.

Each section, while holding fast to the protection awarded its particular wares, was anxious to destroy protection on the products of every other section. Connecticut, Massachusetts, and New Jersey demanded that no duty should be levied on foodstuffs and condemned their Representatives because they had permitted a duty on them. Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, and the Dakotas demanded that the protection should be lifted from all manufactured goods and condemned any one of their Representatives who had consented to any duty upon them.

Under these conditions men of the Middle West were destroyed because they allowed protection on fabrics and thereby increased the cost of living. The men of the East were destroyed because they allowed protection on food products and thereby increased the cost of living.

Out of this turmoil a new political creed was born, and the hero of each locality was he who cried, "Protection on everything that we produce and free trade on everything the rest of the country produces." This is the Fossism of the present day.

I knew to what end all this madness tended. I knew that when the public frenzy should begin to crystallize into hostile and punitive legislation the farmer, whose forces were disorganized, would be the first victim of the very mob whose numbers he had helped to swell, and to whose clamorous cries he had added his own voice. But he, too, had been poisoned with a virus with which the political atmosphere had been impregnated, and in too many instances he, like all the others, turned against those who had labored for his benefit and either destroyed them or punished them with greatly diminished majorities.

What mattered it that the Representatives of Ohio fought day and night to protect the sheep growers and woolgrowers of Ohio; to protect their dairies, their poultry, their farm and garden products? They were marked for destruction. What mattered it that the Senators from Wyoming and Montana, the great cattle and sheep sections of the country, fought valiantly for months to defend the cattle and hide schedule, the wool and the sheep schedule? The appreciation of their efforts by their farmer constituencies was shown by lessened votes or Democratic legislatures which should displace them in the Senate.

This was equally true of the appreciation of those who defended the barley, rye, wheat, flax, and every other farm product. It mattered little what their Representative or Senator had done to care for the interest of the State he represented. It was on record that he had several times been caught voting the same way as the chairman of the Committee on Finance had voted, and all of the magazines and all of the great press declared that that was conclusive evidence of treason.

And upon such specious argument as this many an earnest and honest man who had rather be right all of the time than be popular some of the time went down to political death.

Do Senators remember when we had before us the tariff bill as it came over from the House of Representatives that through the influence of the brewers the duty on barley had been reduced 5 cents a bushel? I had the old rate put back again in the Senate. Good Republicans, who had defended the interest of barley raisers in Indiana and Ohio, when they returned to their constituencies, filled with pride for their part in defending the interest of the farmer against the brewer, had to dodge the beer bottles of the brewer coming at them from one direction and the barley fork of the farmer coming at them from the other direction. Benefits were lost sight of. There seemed to be but one impulse—destroy the party and destroy any man who stood for protection on any article.

In this state of the public mind it was impossible to get a fair hearing. Of what avail was it to say to these farmer constituencies that the mob spirit which was created by the press would by the very same press turn its wrath against them.

Let me ask the farming population of the whole country at this time: What proportion of the great press and the magazines is defending your interest? Not a single one of them.

There is an old saying that "Whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad," and the gods of yellow journalism first made mad our farming constituencies and now are proceeding to complete the adage by destroying them.

Mr. President, this spirit of hostility against everything, which was given strength and impetus by Members of this Congress, has now got beyond the control of those Members. The fire which was fanned into a flame on this floor has become a conflagration, and those whose breath brought it into existence are now forced to fight fire.

We need not censure the President for bringing this treaty before Congress. He did not originate this reciprocal scheme. It was the sequence of all this hostility, and has the universal support of the press. You farmers by your vote at the primaries last year and by your vote last fall said you did not have much use for the Representatives who defended your interests in the tariff legislation, and that meant that you did not care whether you were protected or not.

And the moment your attitude was so manifested, the great press of the whole country said, "Well, take it away from them, quick." And with the whole press of the country calling for Canadian reciprocity, and your own vote negativing your interest in the matter, what was left for the President to do but to make the agreement and to put it up to the representatives of the country?

Mr. President, the farmers of my own State stood squarely for the protective principle. Only a few were stampeded by the press attack on the tariff measure, and in the resolutions from the State legislature opposing this agreement they emphasize their belief in that doctrine, but equitably applied to all our products. Is it any wonder that the President believes in the universal popularity of this measure, when every magazine and every one of the great papers are supporting it so forcefully?

Ah, Mr. President, we had a hearing here the other day and there appeared farmers from the State of Massachusetts who were worked up to a high state of excitement over this matter, who, with tears in their eyes and their voices trembling with emotion, asked the committee to save them from the dire calamity that was to befall them by reason of this reciprocity agreement. What right had those men from the State of Massachusetts to complain? What part had they played in formulating this measure and in bringing it before Congress? Why, Mr. President, if you will go back only four months, you will find that those same farmers in the State of Massachusetts supported and elected by an overwhelming majority a governor whose only creed was free food and Canadian reciprocity. What right have those people to come here now and lay the blame on the President for bringing forward a measure for free food and Canadian reciprocity? The President took them at their word, that is all, and brought this matter before Congress; and I think if it would stay long enough the President himself would be satisfied that the great majority of the farming element and all of that element near the Canadian border are solidly against the proposed agreement, notwithstanding the fact that the residents of the cities and the press are in its favor.

But, Mr. President, that is not all. Here is the venerable Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If I have ever had any complaint to make against him during the time I have known him, it has been because of his unceasing toil in looking after the interests of the State that he represents, so much so that I sometimes thought he forgot about the other States; but the farmers from that State, after having sent to the next Congress by their own votes a man who believes, or must believe if he follows the tenets of his own party, in free trade in farm products, come to us to-day and complain that we are giving them what they voted for and they criticize the President because he has listened to their voice upon that subject.

But, Mr. President, I do not believe in retributive punishment, certainly not for the mild offense of being misled by the press and magazines of the country. And so I am going to take the unpopular side again and to the best of my ability defend the interests of the farmers of this country against the press of the country. I prefer to take what I know to be the right course rather than the easy one, that of floating with the current.

Mr. President, since the beginning of history there never has been a time when the tillers of the soil have occupied a plane of financial or social equality with the artisan or the trader. Through the toiling, dreary ages, through the lagging centuries, patiently, heroically, has the tiller of the soil suffered the condition of serfdom. Since the day of creation upon his shoulders has been laid the whole burden of the world. His strong hands have produced the wealth that others might live in luxury. He has partaken only of the coarsest of the fruits which his children's toil have lured from the earth. If by his great strength he has raised himself, Atlas-like, he has raised the world with him. Still upon his shoulders rests its ponderous weight; still he feeds and clothes not only the vast army of the idlers of the earth, the drones of this artificial society of ours, but also the vaster hordes that wait upon them. I want to place him upon a position of equality with the dwellers of the cities if it is possible for me to do so.

Answering appeals to war, he has beaten his plowshare into a sword, conquered, and returned again to his lowly sphere, cheerfully dividing his toil-earned store with him whose delicate hands could not be darkened with the touch of soil.

His world has ever been a world of chance, and his life a continued war of defense against every form of nature's destructive agencies. The tares, the wild oats, the mustard, the cactus, the French weed, the thistle, infest his lands with a tenacity worthy of a holier cause. The demon of disease hovers over his stock and his poultry, and the rust and the chinch bug are ever alert for favorable breeding weather. The cutworm attacks his vegetables in the garden and the cutthroats attack his grain in the elevator. The wheat ring combines against his grain, the Beef Trust against his cattle.

But despite all of these enemies he has, with courage invincible, labored to reach that goal toward which the star of protection has been guiding him—toward that new day when consumption should overtake production and he could meet every other industry in the country on a plane of equality. And when the morn of that day begins to dawn and its first streaks of light herald this glorious day so long foretold by the prophets of protection, he suddenly finds every other industry in the country up in arms against him, determined to bind him to his old, enthralled, unjust, and subservient condition for another century.

Mr. President, the dome of this Capitol looks benignly down upon the great Center Market of the city. The same rising sun that gilds its towers finds the wives and daughters of farmers who have driven miles through the darkness with their vegetables, their eggs, or butter, that they may be ready with their wares to greet the early shoppers; and there they stand in their frayed and faded ginghams, in sun or in shower, disposing of the fruits of their labors. Here is a little girl 14 or 16 years of age, wearing away her young life, while your daughters are embellishing theirs with the priceless gift of education. Here is a little boy remaining home during the hot, sultry days, knowing no recreation, producing the vegetables and fruits for mother and sister to sell, while yours are running their autos, their sailboats, or their yachts.

Here are the farmers in the near vicinity of the city of Washington, knowing no vacation, summer or winter, while half the population of this city is off touring Europe or fishing in the summer and growing fat on lean Congressmen during the winter, and begrudging this farmer's wife the little sum of 5 cents for three bunches of celery.

Mr. President, I am awakened every morning at half past 4, winter and summer, by the clatter of the slow and tired horse of the farmer that has traveled 6 miles to bring in the milk and have it ready to deliver for breakfast. And when I think of the work—the good wife getting up at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning, the son going out to milk the cows to have the fresh milk ready for such early delivery—and when I think of the hardships of that life the greatest regret that is in my heart is that I do not have to pay three times as much for milk as I do. I could stand it and so could the rest of the world stand it if they would cut off a few of the luxuries of life in which they are indulging, because the price paid the farmer is only a very small measure of the cost of living.

Mr. President, the foundation and the excuse for this reciprocity agreement is that our food may cost us less and the poor laborers of the cities be benefited thereby.

Let us look at this feature a moment.

Are you to benefit the laborers of the country by injuring the farmer? I have given a few instances showing that upon the principal products of the farm—upon the principal items that go upon the laborer's table—the protection which the farmer receives will not and can not add to the cost of his living. It will help out the middleman to some extent.

The laborer in the great cities is not suffering because of the price that he pays for his food products. What he is suffering from is the excessive and unreasonable price he must pay for rent or for a place to build a home. And this condition is due to the very thing which is accentuated by this bill by increasing city profits and decreasing country profits—by sacrificing the country for the benefit of the city.

This leads me directly to another proposition, upon which I was questioned by the Senator from South Carolina. It leads directly to the consideration of another most important feature bearing upon the high cost of living—that of the improper and unequal distribution of wealth as between city and country. I reiterate again that since the very beginning of history the tillers of the soil have always had to pay tribute to the dwellers of the city, until the value of city property has so enormously increased, out of proportion to the value of all other property, that it becomes a mighty burden upon both the poorer class in the cities and in the country; to those excessive values both the laborer and the farmer pay tribute. Let me illustrate: Here is a quarter of a block, we will say, in the city of New York, a little piece of God's earth, just big enough for a modest home and room to walk around it. Its market price, we will say, is $5,000,000. The interest on the investment in the land for a place to do business would be, say, $300,000 a year. Some one must pay that $300,000. Some one must pay the rent charges for the structure built upon this foundation of gold. If it is goods that are to be sold or stored, there must be added to their value, or their storage above the price of handling, the $300,000 of interest on the land alone. The public pays for this in the enhanced value of everything it buys. That and the higher price of the city labor which handles food or other products is why they sell from 200 to 1,000 per cent more than the raw product costs.

How may this unequal distribution of wealth be remedied? It is not to be remedied by revolution. It ought not to be remedied by taxing incomes and taxing property until you tax them to death. There is a much better and a more statesmanlike way of dealing with that proposition.

Mr. President, unequal distribution of wealth comes from unequal remuneration for labor employed. It is because of the higher prices paid for city labor over the prices paid for country labor, paid to the farmer, and greater return upon investment in the cities, that enables the accumulation of such vast wealth in the city, engenders the speculative spirit in purchasing and holding vast tracts of land to meet the growth of the city, increasing with every incoming wave of growth or expansion, and laying tribute upon the labor of the city, either directly or indirectly, to sustain these high prices.

I think to-day the bricklayer in the city of New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, or Washington will receive at least 40 cents an hour for his labor. His labor is certainly no more intelligent than that of the farmer.

It does not require as much skill, as much brains, to lay a brick wall, with a plumb line, a square, and a level, as it does to build a hay stack or a wheat stack that will shed water and at the same time will not tip over, and I leave that to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] for corroboration.

If we allowed 40 cents an hour for farmer's wages, if we allowed as much to the farm wife as we allow to the seamstress or the cook, if we allowed as much to the farm boy as we allow for the clerk in the store, there is not a farmer in the United States who would not find himself absolutely bankrupt in a single year.

I have made an estimate of about what would be received from a farm of 640 acres of land in my State in an average year, with land, say, worth $50 an acre, estimating the farmer's labor and that of his family at only about half the wages of the artisan and those engaged in the ordinary city trades.

I am going to ask that the table be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. Does the Senator take into account that the farmers have to put in from 16 to 18 hours a day. We can not resort to the eight-hour law on the farm.

Mr. McCUMBER. And that is not all. You farmers have to work away two-thirds of your working life before you become the owners of the land in which your capital is invested. Here is the cost of producing wheat on a farm in my county, 640 acres, allowing about half as much for the farmer and his wife as would be allowed a bricklayer or colored cook.

Cost of production of wheat on a farm of 640 acres in North Dakota.

VALUE OF FARM, MACHINERY, AND HORSES.

Cost of farm, 640 acres, at $50 per acre		$32,000.00
Cost of farm implements		1,616.00
Farm horses		2,400.00
Total investment		36,016.00

EXPENSES.

Seed grain, labor	$5,831.00
Interest on investment at 6 per cent on investment	2,160.96
Taxes and depreciation in value of implements and horses	460.08
Total expenses		8,452.04

PROCEEDS.

8,320 bushels of wheat, at 90 cents per bushel	7,488.00
Loss to farmer	964.04

In this I make no allowance for a loss of crop. I think it may be estimated that, taking out partial losses and otherwise by hail and everything else, we can figure that about one crop in ten is lost to the farmer.

The only reason that the farmer is not running behind is that he makes no charge in his account for interest on investment; that he and his family receive for their work only board and cheap clothes, and that he spends almost nothing except for the bare necessities of life.

Another thing, Mr. President, bearing upon this investment: I made a careful investigation and I find that the lands in my State are worth on an average 25 per cent more per acre than those on the Canadian side in the near vicinity, and if we get farther from the well-settled portion, land is worth four or five times as much as it is on the Canadian side; and remember, also, in estimating our profits we must take our capital employed and balance it against half as much capital employed in Canada. We must also take into consideration the higher prices that we must pay for everything that we buy and balance that with the lower prices in Canada.

There is not a farmer in the country that would not be running behind if he allowed himself the wages that are allowed the ordinary city laborer. It is only because of his rigid economy, denying himself every luxury and probably the majority of the comforts of life, that he is able to exist at all.

But you say that he lives better than the average laborer in the city. Nothing is more untrue than this. That he has a home to sleep in, and that he will always have food to eat; that neither starvation nor lack of shelter can ever face him; that he will always have clothes to wear, whether the rest of the world do or not, is true. The meat of his cattle will furnish him food, and, if need be, the hides will clothe him.

But he has none of the leisure, none of the hours of recreation or amusement that the laborer has in the city. Go down here in the month of June and watch the laborers at work on your public buildings, when the hour of 4 o'clock in the afternoon has arrived and the sun is high in the heavens will not the hammers fall from the hands of the workmen with a nail half driven; will not the mortar dry in the already hoisted hod? Will the laborer not be on his way to his home before you hear the last chime of the stroke of 4? But the farmer, with the great beads of perspiration running down his sunburned cheeks, will have four hours of labor and two hours to do chores in after that before his day is completed.

I know the laborers in the city among the lowest class live rather meagerly. It is not because of lack of earning capacity, but excessive spending capacity. It is not because of the cost of the farmer's product, the necessities of life, but because of the cost of the unnecessaries of life.

Here is a table, Mr. President, I will ask to insert, which will explain this proposition:

Amounts paid during the year 1909 for—
Wines, liquors, etc	$1,750,000,000
Meats	1,500,000,000
Tobacco	800,000,000
Lumber	685,000,000
Cotton goods	650,000,000
Woolens and worsted goods	460,000,000
Boots and shoes	435,000,000
Flour	435,000,000
Potatoes	205,000,000

Let me analyze it. I want the Senators who claim that these laborers benefit and that the farmer is getting too much to listen to this. In the year 1909 the American people paid for wines and liquors and beers $1,750,000,000, and they paid for flour $435,000,000, or more than four times as much for liquors as for their bread; and yet some of the consumers complain of us. The brewer wants cheaper barley and wants the farmer to produce it for him for less compensation.

I find also that the laborers and the rest of the American people spent $205,000,000 for potatoes in 1909 and they spent $800,000,000 for tobacco, or nearly $4 for tobacco to $1 for potatoes.

I find that they spent for boots and shoes only four hundred and thirty-five millions, and that they spent billions for the unnecessaries of life. I wish I also had a record of the hundreds of millions of dollars that are expended for theaters, football, baseball, horse racing, and other expenses for amusements that we might comprehend to what extent our extravagances constitute the cost of living.

Mr. President, let the laborer of the city practice only one-quarter of the thrift, of the economy, of the farmer and he will never need to complain of the price of farm products. Let us increase the wealth of the country and more nearly equalize the remuneration received by the dwellers of both city and country. We will thereby add to the comforts of the country and take away some of the useless extravagances of the city and benefit both alike.

But you say the boys are leaving the farms. Yes; they are leaving the farms, and, as I stated before, they are leaving the farms not because the city life is more attractive, but because it is more valuable in every line of business. Men go from here to Alaska and stay there in the cold of winter for years in order to secure wealth, but not for immediate comfort or pleasure. It is for money. Give the farmer the money to get his luxuries and his comforts and he will stay home on the farm. That is the whole secret of the boys leaving the farm. And I want to keep the farmer boys on the farm. I want to take some of your surplus meat men that are trying to make a living in the cities selling 100 pounds of meat a day and put them back on the farm and make them good producers. For when you do that there will not be so many meat men to whom you will have to pay a profit and your meat will become cheaper without injury to the farmer.

Mr. President, I do not know that the farmer is any more honest than any other man. I never have given him credit for that. I believe that honesty is something that is learned at the mother's knee, and once instilled into the heart of a boy it will ever remain there. But at the same time I do believe that there is something in living and in performing our labors between the green earth and the azure skies, fanned by the breezes and kissed by the sunshine—something that tends to give character, something that tends to give broadness of vision, something that tends to give honesty of purpose, something that tends to make men more patriotic, something that tends to make them more law-abiding. And I want to say to Senators that the fungus of anarchy never yet had its growth in a purely agricultural section of the country.

Mr. President, there are too many in the cities. We will never get them out of the city until we make farming life more profitable than it is to-day.

If you will drive along one of the great avenues in this city for a distance of about seven blocks, passing through two or our beautiful circles, you will find it a street of palatial magnificence. And if you make inquiry you will find that practically all of these homes are occupied not to exceed three months in a year. Think of the backs that have bended low to produce these useless monuments of extravagance and ostentatious social rivalry. Think of the wasted human energy that has been expended by the many for the pleasure of the few. Think of the thousands upon thousands who have had to be supported, clothed, and fed while all their energies are being expended for that which is worse than useless. Some one pays for this. It is not the nonproducer. Other labor must clothe and feed the laborers, whose energies are thus wasted.

I am preaching no socialistic doctrine when I declare that this unequal, artificial, and wasteful social status of to-day can not and will not continue, that the country must and will have its share of the wealth of the Nation. There can be no grain of comfort in this assertion to the advocates of socialism or paternalism. Any man who is possessed of sufficient reasoning power to understand the simplest mathematical problem knows that all human advancement must ever rest upon individual industry and that individual industry is never a matter of choice, but of necessity, that human nature needs both the halter and the whip, without both of which degeneracy must inevitably follow. We need ever before us the Goddess of Ambition, with her star of hope to lure us on, and ever behind us the God of Necessity, to accelerate our lagging zeal. The evils of the unequal and wrongful present social status are infinitesimal when compared with the degenerating evils of socialism. But this must be brought about, Mr. President, by increasing the value of the farm, bringing the wealth, there is only so much of it in existence, bringing the energy, only so much of it can be expended, away from the city and developing the country until it is on an equal footing with the city.

Let me, however, Mr. President, give one note of warning to those Senators who represent the great cities, with their enormous wealth, with their palatial homes, with their costly edifices, their galleries of art, their great libraries—all made possible because of the advantage of city over country earning capacity. Let me say to those who represent the great manufacturing industries, with their millions of dependent laborers, that this protective structure of America which has enabled them to prosper and develop during the last 40 years must either stand as a whole or fall as a whole.

I warn them to remember that it is they who strike the first blow to undermine not a mere sectional but a national edifice; that it is they who have declared the war. It is they who have sown the winds, and it will be they who shall reap the whirlwind.

And I think it is not out of place here to suggest to them that every great conflict is not determined in favor of him who strikes the first blow, but in favor of him who is able to strike the last blow. By this treaty you strike the great cereal and stock interests of the Northwestern States a staggering blow, but they will arise and return that blow with interest.

In every great war it is not the first battle that counts. It was not the glorious victory of Austerlitz that settled the destinies of Europe; it was the tragic Battle of Waterloo. It was not Bull Run that determined the fate of the Confederacy; it was Gettysburg. It will not be the advantage gained to the manufacturing interest by Canadian reciprocity that will settle the great fundamental protection policy of the country; it will be the swift stroke of retributive justice that will follow.

Heretofore I have had some doubts about the feasibility and even the propriety of taking up the tariff proposition schedule by schedule or subject by subject. When this Canadian compact becomes the law, every doubt will have vanished. By it we are taking up the proposition schedule by schedule. The first schedule is the agricultural, and against it is combined every other interest in the country, and every article is placed on the free list. But take up the tariff schedule by schedule and in schedule after schedule the protective idea will be crushed to death by the determined votes of the representatives of the outraged farming population of this country.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 10849) to authorize the city of Shreveport to construct a bridge across Red River.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

H. R. 23015. An act to protect the dignity and honor of the uniform of the United States; and

H. R. 24153. An act for the relief of John Marshall.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 31856) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes; asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GARDNER of Michigan, Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio, and Mr. BURLESON managers at the conference on part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 10177) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Establishment, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MANN, Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, and Mr. ADAMSON managers at the conference on part of the House.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 31856) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate agree to the further conference asked by the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. TILLMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be announced.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 315, submitted by Mr. BEVERIDGE on January 9, 1911, as follows:

Resolved, That WILLIAM LORIMER was not duly and legally elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Illinois.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I had intended to address the Senate to-day on this resolution and had made preparation with that view. The Senator from North Dakota has occupied several hours in the very interesting speech he has made. It is now more than half past 3, with a special order set for 5 o'clock. I am not seeking to delay the consideration of this resolution or coming to a vote upon it; I am willing to contribute what I can to that end; but I do not care, under the circumstances, to address the Senate this evening.

I would like to ask the Senator from Michigan, if no other Senator is ready to proceed this afternoon on this resolution, if he would not consent to let it go over until Monday, so that I might begin, by the unanimous consent of the Senate, immediately after the reading of the Journal on Monday morning. I could then come near to the conclusion of my remarks by 2 o'clock, so near, indeed, that I am sure I could appeal to the courtesy of my friend from Georgia [Mr. BACON] for a few minutes after 2 o'clock, but of course not to interfere with the notice he has given.

Mr. BURROWS. I could not understand the request of the Senator.

Mr. STONE. My request was that the Senator from Michigan, unless some other Senator is ready to proceed now to occupy the remainder of the time until 5 o'clock in discussing the Lorimer resolution, would consent that it be laid aside temporarily, to be taken up Monday morning immediately after the reading of the Journal, that I might then conclude what I have to say, so as not to interfere with the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I simply desire to remind the Senate that I have given notice I would like to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill Monday morning. I take it we will all have to inconvenience ourselves considerably during the next week in order to get through with the business of the Senate, and unless an agreement can be reached to vote on the Lorimer case I think we ought to proceed with it. Others of us have rights here and conveniences to be consulted.

Mr. BURROWS. I will inquire of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] if he is not prepared to occupy some time this afternoon.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I had not expected to take up very much of the time of the Senate in what I have to say, not more, I think, than 15 minutes. I can do that this afternoon if it seems necessary, although the time occupied by me will be so brief it is hardly a material element in determining this question. I have not been feeling very well to-day, and as a matter of personal preference I would rather not take the matter up, but I will do so if it seems to be necessary under all the circumstances.

Mr. STONE. I had supposed that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] was ready perhaps to proceed with the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Let us fix a time to vote. That will settle the question.

Mr. STONE. I have no objection to that, but other Senators might interpose an objection.

Mr. BURROWS. I presume there will be no objection to fixing a time to vote on the matter, and that might relieve the situation somewhat. I therefore ask unanimous consent that a vote may be taken next Wednesday before adjournment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, before adjournment, a vote be taken upon Senate resolution 315. Is there objection?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I recall the attention of the Senate and of the Senator from Michigan to the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that he desired to present some views with regard to this matter, and that he did not feel willing to give consent at this time. For that reason I feel that in his absence I am justified in objecting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma objects.

Mr. STONE. Let me inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma if he would object to fixing a later day in the week for taking the vote.

Mr. OWEN. I was simply giving voice to the expression of the Senator from Wisconsin, who is not present.

Mr. BURROWS. Does the Senator object?

Mr. OWEN. At this time I object.

Mr. BURROWS. Then I see no way except to proceed with this matter.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 32866) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1244) thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 32865) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1245) thereon.

Mr. HALE. I give notice that at as early a time as possible next week the Committee on Appropriations will call up these two bills for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills will be placed on the calendar.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senate to take up House bill 31596, the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator to wait until I get the bill up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming request that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. NELSON. I request that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. WARREN. I had assumed that that matter had been arranged; but the Senator from Michigan is here and can tell us whether he wishes to proceed with the resolution.

Mr. BURROWS. I am exceedingly anxious, as I am sure the Senate must be, to proceed with and close this matter. May I ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether he will consent to a vote on Thursday at 5 o'clock?

Mr. OWEN. I have already advised the Senator from Michigan that I was merely giving voice to the expressed wish of the Senator from Wisconsin, who is not here. He did not feel at that time yesterday afternoon that he was prepared at this time to agree upon a fixed time for the vote.

Mr. BURROWS. That would leave four days for debate next week.

Mr. OWEN. He doubtless will be in the Chamber in a few minutes, and he can speak for himself.

Mr. BURROWS. I think we had better proceed, then, with the matter.

Mr. PENROSE. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution. Senators in favor of the resolution will say aye.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. An objection does not prevail.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to address the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very good. The Chair recognizes the Senator for that purpose. The Chair did not understand the Senator to ask for recognition. He thought the Senator simply objected. The Chair, of course, recognizes the Senator to discuss the resolution.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will yield to me, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield for that purpose?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota yields to the Senator from Missouri, who moves that the Senate do now adjourn. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. STONE. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. BACON. I will inquire if the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. BACON. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the negative). I wish to state that I am paired with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES], and therefore I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 70, as follows:

YEAS—6.

Bristow	Rayner	Taliaferro	Taylor
Owen	Stone

NAYS—70.

Bailey	Crane	Gronna	Penrose
Bankhead	Crawford	Guggenheim	Percy
Beveridge	Culberson	Hale	Perkins
Bourne	Cullom	Heyburn	Richardson
Bradley	Cummins	Johnston	Root
Brandegee	Curtis	Jones	Scott
Briggs	Davis	Kean	Shively
Brown	Depew	La Follette	Smith, Mich.
Bulkeley	Dick	Lodge	Stephenson
Burkett	Dillingham	McCumber	Sutherland
Burnham	Dixon	Martin	Thornton
Burrows	du Pont	Money	Tillman
Burton	Fletcher	Nelson	Warner
Carter	Flint	Newlands	Warren
Chamberlain	Foster	Nixon	Watson
Clapp	Gallinger	Oliver	Young
Clark, Wyo.	Gamble	Page
Clarke, Ark.	Gore	Paynter

NOT VOTING—15.

Aldrich	Frye	Simmons	Swanson
Bacon	Lorimer	Smith, Md.	Terrell
Borah	Overman	Smith, S. C.	Wetmore
Frazier	Piles	Smoot

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. WARREN. Assuming that the Senator from Michigan——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator is about to proceed with a speech, I will not make the motion I was going to make.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will yield if the Senator desires.

Mr. WARREN. I was about to move to take up the agricultural appropriation bill, but I am perfectly willing to defer that motion if the Senator wishes to proceed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. STONE. If I can have a moment——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do.

Mr. STONE. I desire to say by way of apology that when I made the motion to adjourn I did not for the moment have in mind the special order for eulogies at 5 o'clock. If I had my motion would have been to take a recess until 5 o'clock instead of moving to adjourn.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I prefer not to go on to-day. The remarks I expected to make will not be extended. I had requested simply that I be given an opportunity briefly to speak on this matter before it is disposed of. I have not been feeling well to-day and I would prefer not to go on now.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President——

Mr. CRAWFORD. But I will do it if it is necessary to be whipped into it now——

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President——

Mr. CRAWFORD (continuing). Instead of having an opportunity to say a few words on Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do.

Mr. BURROWS. The Senator from South Dakota advised me some hours ago that he was not feeling well and would prefer not to go on to-day. In view of that and the statement he now makes, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside so that the Senator from Wyoming may call up the agricultural appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I want to say that, in my judgment, no matter of higher importance is before or can come before the Senate than the question which affects the right of a Member to his seat. We are now within one week of final adjournment, and while I do not think it vital that this question shall be disposed of to-day or Monday or even the next day, I do think the Senate owes it to itself and owes it to the country to settle the question before the present Congress expires. I can not bring myself yet to believe, in spite of what seems to be evidence of a purpose to filibuster against the decision that Senators who must act as judges in this matter desire to prevent a judgment being rendered on it; but unless we can have some agreement for a vote, I shall insist on the regular order, if every appropriation bill fails. With that notice, I will not now interfere with the arrangement proposed for this particular bill.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator does not mean in any way to convey the idea that he believes the pressure for the consideration of the appropriation bills, which of course must be passed and under the practice of the Senate have precedence, is in any way connected with a filibuster against the Lorimer matter.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not.

Mr. HALE. It is just the reverse.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not. Mr. President, I cheerfully acquit those in charge of the appropriation bills of such a purpose, but I have simply made what I believe to be a fair statement of the situation.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator from Texas yield to me a moment?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. STONE. I wish to say that so far as I am concerned I am not engaged in any filibuster. I have said that I am entirely willing now to fix a day or an hour next week to vote upon this resolution. I have not interposed any objection to fixing a day to vote.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, it was not even necessary for the Senator from Missouri to say that, because the RECORD shows just exactly what he has stated—that he consented to any reasonable time for a vote, reserving only the right to address the Senate. I had no thought of including the Senator from Missouri in the suggestion of a filibuster, and I do not make that suggestion against any Senator, because I will not merely make a suggestion when I become satisfied that a filibuster is intended, but I will declare it without using soft words.

I do not now declare that Senators are now ready to indulge in a filibuster on this question. I confidently believe that it will come to a vote, and that it will be decided before the present Congress adjourns exactly as the majority of Senators think it ought to be decided.

But I felt it was due to those in charge of the appropriation bills to give them notice that I deem it just as important, or more important, to decide this question than to pass the appropriation bills, because, notwithstanding the country may not agree with me in that respect, I am not sure an extraordinary session of Congress will be a public calamity. We have been ordered by the people of the United States to do certain things, and if they are to be done, then, in my opinion, it is well to do them with as little delay as possible. I am willing to come back to do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas object to laying aside the unfinished business informally?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to laying aside the unfinished business temporarily? The Chair hears no objection and the unfinished business——

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to make an inquiry. Does that interfere with its remaining the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not. The Chair hears no objection, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 31596) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WARREN. I should now like to have read a statement, which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the statement which the Senator from Wyoming sends to the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Official estimate for fiscal year 1912		$16,012,066
Amount carried by the Senate bill	$16,980,196
Amount carried by House bill	16,723,511
Actual increase of the Senate bill over House bill		256,685
Estimate for the fiscal year 1911		13,367,136
House bill carried last year		13,330,276
Senate bill carried last year		13,512,636
Net increase in appropriation over last year		3,492,560
This bill carries for Forestry Service		6,523,100
(This does not include amount in Appalachian Forest bill, ten or eleven million dollars.)
Amounts carried in this bill for appropriations under the Hatch and Adams Acts		1,440,000
Amount carried in other bills for aid of agricultural colleges, under Morrill Acts, for fiscal year 1912		2,500,000

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, under the head of "Department of Agriculture," on page 2, line 2, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four thousand five hundred" and insert "five thousand," so as to read:

Salaries, office of the Secretary of Agriculture: Secretary of Agriculture, $12,000; Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $5,000; solicitor, $5,000; chief clerk, $2,500, and $500 additional as custodian of buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for salaries in the office of the Secretary of Agriculture, on page 2, line 21, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "six," and on page 3, line 4, before the word "hundred," to strike out "six" and insert "eight," so as to read:

One telegraph and telephone operator, $1,600; 2 clerks, class 4; 6 clerks, class 3; 10 clerks, class 2; 18 clerks, class 1; 8 clerks, at $1,000 each; 5 clerks, at $900 each; 10 clerks, messengers, or laborers, at $840 each; 16 clerks, assistant messengers, or laborers, at $720 each; 1 chief engineer, who shall be captain of the watch, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 12, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the office of the Secretary of Agriculture from $275,550 to $276,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Weather Bureau," on page 6, line 11, before the word "preservation," to strike out "and," and in line 12, before the word "of," where it occurs the first time, to insert "and improvement," so as to make the clause read:

Contingent expenses, Weather Bureau: For fuel, lights, repairs, and other expenses for the care, preservation, and improvement of the public buildings and grounds of the Weather Bureau in the city of Washington; for stationery and blank books, furniture and repairs to same, and freight and express charges; for subsistence, care, and purchase of horses and vehicles, and repairs of harness, for official purposes only; for advertising, dry goods, twine, mats, oils, paints, glass, lumber, hardware, ice, washing towels, and other miscellaneous supplies and expenses not otherwise provided for in the city of Washington, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill to the end of line 7, on page 7.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, before passing from the part of the bill relating to the Weather Bureau and meteorological matters, I wish the Senator in charge of the bill would inform the Senate what is the scope of the bill relating to the Weather Bureau. A Senator at my right suggests there is nothing that we can do to control the weather, which is undoubtedly true, but if we have aa expensive bureau, whose business it is to prognosticate, it ought once in a while to make a lucky guess as to the weather. All know that this winter the predictions of the Weather Bureau have been the laughingstock of everybody. With the exception of certain phrases about winds along certain coasts being fresh and southerly and southeasterly and westerly and northwesterly, the guesses that the bureau has made have pretty much all been wrong. It is not simply a matter of joke. It is unfortunately the case that there are many credulous persons who take stock in the guesses of the Weather Bureau, as a great many credulous persons read predictions and statements in newspapers, which are taken back the next day. Of course we all understand that when the newspapers say that such and such a thing is going to be done to-day, and to-morrow they say it is not going to be done, the newspapers depend upon the forgetfulness of the public; that to-morrow the public will not remember what has been said to-day. But the Weather Bureau, Mr. President, ought not to be conducted on that basis. We are spending a great deal of money, and we are spending it upon a service that ought to be of use—of use to many interests in the country, of use to shippers and shipping, to manufacturers, to the different trades, and to a great many things that enter into the general business of the country. The Weather Bureau ought not to go upon the theory when it predicts to-day, and to-morrow that prediction is found to be absurd, that the country will forget it and forgive it.

The fact that the Weather Bureau seems to have no actual knowledge upon which it can base any prediction is a very calamitous fact. It is calamitous because, as I have said, it involves real and important interests, and I wish the Senator would tell us—not that I suppose he could put into an appropriation bill a provision that will give any man the power of unerring guesswork—but I wish he would tell us whether his committee, in considering this subject and perhaps in dealing with the Weather Bureau, had representatives of that bureau before it; and if so, what the bureau said in reference to this condition and to the estimate that the public has gained, especially this winter, of its not only apparent uselessness but perhaps of its harmfulness. Will the Senator tell us what the Weather Bureau propounded to the Committee on Agriculture as the basis of this guesswork?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Weather Bureau has grown in size, expense, and usefulness, like other branches of the Government. Not many years ago it was a sort of side issue in the War Department, under the charge of an officer of the Army; but upon representations of the shipping interests of the country, the agricultural interests, and others, it was enlarged and finally made of general application and carried to the Department of Agriculture. I have to submit, and admit without hesitation, that there must be in this service more or less guesswork or miscalculation.

While I have not had my attention called particularly to the fallibility of the service this winter, I have only to compare it with the guesses of what may be going on in the human mind as to what may happen from time to time and what has happened. From some time last summer along through November and up to the present time a great many guesses have gone wild. I do the service the justice——

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator think that the weather could change its mind like folks?

Mr. WARREN. Not as rapidly, but sometimes it gets just as variable as do the people.

Mr. BAILEY. You see the things that happened during the time to which the Senator has referred came about through a change of mind.

Mr. WARREN. Which the weather sometimes affects.

Mr. BAILEY. Very greatly affects.

Mr. WARREN. Undoubtedly when the mind is "sou'-sou'-east" and a man has not yet had his coffee and he meets a disagreeable party on the street, he is not as affable as he is later in the day when the wind has changed to south and his bodily wants have been properly cared for.

Mr. BAILEY. I submit that the Senator from Maine ought to be entirely satisfied with that explanation. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I admit that that is the best explanation that the Senator can give. As he says, we have all sorts of guesswork going on about different things, but we do not pay for that guesswork.

Mr. WARREN. Excuse me, but the Government pays a very great deal for each session of the Senate, and a man who will undertake in the morning to guess what will be done during the day will generally have another guess coming.

Mr. HALE. But it is not part of the duty of a legislator to decide what is to be done during the day. He deals with things from hour to hour as they come up. But the mission of the Weather Bureau, if it is entitled to recognition and entitled to maintain itself, is quite another thing. It is to predict with some degree of accuracy what is going to happen by reason of currents and winds and all of the things that go to make up a weather condition. It is not a matter of joke; it is a matter that ought to be something more than guesswork; and I think the Senator himself must realize that.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is true that while the uncertainties of the weather furnish most of the conversation from time to time, and conveniently fill up gaps in conversation always, while predictions in regard to weather are more or less of a joke, nevertheless, joking aside, I will say that the Weather Bureau, which is now costing sixteen hundred and odd thousand dollars annually, is supported to an extent that causes a pressure, not from the bureau itself, but from different communities and different interests. I have been subjected to much pressure during all the years that I have spent upon the Committee on Agriculture—and it is the first committee to which I was assigned. This year the bureau itself is not asking for any enlargement. The head of this bureau was called before the committee to answer certain charges made by an employee, who had resigned following some difficulty. He explained the matter satisfactorily, but he did not ask for any enlargement of appropriation or extension of the bureau. The committee, however, was besought by representatives from the cotton-growing region, from the plains region of the West, and from the ocean-shipping people, who, while admitting that the prognostications are not always correct, followed with the statement——

Mr. HALE. They are rarely correct.

Mr. WARREN. That was not the testimony. I will say in all seriousness that since the first establishment in the West some thirty-odd years ago of a weather bureau station very near where I live, interests that have arisen which desire information beforehand upon the weather have found that in some seasons it will run almost without exception along the lines of the prognostications and at others there will be a miss now and then. It is considered, however, to be at least nine times right where it is one time wrong. Therefore the interests that can protect themselves by knowing in advance what the weather may be consider it a good investment on the part of the Government to maintain the Weather Bureau; at least, the Committee on Agriculture is probably pressed harder by more people to extend the Weather Bureau than it is to extend any other bureau represented in this appropriation bill.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, after hearing the inquiry propounded by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], which implies a doubt relative to the value of the crop and weather service, I feel like saying a word of encouragement. I personally know that the farmers of the Mississippi Valley give careful attention to the reports made by the Weather Bureau and that they are much benefited by the same. I would favor liberal appropriations for the continuance of this service. If the men in charge are found to be incompetent, somebody else better qualified should be found. The service has made wonderful scientific progress in the last 25 years, and, in my judgment, is growing more reliable. The scientific mind is busy all the time discovering new means of observation in relation to the great mysteries of the elements—the sky, the clouds, and the wind—and, as a result, the weather. These are the elements that make weather, and we ought to be thankful that we have a climate of our own that is not subject to the winds of the universe, which would add very materially to the uncertainty. But when we know that the barometer at sea can foretell a typhoon and give a vessel an opportunity to sail a thousand miles out of her way to avoid that typhoon, we ought to know that, relatively, weather observations are making progress on land. The farmer could not do without the crop and weather service, and I hope it may be continued.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, before we leave that subject, I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD a letter received by a Member of the other House in regard to this service. Many similar letters have been received by members of the committee regarding the service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NEW ORLEANS COTTON EXCHANGE,
New Orleans, November 19, 1910.

Hon. A. S. BURLESON,
Member of Congress from Texas, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: You will remember that when you were in New Orleans during July last I promised to write to you in connection with that most valuable branch of the Government service to commercial and agricultural interests, the Weather Bureau.

During the last 10 years we have noted great improvements under Chief Willis L. Moore's direction, in the efficiency of the services rendered to the general public. The collection and distribution of weather data and forecasts have been systematized and improved until the value of the information can not be estimated in money terms. In the last two or three years, however, Congress seems to have adopted a policy of retrenchment in the amount of appropriations to the Weather Bureau which, if continued, will, in our opinion, seriously impair the efficiency of the service in addition to lessening its value.

With the end in view of obviating this serious setback and of increasing efficiency in the weather service we see the necessity for further extension in the interests of commerce and agriculture, and, therefore, would appreciate your services in obtaining necessary congressional action in securing sufficient appropriations enabling the bureau to continue and further enlarge its valuable field of usefulness.

We especially desire that you aid in having the daily reports from Birmingham, Ala.; Macon, Ga.; Key West, Fla.; Savannah, Ga.; Augusta, Ga.; Wilmington, N. C.; Asheville, N. C.; and El Paso, Tex., telegraphed to Weather Bureau stations in the Southern States. These formerly appeared on the daily maps, but have been discontinued, owing to the reduced appropriations.

The extension of the agricultural area in the State of Texas and especially in the western part of that State have created a want for more data relative to the weather, etc., of that section, consequently the following additional special cotton-region stations would, in our opinion, be of immeasurable value to the trade, viz: San Diego, Duval County; Clarendon, Donley County; Hondo, Medina County; Llano, Llano County; Haskell, Haskell County; Eastland, Eastland County; Snyder, Scurry County; Spur, Dickens County; El Paso, El Paso County.

Thanking you for your consideration of this request, and assuring you of our appreciation thereof, I am

Yours, very truly, E. J. GLENNY, Vice President.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 7, line 25, after the word "repairs," to insert "and improvements," so as to make the clause read:

For rent of offices and repairs and improvements to buildings now completed and located outside of the District of Columbia and care and preservation of grounds, including construction of sidewalks on public streets abutting Weather Bureau grounds, $97,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 11, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two hundred and ninety thousand seven" and insert "three hundred and fifteen thousand seven," so as to make the clause read:

For telephone rentals and for telegraphing, telephoning, and cabling reports and messages, rates to be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture by agreements with the companies performing the service, $315,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 4, to increase the total appropriation for general expenses of the Weather Bureau from $1,252,780 to $1,277,780.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 6, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Weather Bureau from $1,590,950 to $1,615,950.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 12, before the word "dollars," to insert "five hundred," and in line 13, before the word "dollars," to insert "two hundred and fifty," so as to read:

Salaries, Bureau of Animal Industry: One chief of bureau, $5,000; one chief clerk, $2,500; one editor and compiler, $2,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 12, to increase the total appropriation for salaries, Bureau of Animal Industry, from $346,700 to $347,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 15, to strike out:

The act of August 30, 1890, is hereby amended so as to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture, within his discretion, and under such joint regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury, to permit the admission of tick-infested cattle from Mexico into that part of Texas below the southern cattle-quarantine line.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 23, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Bureau of Animal Industry from $1,654,000 to $1,654,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 31, on page 15.

Mr. WARREN. I ask at this point to offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, after line 21, insert the following paragraph:

For the feeding, protecting, and removal to safety of elk in the country known as Jacksons Hole and the Teton locality, in the State of Wyoming, $20,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. It is evident, since there is a special notice or order of a privileged nature at 5 o'clock, that we shall not be able to complete the consideration of the bill this evening. Several Senators have important matters which they wish to bring up and get into conference. I therefore ask to lay the bill aside, and I give notice that I shall call it up at the very earliest possible moment next Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming withdraws the bill from present consideration.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY DIRECT VOTE.

Mr. JONES. I desire to give notice that following the speech of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] on Monday I shall submit some remarks on the joint resolution providing for the election of Senators by direct vote of the people.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 31856) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 11, 20, 30, 31, 37, 38, 39, 46, 50, 59, 65, 69, 75, 78, 79, 80, 83, 84, 85, 86, 101, 104, 107, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 123, 129 134, 137, 140, 142, 143, 147, 150, 152, 159, 164, 165, 171, 172, 175, 176, 181, 187, 188, 190, 191, 196, 199, 200, 202, 203, 204, 205, 209, 213, 220, 222, 230, 231, 232, 235, 238, 239, and 240.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 32, 33, 35, 36, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 47, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 66, 67, 68, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 76, 77, 82, 87, 88, 91, 92, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 103, 108, 119, 120, 122, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 130, 131, 135, 138, 139, 141, 144, 146, 153, 154, 158, 162, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 173, 174, 177, 180, 182, 183, 184, 189, 193, 194, 197, 206, 210, 212, 214, 215, 216, 217, 221, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 233, 234, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, and 249, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,600"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$117,086"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "The provisions of the act approved March 15, 1898, as amended by the act approved July 7, 1898, regulating leave of absence to employees of the Federal Government, are hereby made applicable to the regular annual employees of the government of the District of Columbia, except the police and fire departments, and public-school officers, teachers, and employees"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$179,810"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "two cataloguers, at $540 each"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$40,940"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 81, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$123,650"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 89 and 90, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Transpose said amendments and insert the same on page 33 of the bill, after line 26, amended as follows: In line 8 of amendment numbered 89 strike out the word "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$65,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 94, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$130,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$260,000," and on page 35 of the bill, in line 24, after the word "specifications," insert the following:

"Provided further, That whenever it shall appear to said commissioners that the work now performed under contract, namely, street sweeping and cleaning alleys and unimproved streets, can, in their judgment, be performed under their immediate direction more advantageously to the District, then, in that event, said commissioners are hereby authorized to perform any part or all of said work in such manner, and to employ all necessary personal services, and purchase and maintain such street-cleaning apparatus, horses, harness, carts, wagons, tools, and equipment as may be necessary for the purpose, and of this appropriation the sum of $40,000 is hereby made immediately available."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Interior Park: For the condemnation of land in the interior of square 534, within the limiting lines shown on approved plans in the office of the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, and for the development of the land so acquired as an interior park: Provided, That the said land shall be condemned by a proceeding in rem in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia within six months after the date of the passage of this act: And provided further, That of the amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said condemnation proceedings as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned, plus the cost and expense of said proceeding, not less than one-third thereof shall be assessed by the jury as benefits, $78,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 105, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$46,495"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$13,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$23,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "forty-six"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 133, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "sixty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 136, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$940,009.50"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 145, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$536,170"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 148, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$31,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 149, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$128,800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 151, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to make an investigation as to the necessity of installing a high-pressure fire-service system in the business section of the city of Washington, and to report the results of such investigation to Congress at its next regular session"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 155, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That hereafter any inspector of dairies and dairy farms may act as inspector of live stock when directed by the health officer"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 156, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 68 of the bill, in line 6, strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 157, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For the construction of a pound and stable, to be immediately available, $10,000: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to build said pound and stable on public space owned or controlled by said District adjacent to James Creek Canal"; and the Senate agree to the same.

J. H. GALLINGER,
CHARLES CURTIS,
B. R. TILLMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WASHINGTON GARDNER,
E. L. TAYLOR, Jr.,
A. S. BURLESON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that we take up the calendar, under Rule VIII, and proceed to the consideration of bills under unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that we proceed to the calendar, under Rule VIII, for the consideration of such bills as shall be called up by Senators, as the Chair understands the Senator from Utah. Let the Chair understand the Senator. Not that we follow the calendar, but take up such bills as are called up by individual Senators?

Mr. SMOOT. Such as are called up by individual Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say to the Senator, before that is done, I have a report I should like to make.

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield as soon as the request for unanimous consent is agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair understand first whether that will be done. Then it will be very easy to proceed with other matters by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of——

MARINE BIOLOGICAL STATION IN FLORIDA.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Fisheries, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10430) to authorize the establishment of a marine biological station on the Gulf coast of the State of Florida, to report it. There was a mistake made this morning. On behalf of the Senator from Florida I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I will say the same bill has passed the House, except that the appropriation was stricken out by the House. It passed the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be reported first.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to establish a marine biological station on the Gulf of Mexico at a point on the coast of the State of Florida, to be selected by him, at a cost not to exceed $50,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOCATORS OF OIL AND GAS LANDS.

Mr. FLINT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H R. 32344) to protect the locators in good faith of oil and gas lands who shall have effected an actual discovery of oil or gas on the public lands of the United States, or their successors in interest.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LODGE. This seems to me an extremely important bill. I do not profess to understand it.

Mr. FLINT. I can explain it to the Senator in a moment.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to involve the whole matter of oil and gas lands.

Mr. FLINT. The Senator from Massachusetts is entirely mistaken. It does not involve anything of the kind. It is simply to correct a decision that has been rendered in reference to oil lands. The bill is recommended by the department in that very decision, and this bill should pass. It is simply to make a correction.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 3, to strike out "entry into possession thereof covered by any withdrawal" and to insert "inception of development on or under such claim withdrawn from mineral entry," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in no case shall patent be denied to or for any lands heretofore located or claimed under the mining laws of the United States containing petroleum, mineral oil, or gas solely because of any transfer or assignment thereof or of any interest or interests therein by the original locator or locators, or any of them, to any qualified persons or person, or corporation, prior to discovery of oil or gas therein, but if such claim is in all other respects valid and regular, patent therefor, not exceeding 160 acres in any one claim, shall issue to the holder or holders thereof, as in other cases: Provided, however, That such lands were not at the time of inception of development on or under such claim withdrawn from mineral entry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

Mr. YOUNG. I wish to give notice that on Tuesday, immediately following the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], I desire to submit some remarks upon the proposed reciprocity contract with Canada.

CHARLES A. CASWELL.

Mr. BURNHAM. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 26606) for the relief of Charles A. Caswell, to report it favorably, and I submit a report (No. 1247) thereon. To it I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Charles A. Caswell, of Chicopee, Mass., $1,056 to compensate him for the accidental death of his son, Arthur O. Caswell, killed while in the employ of the Government on the Panama Canal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. HALE addressed the Chair.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. For the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5453) for the relief of the legal representatives of M. N. Swofford, deceased.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine desire to say something about the bill last passed?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

I undertook to get the floor, as did the Senator from Utah. I wish the Senator in charge of this matter would explain it. We are paying a year's salary to the father of an employee of the Government at Panama. I wish the Senator would state what reason and what precedent there is for such a measure; and I wish Senators would bear in mind what it means when Congress starts in, because an employee of the Government anywhere, even through the fault of the Government, is injured or killed, on the practice that the Government shall pay, as I understood this provision, a year's salary. Mr. President, that opens——

Mr. LODGE. We have a general law on that subject, the workmen's compensation act, which does exactly that.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator would have that provision read.

Mr. LODGE. What? The workmen's compensation act?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. It was passed by this Congress, I think.

Mr. HALE. I know——

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. DEPEW. I think that that compensation act does not reach the employees on the Panama Canal.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly it does not. It does not reach the employees on the Canal Zone.

Mr. HALE. I did not understand that it did.

Mr. LODGE. I did not say it reached them. I said we had passed a workmen's compensation act. But we recognized that principle. This applies to a man killed on the Panama Canal work, as I understand.

Mr. HALE. I did not understand that the workingmen's compensation act applied to such employees.

Mr. LODGE. I do not understand it does, but I have not examined it with that in view.

Mr. HALE. And I do not understand that by analogy it does.

Mr. LODGE. It does by analogy.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator who reported the bill whether the amount reported is just a year's salary, or was there some other amount added to it for expenses?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amount reported was $1,056.

Mr. BURNHAM. That is a year's pay; but I may say in this connection that, as I understand, the act was passed the 1st of May, 1908, and this man was killed June 1 of the same year.

Mr. HALE. I wish somebody would have read the workingmen's compensation act.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF M. N. SWOFFORD, DECEASED.

Mr. BAILEY. While Senators are searching for the law, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5453) for the relief of the legal representatives of M. N. Swofford, deceased.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to the legal representatives of M. N. Swofford, deceased, the balance that now stands to the credit of the decedent for services from January 1 to May 31, 1861, amounting to $2,965.92, as mail contractor on three routes in the State of Louisiana.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES A. CASWELL.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 30570) to authorize the receipt of certified checks drawn on national banks for duties on imports and internal taxes, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. To dispose of the other matter, I will object to it, and that will carry it over. Then we can hunt up the law.

Mr. LODGE. Do not object to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the consideration of the bill, which was supposed to have been passed a moment ago.

Mr. LODGE. That will require reconsideration.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; it had not been passed.

Mr. LODGE. It certainly had.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair had announced it from the desk.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the votes by which the bill was read the third time and passed are reconsidered, and the bill goes over.

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: I ask that the bill (H. R. 26606) for the relief of Charles A. Caswell, which was laid aside, may be disposed of.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HALE. I find on an examination that while the case does not technically come under the law, the technicality is so narrow and the equities are so broad, I do not think it is worth while to make further objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF CUSTOMS AND INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXES.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 30570) to authorize the receipt of certified checks drawn on national banks for duties on imports and internal taxes, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to hear the bill read.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the Secretary state the amendments.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, after the word "national," strike out "banks" and insert "and," so as to read "national and State banks."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 6, to strike out "and trust companies."

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the amendment.

In many States the trust companies are doing a strictly legitimate banking business. There is one in my State, with a million dollars capital, the largest one we have, and it is called a bank and trust company. Why trust companies should not issue these checks just as well as State or national banks, I can not understand. The Senate committee has recommended that amendment. I object to it.

Mr. BAILEY. I will state to the Senator from North Carolina that I am perhaps responsible for the action of the committee. Trust companies were not organized to conduct the business of a commercial bank, and their very existence is due to the fact that the banks could not safely carry certain transactions.

The banks do not undertake to transact the business of a trust company, and if they did the comptroller would call them to account very promptly and properly.

If it is not safe for a commercial bank to transact a trust-company business, then, certainly, it is not safe for a trust company to transact the business of a commercial bank.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why should not——

Mr. BAILEY. In just a moment. Let me finish. My own opinion is that no trust company ought to be permitted to receive deposits payable on demand, because, in the nature of things, they invest their funds in enterprises and in ways which would result in no little embarrassment to them if they were called upon to meet considerable withdrawals in a short time.

We know, as a matter of fact, that more than once in the existence of these trust companies there have been financial disturbances due to a withdrawal of deposits from them, which withdrawals they were not prepared to meet. That is the only objection I myself have to the bill, and that is the only objection which it seems to me is tenable.

But it does seem to me that if the banks are not permitted by law to go into the business of trust companies, these trust companies ought not to be encouraged by the law to go into the business of a bank. That is the whole case. It was a matter of doubt with me whether the Government ought to accept anything but its own coin or its own notes. But as every citizen accepts these checks, I thought the Government might prudently do so, but I thought it ought to be confined to purely commercial banks. For a long time the Government of the United States would not accept its own notes in payment of customs dues. Of course that was due to the fact that the interest on the public debt was payable in coin. The collections through the customhouses were reserved for the payment of the interest on them in coin.

We have passed that time. All of our notes are redeemable in coin on demand of the holder, and obviously it is absurd for the Government any longer to make a distinction at any of its counters, whether the customhouses or internal-revenue offices, between the different kinds of money which it circulates. I am willing to go this step further, because I believe it will be a public convenience and entirely safe, in view of the fact that the check certified one day will be cashed the same day or the next.

Mr. OVERMAN. A few of the leading banks in my State are banking and trust companies, doing nothing but a banking business. One is one of the largest banks we have. Why should that be made an exception to, and the State banks be given the privilege?

There is another bank there—the leading bank in the State, with over a million dollars capital, doing a banking business. Why should it be excepted and not allowed to give these checks? There are trust companies all over the country that do a banking business, and strictly a banking business, and why, under the amendment of the Senate committee, should they be cut out? I do not think the amendment ought to be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. On that I ask for a division.

Mr. LODGE. Unanimous consent was given for the consideration of unobjected bills.

Mr. SMOOT. This is nearly through.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent was given for the consideration of this bill.

The Senate divided.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. GRONNA. I submit an amendment to this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota offers an amendment to the bill which the Secretary will report.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, at his discretion and under such regulations as he may prescribe, permit the receipt of certified checks drawn on banks in payment of all public dues, direct the deposit of the same in depositary banks to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, and authorize the transfer of such deposits to the credit of disbursing officers in subtreasury cities as elsewhere.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota to the bill. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the noes have it.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask for a division.

The Senate divided.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the receipt of certified checks drawn on national and State banks for duties on imports and internal taxes, and for other purposes."

DEPOSITS IN NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18014) to amend section 996 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act of February 19, 1897.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend section 996 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act of February 19, 1897, so as to read as follows:

SEC. 996. No money deposited as aforesaid shall be withdrawn except by order of the judge or judges of said court, respectively, in term or in vacation, to be signed by such judge or judges, and to be entered and certified of record by the clerk; and every such order shall state the cause in or on account of which it is drawn.

In every case in which a right to withdraw money so deposited has been adjudicated or is not in dispute, and such money has remained so deposited for a period of five years unclaimed by the person entitled thereto, it shall be the duty of the judge or judges of said court, respectively, to cause such money to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States in the name of and to the credit of the United States: Provided always, That any person entitled to such money may thereafter, on petition and notice to the United States attorney, and full proof of his right thereto, obtain an order of said court directing payment of such money to himself; and this act shall constitute and be taken and held to be a permanent appropriation of the funds needed for the payment of all such orders.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Since reporting the bill, which was a report of the Judiciary Committee, the Attorney General suggests that it be amended as indicated by a mark on the paper I have sent to the Secretary's desk. I ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all of the print on the second page, beginning with the words "In every case," in line 1, and insert:

In every case in which the right to withdraw money so deposited has been adjudicated or is not in dispute and such money has remained so deposited for at least five years unclaimed by the person entitled thereto, it shall be the duty of the judge or judges of said court, or its successor, to cause such money to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, in the name and to the credit of the United States: Provided, That any person or persons or any corporation or company entitled to any such money may, on petition to the court from which the money was received, or its successor, and upon notice to the United States attorney and full proof of right thereto, obtain an order of court directing the payment of such money to the claimant, and the money deposited as aforesaid shall constitute and be a permanent appropriation for payments in obedience to such orders, and this act is applicable to all money deposited in the Treasury of the United States in accordance with section 996, Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended February 19, 1897.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MEMORIAL OF BATTLE OF LAKE ERIE.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 10792) to promote the erection of a memorial in conjunction with a Perry's victory centennial celebration on Put in Bay Island during the year 1913 in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the Battle of Lake Erie and the northwestern campaign of Gen. William Henry Harrison in the War of 1812. I do not think it will give rise to any debate.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to appropriate $250,000 toward the erection of a memorial in commemoration of the victory of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry on Lake Erie and in aid of the Perry's victory centennial celebration to be held during the year 1913 on Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, Ohio, the same to be disbursed by the Perry's Victory Centennial Commission.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KEAN. Let the preamble be stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the preamble will be stricken out.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave to call up House bill 32440.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota to give a notice.

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I give notice that on Tuesday, February 28, immediately after the Senator from Iowa [Mr. YOUNG] has concluded his address, I shall make some observations on the proposed Canadian agreement.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE LOVERING.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives on the death of Hon. WILLIAM C. LOVERING, late a Representative from the State of Massachusetts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 5, 1910.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM C. LOVERING, late a Member of this House from the State of Massachusetts, which occurred in this city on February 4, 1910.

Resolved, That the business of the House is now suspended that opportunity may be given to pay tribute to his memory.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public service the House, at the conclusion of the memorial exercises of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and I ask for their adoption.

The resolution (S. Res. 371) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate expresses its profound sorrow on account of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM C. LOVERING, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tributes may be paid his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, practically all of Mr. LOVERING's long life was spent within the district which he so well represented for almost 14 years. His parents moved to Taunton in 1837, and here he made his home. His delicate health made it impossible for him to enter college, but he studied in private schools and at an early age he entered the cotton business with his father, who was one of the pioneer cotton manufacturers of that part of the State. When the Civil War opened he was prompt to offer his services, but ill health made it impossible for him to continue in the army. From that time on he took an ever-increasing part in the management of the cotton business, not only in the mechanical arrangements, but in the designing of the pattern of the fabric, and it was largely to his skill both as a manager and a designer that the success of the firm was due. This thorough knowledge of all branches of the cotton manufacturing was recognized later by his selection as head of the Arkwright Club and the New England Association of Cotton Manufacturers. But his experience was not confined merely to this industry. He had other large interests which brought him in touch with all sections of the country and gave him a clear and comprehensive understanding of the fundamental principles of banking and of the problems of foreign trade.

His public service began in the State senate of Massachusetts in 1874, and it was during his term there that a bill was passed, the first, I believe, in any State, which attempted to regulate and limit the hours of labor. Although he continued his interest in State and national politics and served as delegate to one of the national conventions, he did not enter public life actively again until 1896, when he was elected to the Fifty-first Congress and thereafter served continuously to the time of his death.

He was 60 years old when he entered the House, and he brought to his duties a large experience and a practical training which gave much weight to his views on banking and currency and the drawback provisions of the tariff, subjects to which he had given long and careful study. Mr. LOVERING was not a man who through powers of oratory sought to enforce his views, but his work, quiet and unobtrusive though it was, was none the less effective, and his ability was fully recognized and his advice sought on these matters.

It is with financial and customs legislation that his name is most associated, but he was actively interested in many other matters. His district, with its long stretch of dangerous coast, made him familiar with the perils and hardships of the life-saving corps, and to him more than any other are due the laws which helped to improve the service and to raise it to the present high plane of efficiency. He was an early advocate of legislation to regulate by Federal law the hours of labor throughout the country, and he believed thoroughly in the power and duty of the Government to prevent dealings in "futures," subjects which are once again engaging the attention of Congress.

He was devoted to the interests of his district, widely diversified as they are, and yet he never hesitated to pursue the course which he believed to be right, even at the cost of seeming unpopularity. He was a man who thought deeply and who reached his own conclusions through force of reason. In these conclusions he differed many times from the majority of his party, and although himself a strong party man he never sacrificed his convictions to the will of the majority. Always kindly and courteous, a man of refined tastes, with a high character and an integrity which was never questioned, he was an example of the unselfish and devoted public servant. The patriotism which led him to the Army in the Civil War remained with him throughout his life and inspired all his public service.

Mr. WETMORE. Mr. President, Mr. LOVERING was born in Rhode Island of Massachusetts parents, who shortly afterwards moved to Taunton, Mass., where and at Cambridge he received his education, and then for two years was with his father in the business of cotton manufacturing.

At the outbreak of the Civil War he became an officer in a Massachusetts brigade, but was obliged shortly afterwards to retire, owing to serious illness. From this time, and for the rest of his life, he was interested principally in the manufacture of cotton.

In addition to his own business, he held, at different times, important positions in a number of enterprises, as well as in charitable and other associations.

Before entering the Congress of the United States Mr. LOVERING had service in the legislature of his State and had been a delegate to and presided over Republican conventions. Mr. LOVERING was elected to the House of Representatives of the United States in 1896 to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the twelfth Massachusetts district, and was reelected from the same district to the two following Congresses, and then, when the State was redistricted, from the fourteenth district for four additional terms, and thus had consecutive service for more than 13 years. With one exception, he received at his last election (in 1908) the largest plurality his constituents ever gave him.

During Mr. LOVERING'S congressional service he was an active and influential member of some of its most important committees. On public questions in general his views were liberal. He was particularly interested in matters relating to finance, taxation, commerce, and manufactures, on which he was well qualified to speak with authority.

Mr. LOVERING'S clear-cut features, expressive eyes, well-modulated voice, quiet and unobtrusive manners, coupled with a slight appearance of reserve, all went to make a very attractive personality.

The large attendance at Taunton on the bleak and wintry day of his funeral, a little more than a year ago, gave ample evidence of the high regard in which Mr. LOVERING was held in his State and at his home town.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. President, WILLIAM CROAD LOVERING, although a native of Rhode Island, passed most of his life in the State which honored him with membership in the National House of Representatives. His father was born in Massachusetts, and returned to the State and took up his residence in Taunton in 1837, when the future Member of the House of Representatives whom we mourn to-day was only 2 years old. When Mr. LOVERING had completed his education in the Cambridge High School and the Hopkins Classical School, he entered upon a business career with his father in the Whittenton Mills of Taunton. He gave himself earnestly to his work, and eventually became the president of the company. He was also interested in many other concerns.

His excellent and long business training and the active interest he always took in the affairs of his city equipped him for taking up the problems before him when he entered the State senate and enabled him to deal with the questions affecting labor which arose when he was a member of that body and later when he became a Representative in Congress. He was in the Army during the Civil War as quartermaster of engineers, but owing to ill health was obliged to retire from the service after a brief period. Even his short service, however, bound him ever after to those of his community who had served their country on the field, so that he was an earnest member of the Grand Army Post of his city. His business experience, thorough investigation of industrial questions, and his excellent judgment made him a valuable man on the two most important committees on which he served, those of Banking and Currency and of Interstate and Foreign Commerce. His counsel was much sought. At a time of life when most men, after arduous business pursuits, are ready to lay aside all active work, public honors came upon him, and he pursued his work here with the interest of a much younger man and the devotion which he had given to his own private interests for so many years. He was loyal to his constituents, serving them with great earnestness and fidelity, and he had their confidence in an unusual degree.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE TIRRELL.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives on the death of Hon. CHARLES QUINCY TIRRELL, late a Representative from the State of Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 12, 1911.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. CHARLES QUINCY TIRRELL, late a Member of this House from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions and ask for their adoption.

The resolutions (S. Res. 372) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate expresses its profound sorrow on account of the death of the Hon. CHARLES QUINCY TIRRELL, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tributes may be paid his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, CHARLES QUINCY TIRRELL, whose memory we commemorate here to-day, was born in Sharon, Mass., December 10, 1844. His parents were the familiar, sturdy type of the time, and while their son was still a young boy they moved from Sharon to Westfield. From all accounts he was the usual normal boy, participating in the sports of his playmates and doing generally what boys of that age and generation did for recreation and pleasure. He attended the public schools and entered Dartmouth College, from which he graduated in the class of 1866, one year after the close of the Civil War. After graduation from college his first employment was as a school-teacher. He was principal of Peacham Academy, at Peacham, Vt., for one year, and for the next two years he was principal of the high school at St. Johnsbury, in the same State.

In the three years that he was engaged in teaching he found time to take up the study of the law, and finally, giving up his position as teacher, he went to Boston and entered the law office of R. H. Dana, jr., distinguished lawyer and jurist, and in 1870 was admitted to practice before the Suffolk County bar.

He was a resident of Weymouth during the first year or two of his law work, and in 1872 was elected to the general court from that town. In 1873 he married Miss Mary F. Hollis, of Natick, to which place he removed, and it was here that he made his home up to the time of his death.

In 1881 he was elected to the Massachusetts Senate and was reelected the following year. He served as a presidential elector for his district in 1888. He entered the House in 1900 as a Member of the Fifty-seventh Congress, and was reelected to the Fifty-eighth, Fifty-ninth, and Sixtieth Congresses, his service ending with his death on July 31, 1910.

It will be seen from this record of Mr. TIRRELL's service that he was always deeply interested in public affairs, and as early as 1869, while residing in Weymouth, he was a member of the school board and continued a member until his removal to Natick. In his home town he was always foremost in any movement of a public nature, and for many years he served as moderator of the town meetings.

He was a leader in Masonic and temperance organizations, and reached in time the highest office in the State body of Odd Fellows.

In business Mr. TIRRELL was active in banking and in the law, and was conspicuously successful in both. He was a quiet, painstaking, and methodical worker. Whether as a teacher, banker, or lawyer, he was always trusted and relied upon, and when he entered upon his service here in Washington it was his careful and assiduous application to his duties which made him of such value to his district, his State, and the Nation. His committee assignments were varied and important, but he could always be counted upon to do his work thoroughly and with an eye single to the best interests of the Government.

He was an upright, high-minded man, and his death was a loss to his State and to the House of Representatives. I knew Mr. TIRRELL first in 1881, when he was serving as a member of the State senate, and our friendship remained unbroken until his death. To me his death is not only a public loss but a personal sorrow.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. President, it was my good fortune to know CHARLES Q. TIRRELL for many years. A native of the Old Bay State, he spent his entire life there, with the exception of the period of his course at Dartmouth College and three years during which he taught at Peacham and St. Johnsbury, Vt. I had known him as an able and high-minded lawyer before he came to Congress 10 years ago. He took a special interest in all questions pertaining to the welfare of the town of Natick, which was his home after his marriage in 1873, and his devotion to the work of upbuilding the community was recognized by his people, his popularity at home being attested by the fact that he was chosen as moderator of the town meetings year after year.

Mr. TIRRELL was an ardent advocate of the temperance cause, and his attitude toward this subject was shown in the stand he always took in the halls of Congress whenever that cause was under consideration.

He served a year in the Massachusetts House of Representatives and two years as State senator. In 1888 he was a presidential elector. His service in the National House of Representatives continued through almost five terms. In all of his public life he was actuated by a desire not merely to serve his constituents with fidelity, but at all times to do what seemed to him to be right and in accord with his own conscience and judgment. He studied all public questions with a desire to understand them thoroughly before taking action. It was this faculty which made him so valuable a committee worker in the House of Representatives, and his membership upon the important Committee on the Judiciary afforded him a large field for the exercise of his legal talents and knowledge. He took full advantage of the opportunity thus offered and was exceedingly helpful in the investigation of many important measures with which that committee was called upon to deal. His devotion to his duties in Washington was especially noteworthy during the last year or two of his life here, for in spite of poor health which came upon him he continued his attendance upon his committees and the House and gave his strength to the work in hand. In fact, he was never physically strong, but the determination and strength of character which he possessed made it possible for him to accomplish much. He will always be remembered as a helpful, earnest worker, not only for his town and community, but for his Commonwealth and for his country.

The uncertainty of life is brought home to us to-day when we recall that on June 5, 1910, CHARLES Q. TIRRELL delivered an address in the House of Representatives upon the life and character of William C. Lovering, who died February 4, 1910, and that we are now met to express our appreciation of the service of Mr. TIRRELL, who passed away July 31 last, only about seven weeks after he had spoken in the historic hall at the other end of the Capitol of the work of his colleague.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of Mr. LOVERING and Mr. TIRRELL, late Members of the House of Representatives, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 27, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 25, 1911.

The House met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report on the bill (H. R. 31856) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1912, together with a statement of the conferees, and ask that the same be printed under the rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. This being the first of the last six days, the report can be printed under the rule or be acted upon at this time.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that I will call up this report early at the Monday session.

The SPEAKER. As the gentleman chooses. He may call it up now if he desires. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman, as this is the first of the last six days of the session, and only two of the appropriation bills have been enrolled, if he does not think it is practicable to get it out of the way?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call it up now, if it does not seem to take any advantage of gentlemen who may have objection to the report. I would say that it is a full and complete agreement.

The SPEAKER. Which passes on the report first, the House or the Senate?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The Senate has already passed it. Now it is for the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. It is important that these bills should be disposed of. If it goes back to conference, it is doubly important.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is equally important, Mr. Speaker, that the bill should not embody legislative provisions for nearly 500 Members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky has made a point of order, but has not stated what it is about. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] desire to call his report up now?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I do, and ask unanimous consent to have the statement read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will read the report.

(For report see Senate proceedings of Friday, February 24, 1911, page 3251.)

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 31856) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1912 submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On amendments Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14, relating to the executive offices: Increases the salaries of the commissioners from $5,000 to $6,000 each, one stenographer and typewriter from $720 to $840, the purchasing officer from $2,500 to $2,750, one clerk from $1,200 to $1,300, three clerks from $600 each to $720 each, the inspector of buildings from $2,750 to $3,000, reimburses two elevator inspectors for maintenance of motor cycles at $15 per month each, and strikes out the proposed increase of salary of the storekeeper from $900 to $1,000.

On amendments Nos. 44 and 45: Increases the salary of an assistant computer from $825 to $900 in the surveyor's office.

On amendments Nos. 46, 47, 48, and 49, relating to the Free Public Library: Strikes out the proposed increase in the salary of the assistant librarian from $1,500 to $1,600, provides for one additional assistant at $720 and for one additional cataloguer at $540.

On amendment No. 50: Appropriates $34,500, as proposed by the House, instead of $37,500, as proposed by the Senate, for contingent expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

On amendment No. 51: Appropriates $10,000, instead of $9,000, as proposed by the Senate, for postage.

On amendments Nos. 52 and 53, relating to the coroner's office: Makes the appropriations available for the "purchase and maintenance of means of transportation" instead of "for livery of horses or horse hire," and inserts the provision, proposed by the Senate, relating to juries of inquest.

On amendment No. 54: Appropriates $500, as proposed by the Senate, for erection of historical tablets.

On amendment No. 55: Limits the use of the fees of the recorder of deeds for purchase of typewriters to those of the year 1911 instead of the years 1911 and 1912.

On amendment No. 56: Makes available during the fiscal year 1912 the appropriation of $10,000 made for the year 1910 for repair of buildings that may be injured by fire.

On amendment No. 57: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate authorizing purchases without advertising for proposals in amounts not exceeding $25.

On amendment No. 58: Appropriates $500, as proposed by the Senate, for purchase of apparatus for the office of the inspector of asphalts and cements, and inserts a provision authorizing the establishment of a municipal asphalt plant.

On amendment No. 59: Strikes out the appropriation proposed by the Senate of $3,000 for alterations in the repair shop.

On amendment No. 60: Appropriates $340,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $180,000, as proposed by the House, for assessment and permit work.

On amendment No. 61: Appropriates $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, for paving roadways under the permit system.

On amendments No. 62, 63, and 64: Appropriates $79,500, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $61,500, as proposed by the House, for work on streets and avenues.

On amendments Nos. 65, 66, and 67: Strikes out the appropriation of $27,000, proposed by the Senate, for removing granite block and repaving with asphalt Seventh Street, from K Street to P Street; appropriates $14,000 for grading and improving Seventeenth Street NW., as proposed by the Senate; and makes the appropriation of $8,000, proposed by the House, available, as proposed by the Senate, for connecting Belmont and Fifteenth Streets NW.

On amendments Nos. 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, and 81: Appropriates $123,650, instead of $77,850, as proposed by the House, and $161,600, as proposed by the Senate, for the construction of certain county roads and public streets; and provides that the appropriations in detail for such construction shall constitute one fund.

On amendment No. 82: Inserts the provision, proposed by the Senate, requiring the Anacostia & Potomac River Railroad Co. to remove and relocate certain of its tracks.

On amendments Nos. 83, 84, and 85: Strikes out the appropriations, proposed by the Senate, of $2,500 for replacing sidewalks on the east side of the White Lot, $1,500 for new sidewalks around the Patent Office, and $2,500 for replacing sidewalks around the old Post Office Building.

On amendments Nos. 86 and 87: Appropriates $140,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $130,000, as proposed by the House, for repairs of county roads.

On amendment No. 88: Appropriates $16,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $15,000, as proposed by the House, for construction and repair of bridges.

On amendments Nos. 89 and 90: Appropriates $100,000, instead of $75,000, as proposed by the Senate, toward constructing a bridge across Rock Creek on the line of Q Street.

On amendments Nos. 91, 92, 93, and 94, relating to sewers: Appropriates $44,500, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $43,000, as proposed by the House, for the sewage pumping service, and makes the sum available for the maintenance of motor vehicles; appropriates $65,000, instead of $67,000 as proposed by the Senate and $60,000 as proposed by the House, for main and pipe sewers; and $130,000, instead of $161,000 as proposed by the Senate and $110,000 as proposed by the House, for suburban sewers.

On amendment No. 95: Appropriates $260,000, instead of $270,000 as proposed by the Senate and $250,000 as proposed by the House, for sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets.

On amendments Nos. 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, and 211, relating to child-caring institutions: Strikes out the provision for an additional placing officer at $1,000 and the increase in the salary of an investigating clerk from $900 to $960 for the Board of Children's Guardians; increases the salary of two assistant caretakers from $300 to $360, and provides for a stableman at $300 for the Industrial Home for Colored Children; strikes out the increase, from $6,000 to $7,500, for maintenance and from $250 to $450 for furniture and equipment for the institution.

On amendments Nos. 212 and 213: Inserts the provision, proposed by the Senate, authorizing the acceptance as a donation the property known as the Night Lodging House, and strikes out the appropriation of $5,000, proposed by the Senate, for the Columbia Polytechnic Institute.

On amendment No. 214: Prohibits the use of any appropriation heretofore made as well as of appropriations contained in the act for 1912 for a reformatory, asylum, or workhouse in Virginia or Maryland within 10 miles of Mount Vernon, except the one at Occoquan.

On amendments Nos. 215, 216, 217, and 218, relating to the workhouse at Occoquan: Appropriates $193,000, instead of $288,000, with $80,000, instead of $91,000, thereof immediately available, for maintenance and operation, and inserts the provision, proposed by the Senate, relative to the delivery to and custody of male and female prisoners in the institution.

On amendments Nos. 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, and 228, relating to the militia: Appropriates $48,000 instead of $49,000, as proposed by the Senate, and $47,000, as proposed by the House, for expenses of camps; $2,250, as proposed by the Senate, for cleaning uniforms; $1,250, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,500, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses of target practice, and inserts provisions into the text of the appropriation for payment of troops, proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 229: Appropriates $100,000, as proposed by the Senate, toward the improvement of the Anacostia River Flats.

On amendment No. 230: Strikes out the appropriation of $210,000, proposed by the Senate, for the purchase of Carpenter (Pennsylvania Avenue) tract of land.

On amendment No. 231: Strikes out the proposed authorization of an appropriation of $300,000 for the acquisition of the land known as the Klingleford Valley.

On amendment No. 232: Authorizing the purchase and maintenance of a motor runabout for the water department.

On amendment No. 233: Authorizes the use of $70,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $65,000, as proposed by the House, for personal services in connection with the execution of public works in the District of Columbia.

On amendments Nos. 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, and 249, relating to public lighting: Authorizes rates of $15, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $14.50, as proposed by the House, for 40-candlepower incandescent lamps on overhead wires; $17.50, as proposed by the House, instead of $19, as proposed by the Senate, for 60-candlepower incandescent lamps on overhead wires; $80, instead of $85, as proposed by the Senate, and $72.50, as proposed by the House, for 528 and 550 watt series inclosed and multiple inclosed arc lamps; $72.50, as proposed by the House, instead of $75, as proposed by the Senate, for 320 watt magnetite or other arc lamps; requires replacing of certain electric lights by April 1, 1914, as proposed by the House, instead of 1915, as proposed by the Senate; fixes the limit of cost of lamp-posts and equipment at $60, as proposed by the House, instead of $50, as proposed by the Senate; authorizes a reduction of $6.60, as proposed by the House, instead of $4.40, as proposed by the Senate, from the price of electric arc lamps if the commissioners furnish the equipment therefor; provides that in the event the commissioners have to adopt forms of electric street lighting other than those provided for in the bill, a fair sum for the cost of maintenance may be allowed; prohibits public electric lighting by overhead wires within the existing fire limits of the District; makes certain necessary verbal corrections; and inserts a provision imposing a penalty of $25 per day for failure on the part of any gas light or electric-light company to furnish or discontinue any street lamp that the commissioners may direct.

WASHINGTON GARDNER,
EDWARD L. TAYLOR, Jr.,
A. S. BURLESON,
Managers on the part of the House.

During the reading of the statement,

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. For the purpose of making a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will have to finish reading the report before anything else is in order, unless there is unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I was going to withdraw my demand for the reading of the whole report for the purpose of making a point of order just here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his demand for a reading of the report. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I make a point of order against amendment No. 58, which is entirely new matter. It is to be found on pages 3455 and 3456 of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is it at the top of page 3456, first column?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this matter was stricken out on a point of order in the House. It went over to the Senate, and the Senate did not make provision for this, but the committee on conference itself has done so. Therefore it is new legislation, unauthorized by law; and these conferees, 4, or 5, or 6 of them, have undertaken to legislate about a matter that this House knows nothing about. Nearly 500 men in these two bodies are without information concerning it. I have not been given an opportunity to know anything about it, and for that reason I object to it and make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make any other point of order?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I apprehend it is true also, as the gentleman states, that this matter was never in dispute between the two Houses, and is not an amendment to anything as to which the Houses were at variance.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is no dispute between the two Houses about this item at all. The conferees have inserted it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The conferees have inserted it without the matter being before either House, whether by amendment or by the original bill that went to the Senate. It has not been put on by any amendment of the Senate. I repeat, there is none of the subject matter either in the original bill or in the bill as it left the Senate. It is an entirely new matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It may be one of the best items in the bill, but still it is a matter on which the two Houses have no information. If it is a matter that involves the employment of convict labor, or would make paving cheaper, the two Houses have a right to know something about it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order until he can hear from the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes, sir; I will reserve my point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, this matter was discussed very thoroughly before the committee, and then it was brought before the House. I will say in justification of the action of the conferees——

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentlemen who objected are not paying attention.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If I could have the attention of the gentlemen who are attacking this provision I would be very glad. We have heretofore had, gentlemen, competition here on the question of asphalt laying. Now there is no competition. The companies have consolidated. Since the consolidation they have advanced the price 32 cents per square yard. We have now to submit to receiving bids from only one company, for no outside company can come here and afford to establish a plant and take the chances of making a bid. There is in excess of half a million dollars to be expended in repairs and in the laying of new asphalt work, remember, without any competition. This matter was taken up openly and squarely and discussed in the House. The committee was unanimous and clear upon this. The bill went to the Senate, and the item was inserted there, and there went out on a point of order. But the Senator making the point of order subsequently said:

I would not have made the point of order had I been informed as to the true status of the situation.

With this understanding, the conferees felt justified, for the protection of the interests of the city and in order that the city government should not be held up by a single concern, in agreeing on a provision to authorize the establishment of the plant. It does not necessarily follow that a plant will be authorized, but this, as I say, is in the way of protection. It is a good proposition. And not only that, but——

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes; in just a moment. The committee in its investigation of the subject found that there are a very considerable number of cities throughout the country that now have their own asphalt plants. The city of New York has, as the gentleman who is now on his feet [Mr. GOULDEN] is doubtless aware, and in Detroit they have saved about $50,000 a year by the operation of the municipal asphalt plant.

In addition to this, we have now at Occoquan a workhouse where a large number of prisoners can be employed to get out the stone that will make a foundation upon which to rest this asphalt. If this provision is taken away, it will deprive the city of an outlet for much of the labor that is now at the command of the commissioners. We frankly state that this is in the nature of legislation, but the conferees of both Houses believe that we are not only justified in incorporating this provision, but required in the interest of the city so to do under the circumstances. The provision would have been in the bill when it went to conference if the Senator who made the point of order against it had understood it.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to indorse what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] has said regarding the plant in the city of New York. It has proven a very economical investment to the city. I would like to ask this question: What has been the cost hitherto per cubic yard for laying this asphalt?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. A very low price, I think; $1.45 per cubic yard.

Mr. GOULDEN. And now they have raised it 32 cents?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes; and no competition, with a contract of half a million dollars staring you in the face.

Mr. GOULDEN. Making an increase of fully 20 per cent on the cost price?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. With the probability of its going higher unless there is competition.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That is the expectation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, when this matter came before the House when the District appropriation bill was under consideration, I say that not more than four men on this floor had ever heard of this proposition before. Instead of its being taken up through the regular channel and the regular committee being advised as to what was sought to be done, the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations alone knew about it. Nobody else did know about it; and because nobody else did know about it I oppose the principle of three men legislating for this entire body without the knowledge or consent of the rest of the body.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The hearings before the subcommittee were printed, and every Member of the House had access to them.

Mr. MADDEN. Do I understand the gentleman from Kentucky to say that this matter was not discussed when the bill was under consideration in the House?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; the gentleman misunderstood me if he understood any such thing as that. I said that when it was brought on the floor of this House nobody had heard anything about it except the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh; up to the time it had been brought to the House?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. But, as a matter of fact, it was very thoroughly discussed on the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It was not very thoroughly discussed.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There was nobody then able to tell me, and I venture there is nobody able to tell me yet, the extent to which this property which is to be converted into this plant is leased. There is nobody prepared to tell me now to what extent the lessees of this property where this plant is to be situated are to be damaged, and yet here you are called upon to cancel leases and contracts without any knowledge whatever as to the extent that parties may be injured, and nobody yet knows, as I said, how many people, honest workingmen in the District of Columbia, will be thrown out of employment instantly almost.

Mr. MADDEN. In what way?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. By the employment proposed of convict labor to run this establishment.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think they will employ convict labor down here at this yard where it is proposed to erect this plant, in the center of the city?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. That is what the gentleman from Michigan said.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is what the gentleman said. I object to it, not upon the merits of the case, for I do not know anything about the merits, and neither does anybody else except the three members of the subcommittee; but I object because I do not know anything about it, and because this membership does not know anything about it, and because this House heretofore refused to include it, and because the Senate refused to include it. I make the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order until I am given an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then I simply reserve the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, of course I realize that this is subject to a point of order, in view of the fact that the item is placed in the bill by the conferees, and the item not having been in dispute; but I think it is one of the most meritorious——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman say that the item was not in dispute?

Mr. MADDEN. I say, I admit it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. GARNER of Texas (addressing Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky). He is confirming your position.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is one of the most meritorious items in the bill. The District Commissioners, in letting contracts for paving a year or more ago, were able to get bids of $1.45 per square yard for asphalt paving work. The last time they advertised for bids——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I wish to be clearly understood that I do not wish to discuss the merits of the proposition, or to raise objection as to the merits of it. I do not know anything about it, but I do object to this class of legislation. The commissioners of this District have had ample opportunity to bring this bill before the proper committee of this House to be thrashed out and its merits gone into, and they have failed to do it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am endeavoring to state the facts as I understand them. The commissioners were able to get bids at $1.45 a square yard for asphalt paving work a year ago, and the next time they advertised for bids they discovered that the price had gone up to $1.77 or $1.78 a yard. They discovered upon investigation that two or three companies which existed in this District had consolidated. There was only one company from which they could get a bid. They discovered upon investigation that if these companies continued to combine the price would likely go higher. They concluded, and I think wisely, that the way to prevent this condition of things was to get authority to esablish an asphalt plant in which they could do their own paving and repair work. There is no reason why this plant should ever be constructed, but if the commissioners had authority to construct it, it stands there as a club to prevent monopoly and excessive charges for street paving in this city.

If they have not the authority, the people of the District will be obliged to pay a greater price for the work that is to be done than they would otherwise be called upon to pay. I know nothing at all about the condition of the leases they granted on the property which is sought to be used for this asphalt plant.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And neither does anybody else, and that is my objection.

Mr. MADDEN. But I presume the Commissioners of the District would not do an injustice to any person having a lease upon any part of this property and that when they give notice of vacation they would give such notice as would not do any injury to those people who would be obliged to move as a result of the notice. I assume that the men who have leases on the place have them subject to notice and that no man having a lease upon a place sought to be used for the construction of this plant took that lease with any understanding that he was to have an indefinite occupation of the premises. I assume he leased with a distinct understanding that he is to move from it whenever notified. Although this item is subject to the point of order, wise business judgment would dictate that it ought to remain in the bill and I do not believe that any Member of the House can justify opposition to it, for there is no item so well calculated to safeguard the Public Treasury in so far as it has to do with the District of Columbia as this special item to which the gentleman from Kentucky refers. I sincerely hope that before the discussion closes he will be generous enough to withdraw his point of order against it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky is clearly within his rights in insisting upon the point of order, but I undertake to say that he is assuming a grave responsibility in making a point of order that will permit the District to be mulcted by representatives of the Asphalt Trust. It appears in the hearings before the Subcommittee on Appropriations, which gave this matter consideration and reported thereon, that the price charged by the Asphalt Trust last year in the city of Washington was $1.45 a square yard, and for the coming year, without any reason for the advance except they are carrying out their autocratic will, the price is to be $1.77 a square yard. No city in the country, I venture to say, with the area of streets that is covered by Washington, has as much covered by asphalt as in this District. We are held up here by the question whether we should continue to be mulcted in the price of $1.77 or whether this District should have the same privilege that has been adopted by other cities—Kansas City, St. Louis, Detroit, and Indianapolis—where they have established municipal plants. This is not a new proposition, I wish to say to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. May I ask the gentleman, Do they work convict labor in these municipal plants the gentleman has mentioned?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, you can not bring in the question of convict labor in this discussion.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I have not brought it in; the gentleman from Michigan brought it in.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing in the hearings that shows the character of labor that will be performed. The question is whether the District is going to be held up by this exorbitant charge of $1.77 per square yard, an increase of nearly 20 per cent in one year without any cause whatever.

Now, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] says that this matter has not been considered. Why, I remember distinctly that this House gave consideration to the proposition for more than half an hour when it was was under consideration in connection with the District appropriation bill. Of course, we did not give it full consideration. We can not give full consideration to matters of this character——

Mr. FORNES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. STAFFORD. In just a minute. That would have taken up the entire day——

Mr. FORNES. The city of New York, under competition, only pays $1.15 per square yard.

Mr. MANN. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Regular order is demanded. The regular order is disposition of the point of order on the conference report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard for a moment or two. I move to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report. Is a second demanded?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I demand a second. I make a point of order on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has made a point of order, but if the rules should be suspended it will not be subject to the point of order. It is a motion to suspend the rules and give the House an opportunity to dispose of this report, the same as any other motion.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] demands a second. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois to 20 minutes.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that I would not be compelled to make this motion before I was heard by the House, because I am confident if the Members of this body can be made to understand the pending proposition that not a single Representative would be found objecting to it. Undoubtedly the gentleman from Kentucky is clearly within his rights, under the rules of the House, when he makes a point of order against this item, and ordinarily it would go out. But, Mr. Speaker, there has been a general misapprehension as to the purpose of this provision and what it is intended to accomplish. Prior to last year there were two or three asphalt companies or corporations engaged in competing with each other for the privilege of laying the streets within the District. Last year one of these corporations succeeded in acquiring control of the other, and as a result competition was destroyed. At the time the combination took place the District of Columbia had a contract for $1.45 a square yard for laying asphalt pavements. Immediately after the combination the price for laying asphalt pavements was advanced, and under the next contract that was made by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the District and Government were compelled to pay $1.77 a square yard for laying the same character of asphalt pavements.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. He makes the assertion that in the city of Washington, under the very nose of the law department of the United States, a contract has been made in restraint of trade and competition and it has gone unnoticed.

Mr. BURLESON. That is extraneous matter, Mr. Speaker. I do not control the action of the Department of Justice, and neither can the gentleman from Kentucky. What the House wants to know now are the facts justifying the establishment of this asphalt plant. This advance in the cost of asphalt pavements was made. There was no legislation coming from the District Committee during this session of Congress to meet this situation, to afford relief——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There should have been.

Mr. BURLESON (continuing). For some reason or other, I do not know why, no action has been taken by the District Committee to relieve the District of Columbia and the Government from the exactions of this asphalt combination.

Now, the question arises, when the Committee on Appropriations, dealing with this matter in the interests of economy, with a single purpose to save the money of this District and the General Government, bring a proposition before this body that will relieve the situation and protect the people of this District against the exactions of this trust, shall it be voted down?

Mr. Speaker, there has been much said about the use of convict labor in this work. Everyone who knows anything about it knows that the only convict labor contemplated to be used would be at Occoquan, Va., where the convicts are engaged in breaking stone, and the District Commissioners, if this proposition is retained in the bill, may utilize that stone for the purpose of laying the base for the streets, if they be driven by the exactions of the asphalt combine to undertake the laying of streets on municipal account. The District Commissioners, if this proposition is approved, will utilize this stone, broken, as I have described, for laying the base of the streets.

Gentlemen in opposition to this provision would leave the impression that we would have convict labor here in the District of Columbia engaged in laying the streets. There has never been a suggestion to do anything like this from any source whatever.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a question at this point?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. I want to ask the question in all sincerity, because I am opposed to the asphalt combine and to all other combines and trusts, as we all are. But how will the appropriation of this item of $500 assist in bringing about the breaking up of this combination?

Mr. BURLESON. The item carries an appropriation of $50,000.

Mr. OLMSTED. The item against which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] made the point of order is an item of $500, as I understand.

Mr. BURLESON. There is no question but that the corporation which seeks to do this street improving will get fair treatment if this provision goes in. The Engineer Commissioner of the District, who has no selfish interests to serve, says this is a most important item and will insure fair treatment for the District. If we get this item through, then the asphalt trust can not hereafter seize the District by the throat and advance the price at its own sweet will.

There has been much said here about the canceling of leases held by those now using the land where this asphalt plant is to be erected. Some express the fear that injustice or wrong may be done them, but——

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. BURLESON. But in every one of these leases is a clause providing that the lease may be terminated on notice given by the District Commissioners. The committee in charge of this bill has been very careful to guard the interests of every individual that may be affected by this item.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. In order to break up this trust, does the gentleman believe that the commissioners should go to the length of actually establishing this asphalt plant, or is it the idea just to hold this power over the trust in order to enable the commissioners to hold down the price of asphalt?

Mr. BURLESON. I will say that anyone who reads the item will see, if same becomes law, that it rests in the discretion of the District Commissioners to erect this plant; and if justice can be had from this asphalt company in the price that it fixes for laying our streets, this municipal asphalt plant will probably not be constructed or established. But if we do not get a just and fair bid for asphalt paving, then the District Commissioner says that under this authorization the District can be protected, that he can erect the asphalt plant and lay the streets at a reasonable cost. That, gentlemen, is the whole situation in a nutshell.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. In line with the same thing that the gentleman has stated, is it not true that the city would also be profited if it owned its own garbage and incinerating plant?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; and I hope the time will come when we will be able to effectively deal with that situation.

Now, gentlemen, there is nothing complicated or difficult to understand about this matter. All that it was necessary to know about this proposition was plainly stated by the gentleman from Illinois when the bill was before the House for consideration, and, but for the fact that the item was stricken out by a point of order, there is no doubt in my mind that the item would have been retained in this bill by the vote of an overwhelming majority. Let everyone here act upon his own responsibility. The only question is whether this House is going to leave this District and the Government in the grasp of a combination, or whether Members of this House will serve the best financial interest of the District and the people by allowing this item to remain in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I understand the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] made a motion to suspend the rules and agree to this conference report, and I understand the item to which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] objects is the item under the engineer commissioner, appropriating $500 for the purchase of apparatus for the office of the inspector of asphalt and cement. It seems to me the House ought to have some information why the House receded from its disagreement to amendments increasing the salaries of the different employees.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I did not know there was any issue raised on that item. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am advised by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia that no bill contemplating this asphalt plant has ever been introduced into this House and that the commissioners have never come to him with one word about it, asking for it or suggesting its establishment.

The chairman of the District Committee is here on the floor now, and he says that no bill of this kind was ever brought there, and neither was any suggestion of it ever made to his committee; but here they come, and they expect within a few minutes to pass a bill about which this committee knows nothing. It may be that if it had come before the committee and had been discussed—if it had been properly brought before this House—it may have received a unanimous vote. We have no opportunity to know, except from the statements made by the gentleman from Michigan, as to whether honest labor is to be driven out from this work and supplanted by convict labor or not, and I say that it is not to the measure upon its merits that I object, but it is against this class of legislation. I say that no man can do himself justice here in voting to support this measure until he has been given full and fair opportunity to know all about it, and for that reason I object. Two hundred and forty-four amendments are pending in this bill, and it is now proposed to pass them all, under a suspension of the rules, without even reading them, and I trust the House will refuse to transact business that way. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky used four minutes.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] for several reasons. In the first place, this is the wrong way to legislate. Here is the situation: The Senate inserted this amendment No. 58, page 27, for the purchase of apparatus for offices of the inspector of asphalt and cements, $500. On that amendment, which may be proper or improper—I do not know—these conferees have hung an asphalt manufacturing plant. Whether it is proper to construct an asphalt manufacturing plant I do not know, and I ought not to be called upon to pass judgment until a regular committee of this House, charged with the duty of ascertaining, has gone into the question. What is this asphalt plant going to cost? Nobody knows. The only limit is that the total expenditure for the building shall not exceed $50,000.

Mr. OLMSTED. For the plant.

Mr. BENNET of New York. For the plant. Nothing in connection with maintenance, and yet it must be maintained; nothing to limit the manner in which the work is to be done. I do not know what the regulations of the District of Columbia are as to the use of convict labor, but it may be possible that if this House, without any information at all, adopts this report, you gentlemen who come back here in the extra session will see——

Mr. BUTLER. Extra session of what?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Of the Sixty-second Congress—will see upon the streets of the city of Washington convicts working in stripes, with a ball and chain about their legs, not under the direction of the District Commissioners, but under the direction of contractors, as we see under the worst form of contract convict labor. The gentleman says, "Oh, no!" He does not know and I do not know.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is there any better thing to do with convicts in the way of labor than to have them do municipal work of this sort?

Mr. BENNET of New York. If I had more time I could go into that whole question. I have only four minutes. This House ought not to decide whether it is right or not without a report of a regular committee.

Mr. PAYNE. I desire to ask my colleague if that has not been the policy of his State and mine?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Not in the part in which I have the honor to live.

Mr. PAYNE. The law is that the convicts shall labor and make articles for the use of municipalities, and there was a clause in it also for the making of roads, even.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have never seen a convict on the roads, and I doubt if my colleague has.

Mr. PAYNE. I have seen convicts on them.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Now, another reason, Mr. Speaker. When this conference report went to conference on the 15th of February the gentleman from Michigan, as far as he could honorably as a conferee, promised the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that we would have a separate vote on the question of increasing the salaries of the commissioners. Now, the proposition is made that the vote will be allowed on a motion to recommit the conference report. I acquit the gentleman of knowledge of the fact that after the other House has acted, as it has acted in this case, and discharged its managers, a motion to recommit a conference report is not in order, so that on a vote for the motion to suspend the rules and adopt the conference report we can not have a separate vote on anything in this bill. It is the wrong way to legislate. If we need a municipal asphalt plant let the District Committee report, and let it come here on the floor and let us have some idea of how it is to be conducted, how much it is going to cost, and what it will be. I hope the motion will be defeated.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, although a member of the District Committee this whole business was new to us until it came on the floor of the House. It is stated here that this is for the purpose of defeating the asphalt combine. I am as much against the asphalt combine or any other kind of a combine as any man in the House, but it seems to me that if it is true that the District of Columbia was getting asphalt pavements at $1.45 until competition was driven out of the work and then the price was raised to $1.77 the combine may have been in the $1.45 as being an unreasonably low price. I do not know of any city in the country getting asphalt pavements at $1.45, and in our city they are getting them at $1.80, $1.85, and $1.87. Now, I do not think the District of Columbia, with its own plant, can put asphalt pavement down for $1.77, or any less, or will save a dollar by building this asphalt paving plant. Why should we engage in this undertaking at this expense? Why should this piece of legislation, even if it were a good piece of legislation, be slipped in this bill in this unparliamentary way? It is because the pocketbooks of the big property owners of the District of Columbia will be affected, and for no other reason. There is a great deal of legislation in the interests of the people of the District of Columbia that ought to be passed by this Congress, but here is one piece of legislation that finds some way to get before the Congress, and it gets there by reason of the fact that the pocketbooks of the property owners of the District are affected.

Mr. MADDEN. In what way?

Mr. BORLAND. I can not yield in two minutes. The gentleman has had his time——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FORNES].

Mr. FORNES. Mr. Speaker, the statement has been made here that the asphalt pavements can not be laid down properly at less than $1.45 a square yard. Those who make that statement have never studied the price at which asphalt pavement is put down in the various cities of this country. In my city—New York—it has been as low under competition as $1.10 per square yard. Why the city of Washington should have ever been obliged to pay even $1.45 is beyond my comprehension, and must be beyond the conception of all men who understand the real cost of putting down asphalt pavements. It is a clear case, then, that a combination or trust was formed in this city to advance the price to $1.77 per square yard. Who pays the excessive profit but the taxpayers or the people of this country? If it is within the rule that a tax can be levied, we certainly have the power of legislation to prevent such an unjust tax. I believe that the conferees have studied this matter carefully, and they have based their conclusion upon this theory, that whenever prices are too high competition will and should enter, and being unable to obtain competition to regulate those prices, they have adopted the natural course—that is, that the District of Columbia will become the competitor. How can it in any way——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FORNES. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman please tell this House how much asphalt will cost a square yard after this plant down here has been built?

Mr. FORNES. If it did not cost less the plant would not be built. I trust to the good sense of the commissioners, and I believe asphalt can be laid down in this District, or in the city of Washington, at profitable prices at from $1.25 to $1.35 per square yard.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman please tell us why the commissioners have taken this route to establish this plant instead of the regular route by a bill introduced for that purpose?

Mr. FORNES. It was the only route open to them, and I believe that it was the proper course, to take the only route left, in order to avoid this outrageous charge for the asphalt for this District.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORNES. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Is my colleague from New York aware of the fact that members of the District Committee suggested to Maj. Johnson a year ago the propriety and expediency of buying a repair plant, and suggested further that he bring it to the attention of the District Committee, and that he paid absolutely no attention to it, except by bringing it to the Appropriations Committee and having it made part of the appropriation bill submitted to this House?

Mr. FORNES. I am not aware of the fact, but I presume if conditions existed at that time as they do to-day the parties would have taken the proper course to protect the interests of the District, the same as they are doing now.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it is self-evident that the objections to establishing this plant must come largely from those who are directly interested in putting down the pavements of this city, and therefore I believe that the conferees have adopted the sensible course, and the right one, to protect the city against an unusual monopoly, as it might be considered under the present circumstances. It is a purely business proposition, and we know that the business of this country is best maintained and the profits are most just where competition exists. Where competition does not exist, it is proper to say that robbery steps in; and I believe that the committee ought to be sustained, and I shall certainly give my vote to sustain it. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this rule because it inaugurates a new manner of legislation here in this House. It also prevents us from determining other questions than the one that is involved in this discussion. Under the lighting contract, one of the items that was under discussion when this bill was before the committee, it was determined to pay the company $72.50 upon a contract that could not have been enforced in a court and not a single dollar could have been collected on it, is here raised to $80 per light. It is a pure and simple gift out of the pockets of the taxpayers of this country of a large amount of money. The Senate, now, in this bill makes it $85, the original price which was agreed to be paid in the contract, a most unreasonable and excessive price. The conference committee has reduced that to $80, $20 more per light than is paid in any other honestly administered city of the same size in the United States, and $20 per light more than ought to be paid here in the city of Washington. Now, it is a gift of $20 out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the District of Columbia and of the United States and which ought not to be permitted; and if this conference report is adopted under the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], we will have no opportunity to send it back to conference again in order to have that price properly regulated. The lighting company could not go into court in a suit on its contract and enforce it, because of its plain and palpable violation of the same. It here secures in this respect an undue advantage, and if this motion is carried the people are powerless. It attempts to gain here that which it could not secure in any other way. The Congress is delegated with the power to legislate and not a conference committee.

If this motion carries, we can not oppose the increase of salaries incorporated in this report, a measure this House repudiated when the bill was before the House.

There are many other propositions involved in this matter which I would like to discuss, but can not for the want of time. The motion pending I hope will be defeated and the bill returned for conference again.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON].

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I will not undertake to discuss the merits of this asphalt proposition in the three minutes accorded to me by the gentleman. But I see by the RECORD that the House has receded from 131 amendments that were placed upon this bill by the Senate. To adopt the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] to suspend the rules and adopt this conference report would be for this House to surrender consideration of 130 amendments placed upon the bill by the Senate. It would have no opportunity of questioning a single one of them. It does not understand the merits of the 130 other amendments, and to now adopt this motion in order to secure a settlement of this one question is asking too much, I think, at the hands of the House. If the gentleman's motion is voted down, then the proposition can again come before the House after it has had an opportunity of considering the other 130 Senate amendments that have not been passed upon by the House at all, and the asphalt question can be taken care of at that time. I do not think that the question of settling this proposition for the city of Washington is of sufficient moment or importance to justify the House waiving aside 130 other amendments, thereby saying that we will subordinate all of them and everything contained in them to this single proposition.

Mr. Speaker, this asphalt evil, if it does exist, can not last always. There will be another Congress in session within the next nine months, if not sooner, and I undertake to say that rather than deny the House the consideration of 130 other amendments that it knows nothing of, in order to accept this one proposition and thereby say that all the disagreements between the House and Senate upon this bill shall be bottomed upon the asphalt question alone, it will be better to postpone the asphalt amendment until the convening of the Sixty-second Congress. Nobody understands that asphalt question in its entirety. Nobody knows what the cost of this proposed plant will be. Nobody knows what the cost of its maintenance will be. It is possible that it will cost the city of Washington more per square yard of asphalt than the city is now paying, if this proposition is adopted.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE].

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is not a point of order, but it is a question whether the House will suspend the rules and vote in favor of the conference report and proceed to business. There are 391 Members in this House. I look over the directory of the State of New York and find this, that Mr. FORNES for two terms, from January, 1902, to January, 1906, was president of the Board of Aldermen of New York City. By virtue of the position that he held, he must of necessity have knowledge that ought to be convincing to this House. For that reason, and for the reason that he, through his long experience and the fact that he was at the head of a board that had to do with matters of the kind that we are discussing, has intimate knowledge of this subject, his judgment would influence my judgment, and I will vote to suspend the rules and agree to this conference report and thereby pass the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this is not a question of the proper administration of municipal affairs, and if a Member of this House had been mayor of New York for 40 years and knew all about all the municipal administrations of all the cities in the land, that fact would not induce me to vote for the proposition that the House is to permit three of its Members to enact legislation which the House and Senate have never had before them. That is the question, and not the value or the propriety or the justice of the legislation.

Now, I am not to be frightened from my position by suggestions that this is against the Asphalt Trust and the suggestion that I will vote in its favor by voting for this proposition. Such a suggestion as that is unworthy to be made on the floor of this House. Both sides of this House, when the great tariff bill was in conference, refused to consent to the proposition that the conferees should put shoes upon the free list and change tariff upon leather until they had requested this House to grant special permission by a rule or resolution to do it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and his conferees, both in the House and in the Senate, did not undertake to violate their duty in this regard, as the gentlemen in this conference report have undertaken to violate theirs in this case. I do not know whether this is for the benefit of this city or not; I do not know whether it will cheapen the price of asphalt for paving in this city or not; but I do know that it is in violation of all the decent and orderly rules of legislation, and therefore I oppose it. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLCOTT].

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to discuss the merits of this proposition. The question of the establishment of an asphalt plant never came to the consideration of the members of the District of Columbia Committee. Some time ago somebody suggested that the District Committee should take this matter up with the commissioners, and the commissioners were notified, but they never paid the slightest attention to it. I rise to protest most strenuously and vehemently against this everlasting criticism of the District of Columbia Committee. There is not a harder working committee than that in the House. We have come before this House with bills of great importance for the city of Washington and, in fact, for the entire country time and time again on the days when the rules prescribe that we shall have the right of way, and we have been steam rollered, run over, and bill after bill that should be put upon the statute books has not even had time for consideration. I will not sit quietly by and hear this constantly recurring criticism, even from the great Committee on Appropriations. [Applause.]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of New York. Mr. Speaker, I, as in the case of the gentleman from New York, my colleague [Mr. FORNES], have given considerable thought to and have had opportunities to study this asphalt question in a comprehensive way. In New York we were beset by the same conditions exactly as confront the District of Columbia to-day, where when there was competition the asphalt was furnished at $1.45 per yard, but after a combination was formed or said to have been formed the price was advanced to $1.77 per yard. The only remedy, the only check that can be given to such trusts and combinations in opposition to the interests of the people is the establishmen of an asphalt plant such as the municipality proposes to make in this instance. In my own case I worked industriously in New York in the public service to secure the establishment of an asphalt plant that would relieve us from the difficulties which now confront the District of Columbia, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FORNES], as the president of the board of aldermen had before him this same matter. New York established an asphalt plant for its protection, and as a result we have had cheaper asphalt, and very much cheaper than we could otherwise have secured. It is a good principle; it is one worthy of serious consideration and adoption by this House as a safeguard against the expenditure of this money to combinations in restraint of trade and economy. You have the opportunity now, and I think there should be no objection on either side of this House to the establishment of a municipal plant that would hold in check such combinations. It is not necessary nor is it provided that this plant should absolutely be established, but it gives the opportunity to the House, Mr. Speaker, of putting a check upon those who would advance the prices to such an extent as to become burdensome, not on the District of Columbia, but on the people of this whole country. I therefore strongly favor the proposition that the experiment shall be made. The limitations are all sufficient. I think it would be a good thing for this House to adopt this proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, have I two minutes remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has two minutes.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, in the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, this House, on the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, passed a paragraph which provided that the asphalt made in this city should not exceed a certain price. That is going to become law. Nobody has any objection to it.

Mr. BURLESON rose.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I have not the time to yield.

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; but that price is $1.85.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. That is not the only question in this conference report which ought not be adopted at this time. These conferees have agreed to an increase in the salary of these commissioners which was denied before the committee of which it was asked. Another thing, the conferees on the part of the House very willingly insist that the amendment which was placed there by the Senate which appropriated $5,000 to help the blind of this city—those people who are attempting to support themselves by the little appropriations they get so that they will not be objects of charity—they willingly insist that the amendment shall be stricken out which was placed there by the Senate, but also insist that this increase of salary shall be made to these commissioners. I ask you gentlemen of the House, are you willing under a suspension of the rules to pass this kind of a conference report this morning because you are told that on account of stress of time it ought to be done. Send this report back to these conferees with instructions to look out for the interests of the people of the District, and give us a chance to vote upon some of the items in this bill which ought to be voted upon by this House. [Applause.]

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, there are involved in this bill 250 disagreements. For four days the conferees of the two Houses met and sought to harmonize the differences, and finally succeeded in doing so. It is a matter of give and take in a conference where there is a difference of more than a million dollars, as there was in this case, involved between the two Houses, so that when we conclude our work no party gets all he wants; no one is thoroughly satisfied. It is a compromise, but it was the belief of the House conferees that not in the legislative experience of those conferees has there been a better and more satisfactory bill as a whole reported back to the House than that now under consideration.

It seems to be, with regard to salaries, that we did agree that the commissioners should be advanced a thousand dollars, and the conferees have no apology to make. That did not go out on a vote of the House; it went out on an objection of a single Member; and I appeal to the membership of this House, if we are worth $7,500 a year as Members of Congress, are not the commissioners, charged with more responsibilities than is the average Member of this House, worth $6,000?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. How many could be elected in your district or mine, I would like to know?

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Just a question.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us, as he goes along, how many items are in serious dispute? Is there anything here in serious dispute but the increase in pay of the District Commissioners?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Oh, yes; what is called the asphalt plant, which upon its merits it is conceded to be proper, but it seems to have resolved itself into a question of jurisdiction between two of the important committees of the House.

Personally I have no sympathy with any assault upon the District Committee. We have lived in harmony together all these years, and I sympathize with them in the unfortunate condition they have been in at this session, and it has not been upon my vote that they have been placed in that position. Now, with regard to there being more recessions on the part of the House than the Senate, let me say to the gentleman that every item that looked for an increase of colored school facilities in this city was stricken out on the point of order. They did not propose to give a dollar—simply went out on the point of order. Can one gentleman rise here and strike out a system like that? The conferees believed, and believe now, that justice to the colored people, justice to the children of the colored race, entitled them to recognition in the division of public moneys necessary for their education. That counts for a very considerable number of recessions on the part of the House. The gentleman from Illinois speaks with reference to the blind. Not an item of hearings in either House with regard to that. Some years ago——

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois rose.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Wait a moment. Some years ago there was a proposition to do this, to give $5,000, and every dollar was licked up in the payment of private individuals for advancements that had been made and no result. Now, again, with regard to the work of criminals. Does anybody think we are going to bring criminals here into the city to work upon our streets? We have three or four hundred men who have been idle in the jails for years down at Occoquan, there by your vote and direction. On the tract of land is a quarry of stone that can be utilized. These prisoners are simply to work out and beat that stone into a condition that will be a basis for this asphalt. Again, the establishment of this asphalt plant is permissive, not mandatory. It is to enable the House and the Congress to say to this trust, You shall not hold us up; if necessary, we will establish a plant, but if you will do the fair thing we will let it stand and it will give you a reasonable profit.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and agree to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds had voted therefor——

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 160, noes 69.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays. [Cries of "No!"]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 160, nays 114, answering "present" 6, not voting 103, as follows:

From 12 m. Thursday until end of session:

Mr. SMITH of Michigan with Mr. CLARK of Florida.

Until 2 p. m. Saturday:

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania with Mr. MCHENRY.

From Thursday until Saturday, inclusive:

Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey with Mr. BURNETT.

For this day:

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey with Mr. ASHBROOK.
Mr. MCCALL with Mr. JAMES.

From February 21 until February 27, inclusive:

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma with Mr. FERRIS.

Until Monday noon:

Mr. LAW with Mr. WEISSE.

Until Monday afternoon:

Mr. PRATT with Mr. ROTHERMEL.

On this vote:

Mr. GAINES with Mr. COLLIER.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I renew the point of order. The point of order was pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] has not yet lost control of the floor.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees:

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan, Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio, and Mr. BURLESON.

PROTECTION OF THE UNIFORM OF THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 23015, an act to protect the dignity and honor of the uniform of the United States, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 10177) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Establishment, and for other purposes, with House amendments disagreed to by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees:

Mr. MANN, Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, and Mr. ADAMSON.

JOHN MARSHALL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 24153), for the relief of John Marshall, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 10849) to authorize the city of Shreveport, in the State of Louisiana, to construct a bridge across Red River, a similar bill, H. R. 32824, being on the House Calendar.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The bill, H. R. 32824, was ordered laid upon the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. KNOWLAND, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Charles R. Stevens, Fifty-fifth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. KRONMILLER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of the American Towing & Lightering Co., Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CRAVENS, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of sickness.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H. R. 32909, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 32909) making appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, and for other purposes, with Mr. MANN in the chair.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 177, in line 25, after the word "dollars," insert "for range lights in Bogue Sound, N. C., $2,500."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that. It is not germane to the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order that it is not germane to the provision.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Oh, Mr. Chairman, these lights are authorized by existing law.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think they are authorized. If it is in order at all on this bill, it is in connection with the appropriation for the Lighthouse Service.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered to the paragraph in the sundry civil bill providing for lighthouses, beacons, fog signals, light vessels, and other works under the Lighthouse Service. Of course this proposed amendment is for work under the Lighthouse Service. It is for range lights in Bogue Sound, a sound in eastern North Carolina. As to the point of order that it is not authorized by existing law Mr. Chairman, I will say that it is authorized under the act of June 17, 1910.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from North Carolina send to the Chair a copy of the act referred to?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Yes, sir. I send it up. The Chairman is familiar with it, because it came from the Chairman's committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to know, Mr. Chairman, whether it is authorized by law.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. It was authorized by the act of June 17, 1910.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina has furnished the Chair with a copy of the act approved June 17, 1910, providing for additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Establishment, in which this item occurs:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish and provide the following additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Establishment, under the Department of Commerce and Labor, in accordance with the respective limits of cost hereinafter respectively set forth, which shall in no case be exceeded:

* * * * * * *

Range light, Bogue Sound, N. C., at a cost not to exceed $2,500.

Inasmuch as the item is authorized by law, the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard briefly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I can not find that the item has been estimated for by the department. I would like to know where it can be found.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I will give the chairman of the committee the estimate from the department contained in the hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I will read it to the gentleman. In response to a letter from the Hon. JAMES R. MANN, chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, addressed to the Lighthouse Board and asking as to the necessity and cost of lights in this sound, the Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Labor, Benjamin S. Cable, sent the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 19, 1910.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of December 14, 1909, and to the reply of this department of December 20, 1909, relative to the bill (H. R. 2220) providing beacon lights in Bogue Sound, Carteret County, N. C., I beg to state that the Lighthouse Board is of the opinion that 10 beacons, to consist of 3 pile structures with 8 day-post lanterns, should be established to mark the dredged cut in Bogue Sound, and that the amount named in the bill, $2,500, will be sufficient for the construction of these beacons.

I concur in the views of the Lighthouse Board, and therefore recommend that the bill in question be passed.

Respectfully, BENJ. S. CABLE, Assistant Secretary.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

There is the estimate in the hearings.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is not an estimate. That is a letter stating the desirability of providing for that authorization.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. It is more than that, Mr. Chairman, I will say to the chairman of the committee. It states that $2,500 is necessary for the construction of these lights, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and the Lighthouse Board assent to the necessity for their construction.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not understand that that is a formal estimate. It is a statement in a letter.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. As I understand the point the gentleman makes, it is that on this particular item, my amendment, the Department of Commerce and Labor has not sent the usual estimates to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Treasury transmitted them to the House. But if this item in my amendment is authorized by existing law, and if it has the approval of the former Lighthouse Board and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is chairman, why should it not go into the bill? I will say to the chairman of the committee that there are a number of items included in this bill which are not authorized by existing law. I do not wish to make a point of order against any of them, because they ought to be in the bill, and I do not propose to do it under any circumstances, but I think this little item in my amendment of $2,500 for range lights in this sound in North Carolina, recommended by the Department of Commerce and Labor and recommended by the Interstate Commerce Committee and authorized by Congress, ought to go in this bill and the money be appropriated for the work.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, it seems from the act of June 17, 1910, that a range light on Bogue Sound, N. C., is authorized, to cost not to exceed $2,500. The Department of Commerce and Labor, or the Lighthouse Service, has not deemed the establishment of this range light of sufficient importance to estimate for the appropriation for that purpose. The Lighthouse Service, as Members will recollect, was reorganized a year ago, or since the light was authorized——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Oh, no; if the gentleman will permit me?

Mr. TAWNEY. The reorganization was not effected under this act until some time after the passage of the act. Now, the reorganized Lighthouse Board has not submitted any estimate for this range light. Let me call the attention of the committee to the fact that in submitting the estimate they group them into three classes. Group No. 1 includes those that they deem absolutely necessary and essential to the service, and in group No. 2 they put those they regard as not so important, and in the third group they put those that they can get along without. The gentleman's proposition is to appropriate for a range light not included in either group.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Have you not put some items in the first group, which you say the Lighthouse Bureau says are very essential, which are not authorized at all by existing law?

Mr. TAWNEY. We have on the testimony or recommendation of the reorganized Lighthouse Service, which is regarded as more efficient than the former organization, and on the testimony of members of the committee, of which the gentleman is a member, that these were absolutely essential.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I agree to that, but I think my item being authorized by Congress ought to go into this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TAWNEY) there were—ayes 59, noes 53.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. TAWNEY and Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were 83 ayes and 73 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Brandywine Shoal Light Station, Del.: For rebuilding and improving the present light and fog-signal station at Brandywine Shoal, Delaware Bay, Del., on the present or an adjacent site, $75,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There appeared in to-day's RECORD a number of clippings from newspapers relative to the use of power presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. They are apparently inspired articles to give the side of those who are in favor of the substitution of power presses for hand presses.

Mr. TAWNEY. By whom were they inserted?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They were inserted in another body. It gives the side of those who advocate the power presses in place of the hand presses for printing Government money. So that both sides may have an opportunity to present the facts, I ask to insert some material giving the reasons for retaining the hand presses in printing Government money in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

SECURITY V. CHEAPNESS—SHALL THE MONEY OF THE PEOPLE BE PRINTED IN THE HIGHEST STYLE OF THE ART—THE DANGER FROM COUNTERFEITING SHOULD BE AVOIDED.

In chapter 546, page 605, Thirtieth Statutes at Large, is the following law:

"Provided, That hereafter all bonds, notes, and checks shall be printed from hand-roller presses."

By the passage of that law Congress determined that the securities of the Government should be printed in the highest style of the money-making art. It was an expression to the effect that Congress would reserve to itself the right to control this matter.

A proposition is in contemplation to repeal the above law at this session of Congress and lodge this discretion in the Secretary of the Treasury.

We give in this booklet the reasons why Congress should not surrender this discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury, and also why the present law should remain on the statute books.

INTERNATIONAL PLATE-PRINTERS' UNION OF NORTH AMERICA
(AFFILIATED WITH AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR).

SECURITY V. CHEAPNESS.

RECENT DISCUSSION.

There has in recent months been considerable discussion in the newspaper and periodical press of the relative merits of hand-press and power-press methods of printing money. The Government now prints its national-bank notes, Treasury notes, bonds, checks, and other securities by the hand-press method. It is proposed to repeal the law which provides that our securities must be printed on hand-roller presses and install machines known as power presses.

NOT OPPOSED TO PROGRESS.

The plate printers are intelligent, skilled workmen. Their calling requires ability of a high degree. Great care, skill, and judgment must be exercised in order to produce good work. Neither as a body nor as individuals are they opposed to progress. Whenever it shall be demonstrated that the product of machines can successfully and satisfactorily supplant their handicraft, they will be quick to admit it.

SATISFACTORY AND SAFE.

They claim that the most satisfactory, because the most "secure," work ever done has been done and is now being done by them on the hand-roller presses. The handling, the heating, the putting on of the ink, the wiping of the plate, now heavy, now light, to bring out the effect intended by the engraver, the temperature of the hand, the texture of the skin, all requiring the constant exercise of forethought, judgment, and fine skill (human effort entirely), are attributes that belong solely to the printer and can not be supplied by machines.

PLATE PRINTERS' HANDICRAFT EVERYWHERE.

The product of the skill of the engraver and plate printer is to be seen in every walk of life where artistic beauty and refinement reign. In the homes of our people are hung steel engraved pictures; in lawyers and doctors' offices are their diplomas, plate printed on sheepskin; in our choice literature are seen the photogravure illustrations; the wedding invitations of our sons and daughters are all plate printed; calendars, letterheads of many leading business houses, are printed by hand from finely engraved plates. The United States Government also should use the finest printing in the production of its securities. This is absolutely necessary in order to maintain the present high artistic standard of our money, a standard which all the world acknowledges to be the highest and best. An additional, and more important, reason for maintaining this high standard is that the maximum of safety against counterfeiting shall be guaranteed our people.

PRINCIPAL POINTS.

In plate printing the principal points are to reproduce in relief the lines the engraver cuts into the steel; that is, to have the lines, both heavy and light, hold the maximum amount of ink which produces the high and light shades of the engraver's art and gives tone and expression to the product. To do this requires skill, thought, and time. Rare skill must be exercised in the wiping of the plate with a cloth or rag, as it is commonly called in the trade. If you will notice, in different notes the engaved lines run in every direction—horizontal, perpendicular, and circular; in fact, any way that the designer plans. As the "wiper" on a power press can only wipe in one direction, which is a half circular one, and as the weight of it is over 200 pounds, it can readily be seen that that part of the line which runs in the same direction as that of the wiper is bound to be wiped out, or nearly so, while on the other hand, the printer on a hand press can manipulate his rag in every direction, always wiping against the line, and consequently leaving the maximum amount of ink necessary therein. On the power press, in order to permit the printer to polish the plate, it is necessary to lower the wiper very close to the plate. The weight of the wiper, combined with the force which is necessary to remove the ink, wipes the plate very clean and close, and consequently produces an impression that has no color or life and is flat in appearance. It also eliminates the detail of an impression, which is the hardest part of a note to produce; that is, the fine lines on the face of a portrait or a shading behind the titles. In examining counterfeit notes, a person can readily see that in nearly every particular the detail is lacking. On a hand press, in wiping a plate, various parts of the plate are wiped differently. For instance, on a portrait, the background, which is always delicately engraved, is wiped very lightly and smoothly, while the coat, which is generally heavy, is wiped down so as to give it a smooth appearance. If the plate is worn, it is wiped carefully; if too black or strong, it is wiped close. The wiper on the power press, being mechanical, wipes the whole plate in the same manner without any regard for the different parts of the engraving or whether the plate is worn or new. As the wiper on the power press wipes the plate so close, it is necessary to use a great deal of pressure to bring up or print what remains in the engraved line. The pressure thus used calenders the paper and lessens the life of the note, because it breaks down the linen fibers in the paper. In bank-note printing all the paper is wet so as to soften it in order to force it down into the engraved lines. As it is manifestly impossible to wet every sheet exactly alike, the hand pressman, when he comes to a dry sheet, pulls it slowly through the press, and vice versa with a wet sheet. The power press pulls all sheets alike at the same rate of speed.

POWER PRESSES NOT IMPROVED.

The point may be urged that the power press has improved in the past few years. This is not a fact. The only changes made are that the motive power has been changed from steam to electric power, hence the new name, "power presses"; several minor attachments which improve the mechanical working of the press, such as more speed and smoother running; also safety appliances, which partially protect the printer and assistants from injury. But there positively has been no improvement in the work executed by the press. In fact, the increased speed has lowered the quality of the product.

MANY OBSTACLES.

For more than 20 years the builders of the power presses have been trying to improve them, but have not succeeded in overcoming these obstacles, namely, the wiper, the filling-in roller, and the enormous pressure. The basic principle in plate printing is to fill all the engraved lines full of ink. The power press filling-in roller does not do this, as it can only pass over the plate once, filling in only the bottom of the engraved lines. Anyone who examines the plate after it has passed under the filling-in roller can very easily see the engraved lines through the ink, when if it were filled in properly none of these lines would be visible. It can plainly be seen that the press starts off wrong in the beginning of its operation by not putting enough ink in the lines to produce a perfect impression. The next operation of the press is to remove enough ink from the plate to allow the printer to polish it clean. The wiper is a contrivance which weighs approximately 200 pounds, and it takes two men to remove it from the press. The part of it which rests on the plate is a flat pad about 2 feet long and 1 foot wide. This pad is covered with felt, and under it and directly over the plate passes the wiping rag. This rag is about 80 yards in length and is wound on a spindle and placed on top of the wiper; as it is used up it is rewound on another spindle. The pad or wiper comes down on the face of the plate and wipes across the plate in a certain fixed way. On an engraved plate the lines run in every direction, and, of course, a great many of them in the same direction the wiper takes. These lines, consequently, are wiped out, or nearly so, on account of the fact that the wiper, being mechanical, can not exercise any refinement of judgment. There is one more thing about the wiper on the power press. It wipes with a great deal of force, being screwed down very close to the plate. This is necessary in order to remove the ink so that the printer can polish the plate, which he has to do very rapidly, as the plate is in continuous motion. In fact, he is reaching toward it as it comes to him or as it goes away. Its position is changing all the while, and he has to jump after it as it moves. It is plain to the average person that it is impossible for any man to polish the plate as clean as can the man on a hand press, where the plate is stationary and where the man has time to judge and decide conditions.

After the plate leaves the printer it passes under the printing roller, which is covered with felt blankets. As the plate has very little ink left in the lines on account, first, of not being properly filled in, and, second, of being wiped so close by the wiper, enormous pressure is necessary in order to bring up what remains of the ink in the lines. Consequently the impression has a flat, dull appearance, approaching a lithograph, and is easily reproduced by the counterfeiter. The enormous pressure calendars the paper, rendering it more difficult to print the reverse side of the note and also lessening its life.

WHY THE WORK IS FLAT.

Another reason for the flatness is that in order to use these presses the ink must be much thinner and weaker than the hand-press ink in order that it will flow freely from the ink fountain, which is immediately over the filling-in roller. Weak ink having a great deal of linseed oil in its composition always will produce a poor impression.

HAND PRINTING METHODS.

The method of printing by hand is entirely different from that of printing by power. In handwork the plate lies stationary on a small gas stove, the stove being used to slightly warm the plate so that the ink can be removed without using any force. The printer carefully and evenly charges his roller with ink, then rolls it over the surface of the plate from four to six times, filling in all engraved lines so that none of them are visible. He then takes his wiping rag, which is a piece of starched cheesecloth about 5 feet in length by 3 in width, folded to suit his hand, and carefully and swiftly wipes the plate. In using the rag he is careful to wipe across the lines of the plate. If the rag which he is using followed the lines of the plate, he would wipe out the ink and leave an imperfect impression. He avoids anything of the kind by passing the rag across the plate. Different parts of the plate are treated by the hand-press man in different ways. If the lines are heavy, he is likely to wipe more from them than when they are light. The rag folded in the printer's hand forms a springy pad, full of elasticity, which precludes the wiping of the plate close. The hand-press man then carefully polishes the plate evenly until the surface shines and every particle of ink is removed. The plate is then lifted into the press and the assistant lays on the sheet, which has first been dampened and brushed by her, "as it is manifestly impossible for the wetting division to wet every sheet alike, owing to the fact that the bureau prints hundreds of millions of sheets a year." The printer, if the sheet is dry, pulls the press slowly to allow the paper to sink down into the engraved lines; if it is too wet, vice versa. The power press, on the other hand, pulls all sheets alike, at the same speed. The sheet is then removed from the plate by the assistant, and if examined by anyone the difference between it and the power-press impression can easily be detected. The hand impression shows life and strength, every line and detail is there, the color is rich, and it is indeed a work of art.

ALIEN COUNTERFEITERS.

Many thousands of aliens arrive in this country every year. A certain percentage of them are criminals and they take readily to counterfeiting. Then we have the criminally inclined among our own people, who await the best opportunity to counterfeit. The mere statement of these facts would seem to be all the argument necessary to have the standard of our money so high that it will be impossible for these people to imitate it.

The point has been raised that Canada has her money printed on power presses. This is a fact, but Canada is an agricultural country, with a population of approximately 7,000,000 people. It has few large cities, and its population is widely scattered. Naturally the number of criminals is much lower than with us. Hence the question of security is not so strong as it is in our country. A comparison of their currency with ours shows that our notes are very much superior in engraving and printing. It is a significant fact that the Canadian Government has its notes of highest denomination printed by the hand-press method. The reason for this is obvious.

Bankers, business men, statesmen, and others who have traveled abroad have been struck with the artistic beauty of our money, especially when compared with that of other countries. They declare that in apearance, designs, engraving, and printing it is the superior of the money of all countries. In view of the great amount of counterfeiting of the currency of other countries which is known to exist, they can not understand why it is seriously proposed to alter or disturb the present high artistic standard of our securities.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD NOT LOWER STANDARD.

Instead of lowering the standard of our notes it should be the duty of the Government to try to improve it, if possible, by throwing more security around our circulating medium. It is proposed to place a multicolored tint and a watermark on the notes. These changes will help, as they compel the counterfeiter to use additional labor and ingenuity, but they can also be counterfeited by skilled criminals. The most difficult barrier, however, which the counterfeiter has to overcome is the engraving and printing. If the standard of these is lowered, his work of counterfeiting is that much easier.

BOTH METHODS SHOULD BE SEEN.

In the past when Congress investigated this question, exhibits in the form of impressions purported to be from power presses and impressions said to be from hand presses were presented by the other side for comparison. Naturally people will always strive to present as good an argument as possible for their side. Therefore exhibits of this kind should not have much weight in arriving at a conclusion.

The proper way to learn the merits of the power and the hand press is to visit the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and examine the work as it comes from the power and hand presses. Then the good and bad points can easily be seen, even by a layman. One of the best methods of proving the superiority of the hand-press method over the power-press method is to take a plate and print an impression by the power-press method. Then stop the press, fill in the same plate with ink by hand, wipe and polish it by hand, and then print it. The difference in the two impressions will be so marked that anyone can notice it immediately.

It is not improbable that specimens of our money printed on the power presses will be shown to legislators in an endeavor to convince them that the standard of work is as high as that produced from the hand-roller presses. To get a result even approximating the excellence of our notes by the present process the printing by the power presses must be done from newly engraved plates. Such a result is impossible from a plate which has been in use even a week. We challenge successful contradiction of this statement, and stand ready to make a convincing practical demonstration to any committee of Congress.

The argument has been advanced that outside firms use these presses and that the work is satisfactory. Some outside firms do use the presses, such, for instance, as the American Bank Note Co., of New York, but no fair comparison can be made between the United States Government and the American Bank Note Co., as the latter is a commercial institution conducted for profit, and dividends must be paid to the stockholders; therefore the question of security and duty to its customers and the public is not so high as that which Congress owes to the American people.

THE PEOPLE WOULD SUFFER.

The question, in our opinion, is a very important one, not only to the plate printers, but to all the men, women, and children in the United States who have in their pockets paper notes. For instance, if a poor man who earns small wages should, in receiving change while paying his debts, have a counterfeit note foisted on him, the loss would fall on him and his family. But the blame for this crime against him and his wife and little ones would lie with his Government if by cheapening the process of making its money it facilitated the work of counterfeiters. In fact, all the citizens of the United States are vitally interested in the integrity of the work of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and in the greatest degree of security which can be guaranteed by the Government in its issues, such as United States currency, gold and silver certificates, national-bank notes, bonds, checks, internal-revenue stamps, etc. The banker, the merchant, the farmer, all classes of the community, have the highest right to demand that Congress shall provide every possible safeguard which our National Legislature in its wisdom and experience shall be able to enact.

SECURITY FROM SPURIOUS ISSUES.

So long as the Government makes the money of the people it is bound to protect those securities from the taint of spurious issues. Such protection is assured in the greatest degree by the excellence of American engraving and hand-roller printing. Each is necessary to the other. If the hand-roller process is abandoned for the power-press process the present high standard of our engraving must be lowered. For it is a fact that does not admit of controversy that the power presses can not print securities from the excellently engraved plates now prepared for the hand-roller presses. And it is also true that the art of steel-plate engraving can not progress beyond the ability of hand-roller printers to produce printing of equivalent excellence.

COUNTERFEITERS' METHODS.

Usually there are three methods employed by counterfeiters. First, steel engraving; second, photography, or photo-engraving; and lithography.

Steel engraving, of course, produces the best counterfeits. For instance, the $100 Munro counterfeit note, engraved by Taylor & Redell, of Philadelphia, several years ago was so good that the Government was obliged to call in all the notes of that denomination, and the banks refused to accept them for fear of taking a spurious one. This note was no doubt the best counterfeit that has appeared in years. It is a well-known fact among detectives of counterfeit money that one of the first things examined on a counterfeit note is the printing, and also the process by which it was executed. Every line on the face and back is gone over by the expert, with the help of a powerful magnifying glass, and if one of the engraved lines is broken or mashed, or if the color is off, any minute difference between the counterfeit and the genuine note is carefully noted and is incorporated in a circular letter which is sent out all over the country as a warning. One of the methods the experts employ in the Redemption Division of the Treasury Department to detect counterfeit notes is to closely examine the backs of all bills. As a rule counterfeiters do not pay as much attention to the back of a bill as they do to the face. The high standard of engraving and printing on the back enables these experts more easily to detect the counterfeit notes. One expert alone has caught 400 by this method.

$100 COUNTERFEITS.

Last year a counterfeiter of the name of Crahan counterfeited $20,000 worth of $100 gold notes; the faces of these notes were nearly perfect, but fortunately the color of the gold ink was a little off. This enabled the secret-service officials to effect his capture and save the Government and the people thousands of dollars. This shows that every process of printing on our notes should be executed in the finest manner possible.

POWER-PRESS WORK COUNTERFEITERS' DELIGHT.

Power-press plate printing is easier for the counterfeiter to reproduce than hand press. First, the action of the wiper on a power press is such that an impression is produced that has a flat, colorless appearance, approaching a lithograph; the reason for this is that only a scum of ink is left in the lines and the beautiful shades of light and dark are eliminated. The portraits and the vignettes have no expression, as the details are missing. In order to print even the work which the power presses now produce it is necessary to engrave coarse designs, thus enabling the counterfeiter the more easily to ply his vocation.

SECRET SERVICE REPORT.

The report of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department shows that that division during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1910, captured $490,765.55 of counterfeit notes and coins. Of this amount, $467,221 was in foreign money, leaving a balance of $23,534.55 of our money which was spurious. This one item shows conclusively that our money, because of its high standard, is the hardest in the world to imitate.

The report further states that in contraband property captured was 100 counterfeit United States Navy Department blank checks, photographs of United States drafts, forged paymasters' checks, and trade checks. Thus is emphasized the wisdom of Congress in including the word "checks" in the present law on the statute books. Experts state that the greatest difficulty the counterfeiter has to meet in copying an engraving from a steel plate is largely due to the relief which the impression has. As the power-press impression is very flat and the hand-press impression stands clearly forth in bold relief, it can easily be seen which is the more difficult to counterfeit.

CHEAPNESS VERSUS SECURITY.

The question of economy or cheapness should not prejudice judgment on this proposition, because it is not true economy to print cheap money which can easily be imitated and cause the people of our country to lose many thousands of dollars annually. The confidence of the citizen in the Government and its issue should never be shaken. This confidence has reached its highest point in the United States and it should forever be maintained, even if the cost of printing our money is higher than by power presses. The security that our notes afford against counterfeiting, by reason of the high character of the engraving and printing, is worth tenfold the amount of money which it is alleged can be saved.

It would seem not to need argument to carry home conviction of the grave danger that lies in experimenting, for the sake of cheapness, with the securities of the people. To resort to the cheaper method proposed would, in addition to the great losses which ultimately must be entailed upon the people, put the Government to great additional expense in hunting down counterfeiters and prosecuting them.

POCKET NERVE OF PEOPLE.

There is no function of our Government which more intimately concerns all the people than that of making money. It is a function which reaches out and touches the pocket nerve of every citizen. Apparently, the people are satisfied. If they have any complaint to voice, surely it is not with the artistic and mechanical quality of their money. They have not been heard from, demanding that their money be more cheaply made. There is no popular demand for a change. It has not been made an issue in any kind of a campaign. What Senator or Representative has heard from his people, his bankers, manufacturers, farmers, small business men, wage earners, demanding that he shall vote to put in jeopardy of counterfeiting their circulating medium? We question whether one single demand of this nature has come up from the people. And until there shall be such a popular demand for a change we contend that the safe policy is to permit the present law on the subject to remain on the statute books. When there shall be a change, let it be in response to popular demand and after a full and free discussion in committees and in both Houses of Congress.

FORMER DISCUSSION.

There is no new subject in Congress. It has been discussed many times. For the benefit of those who are to give it renewed consideration, we submit herewith some pertinent excerpts from former discussions:

The minority of the Committee on Banking and Currency having under consideration H. R. 150, the second session of the Forty-third Congress, whose recommendations were accepted, in referring to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, said: "From the bureau so organized, employing the highest obtainable skill and using none but the best procurable materials and exacting from every employee his best effort, we should naturally expect satisfactory results. And we are not surprised therefore at the unrivaled character of the work, nor that it received the highest award for bank-note engraving at the Vienna Exposition of 1873. A lower degree of excellence would be a discreditable failure. As one security against counterfeiting our public obligations, the highest style of artistic and mechanical execution is very important. Against all forms of counterfeiting which depend for success upon imitation by means of manual dexterity, this obviously is a complete defense" (p. 12). "In the bureau the plates are prepared by the best methods, the expense being but a secondary consideration" (p. 17).

The Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department who, in 1888, thoroughly investigated this question by having appear before them Government officials, engravers, transferrers, plate printers, examiners, and other experts, made the following report to the House. House report 3220, Fiftieth Congress, second session, they say, in part:

"INCREASED EXPENSE OF SECRET SERVICE.

"Granting that Mr. Graves's figures are absolutely correct, and that the use of the steam presses effects an actual saving of 18 per cent in the expenses of his bureau, there remains the increased expense of maintaining the Secret Service Division, which must be incurred so long as the obligations and securities of the Government can be readily and successfully imitated, an expenditure which can readily be reduced as soon as the Government shall be able to make it impossible to counterfeit them. And when this degree of excellence in printing our notes shall be reached, there will be the further saving of expenses attending the prosecution of captured counterfeiters. But the committee can not agree that the mere question of economy in printing the obligations and securities of the Government merits consideration in this connection. In their opinion there is but one point at issue in considering this bill, and that is the duty of the Government to afford the citizens the greatest attainable security against counterfeit notes; and being satisfied that this security can be obtained in a greater degree by using the hand-roller press exclusively, they are unanimously of the opinion that the steam presses should be discarded.

"For the reasons heretofore stated, the committee reports back the bill with the following amendment: In line 4 of the first section, after the word 'notes,' strike out the word 'checks' and insert the words 'internal revenue,' and after the word 'stamp' strike out the words 'and drafts,' so that the section will read:

"'That from and after the passage of this act all Government securities, bonds, notes, and internal-revenue stamps shall be printed in the highest style of the art of plate printing from hand-roller presses, and as amended the committee recommend that the bill be passed.'"

STEAM-PRESS WORK INFERIOR.

Hon. John Sherman, when Secretary of the Treasury, appointed a committee to investigate this question. This committee made an exhaustive investigation, and their report is in part as follows:

"After a careful, patient, and as thorough an examination as practicable, the committee have arrived at the conclusion, from the facts disclosed by the evidence in our examination of the question submitted, that work done by the steam press does not attain as high a standard as that done by the hand-roller presses."

NOT EQUAL TO HAND PRINTING.

Mr. E. O. Graves, former Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and one of the strongest advocates of the steam press, in a statement to the Committee on Finance in 1888, states: "As to the comparative merits of steam printing and hand printing, it may be said that, speaking in the widest sense, steam printing is not equal to hand printing, that is to say, the steam press has not shown the capacity to print the finest grades of work, such as the black faces of notes, bonds, and drafts. This is the conclusion of all of the committees which have looked into the subject, and it is accepted by the management of this bureau."

Mr. Lorenzo J. Hatch, reputed to be one of the finest engravers in the world, and who is at present employed by the Chinese Government as director of the new Chinese bureau of engraving and printing, wrote the following letter on the subject, page 382, Senate hearings, Committee on Finance:

EXCELLENCE AND PROTECTION.

Mr. E. L. JORDAN, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In answer to your request for my opinion of steam power plate printing, I would say that steam presses such as now are in use can have no proper place in the production of Government securities if it is the policy of the Government to depend upon excellence of work for its protection. The high standard of work which the United States Government has demanded in the past has developed the profession of engraving, transferring, and printing bank notes to a perfection that has attracted repeated orders of millions of dollars from other countries. If the standard is lowered the profession must follow just as surely as they rose to meet the high demand. While realizing that steam printing, if the work could be done properly, would be an advantage to engravers, inasmuch as it would by reducing the cost open up a larger field for the adaptation of the art, I do not believe that machines ever can do the work equally well if hand printing were done under the best conditions possible, and I can not but feel disheartened at the growing tendency to substitute poor methods of giving expression to so noble an art, and that the feeling of "good enough" should be creeping into a business that has earned this country a world-wide reputation.

Respectfully, LORENZO J. HATCH.

It might be well to add in connection that the committee of Chinese experts who were sent to this country by their Government to investigate the methods used in this country, after visiting all the large printing houses and bank-note companies, recommended to their Government that the methods of conducting the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of this country should be adopted by the Chinese Government when their bureau was installed.

John S. Bell, former Chief of the Secret Service Division, in his communication to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, said in part:

"In my judgment the printing can be best done and in a higher state of art when done by hand than that which is printed by steam press."

SAFETY THE WISE POLICY.

The subsequent act of Congress in enacting a law requiring that the Government securities be printed from hand-roller presses demonstrated its desire to throw around the people's money the greatest safeguard against counterfeiting, regardless of the greater cost of hand-press printing. This wise policy of Congress was well expressed by the Committee on Banking and Currency in its report on H. R. 150, the second session of the Forty-third Congress:

"All these circumstances have satisfied the committee that the best methods of printing, numbering, sealing, and issuing of the securities of the United States ought to be adopted which will approach the nearest to be absolutely secure against error and fraud, even if such method should be more expensive than others which have less guarantee of protection."

On page 2 of their report the committee states that the first requisite is, of course, "security," and on page 3 they emphasize, if possible, this truism by saying: "But not only is actual security, but the confidence of the people that their obligations are secure."

INTERNATIONAL PLATE PRINTERS' UNION OF NORTH AMERICA
(AFFILIATED WITH AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR).

[From the Washington (D. C.) Herald, Feb. 19, 1911.]

FIVE HUNDRED PLATE PRINTERS DENOUNCE STORY—UMBRAGE TAKEN AT EFFORT TO DISCREDIT UNION—STATEMENT FOR PRESS—DECLARE THEY ARE MAKING A CLEAN FIGHT FOR RIGHTS—EMPHATIC DENIAL THAT SENATOR SMOOT WAS REFUSED AN INTERVIEW—ASSERT THAT FULL PENALTY OF THE LAW BE METED OUT TO THE PERSONS GUILTY OF THE ACT—SAY NOTHING HAS BEEN DONE IN SECRET—SHOCK TO MEMBERS.

Five hundred plate printers of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, at a meeting in Typographical Temple last night, denounced the story that anonymous and threatening letters had been received by Senator SMOOT, Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh, Assistant Secretary Andrew, and Director Ralph.

The letters were instigated by the efforts to install power presses in the bureau to take the place of the hand presses now in use. A statement was prepared following an animated discussion. It follows:

SHOCK TO MEMBERS.

"The story in a morning paper to the effect that anonymous letters had been received by Senator SMOOT, Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh, Assistant Secretary Andrew, and Director Ralph threatening those gentlemen with dire consequences for their efforts to install power presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing was more of a shock to the members of our union than to any other class of citizens.

"It reflected on the character of our union individually and collectively, and therefore concerns us keenly. The Washington public, business and private, is well acquainted with the 800 members of our union. They know we are law-abiding, country-loving citizens. We discharge our full duty as good citizens, and the record will warrant the statement that, so far as our craft is concerned, there is no necessity for the existence of criminal courts.

"We abhor and condemn the despicable crime of writing anonymous and threatening letters. Those who would be guilty of such acts should be made to suffer the extreme penalty of the law. We assert with the fullest confidence that the members of our union are not and can not be guilty of such a crime. We further recognize that a cause would be weak, indeed, if its advocates were called upon to resort to such reprehensible methods. Our cause is just, and it is, in our opinion, the cause of the whole people of the United States. It is on such a high plane that we have appealed openly to our legislators. We have done nothing in secret. We know the art of money-making, and we feel that in this respect no other class of people is so well qualified to speak for the entire body of our citizens.

"We know that no method of printing our securities is comparable to the hand-roller process. To make our money by any other process necessitates the cheapening of the engraving, and the resultant printing will inevitably be so inferior as to endanger the money of the people. Counterfeiters will hail with joy the news that the United States Government has adopted the cheaper and inferior method of printing money, and immense quantities of spurious notes are certain to be injected into the volume of our circulating medium.

"What need of men engaged in such a cause to resort to the methods of the 'black handers'? We are conscious of the rectitude of our intentions, and we appeal to the public and the press of Washington to spurn for us, as we do ourselves, the suggestion that we are in any degree responsible for these anonymous writings of criminals.

"GEORGE P. FOSTER,
"Chairman Executive Committee Plate Printers' Union."

Mr. Foster, whose signature is affixed to the statement, said late last night that the union had conducted a clean fight and that the threatening letters had been sent to the officials named by persons outside the organization. He also branded as false the statement that Senator SMOOT had been refused an interview by the plate printers' officials.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miah Maul Shoal Light Station, Delaware Bay: For completing the construction of the light and fog-signal station at Miah Maul Shoal, Delaware Bay, $30,000.

Mr. KRONMILLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 178, after line 22, insert the following:
"Fort McHenry Channel, Md.; Range light, $125,000."

Mr. KRONMILLER. Mr. Chairman, at the last session of Congress there was an authorization making an expenditure of $125,000 for two range lights at Fort McHenry Channel, Baltimore. The object of my amendment is to make this appropriation available. I have here a report, "Additional Aids to Navigation and Bureau of Lighthouses," containing a letter from the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor. This letter so completely covers the question that I will ask the indulgence of the House while I read a few extracts from it so that the House may know what this proposition means.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 12, 1910.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 5, 1910, inclosing a copy of H. R. 16356, "to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment," and in reply to your request for the views of this department concerning the bill, I respectfully ask attention to the following extract from the Annual Report of the Lighthouse Board for 1909, page 66, which is herewith approved:

"Fort McHenry Channel range, Maryland: Baltimore is one of the leading shipping ports on the Atlantic seaboard, its exports during the year ended June 30, 1909, amounting to $77,475,293 and its imports to $24,020,333. Congress has recognized its importance by providing liberally for the ship channels leading to its harbor, and the improvement of its approaches by water has resulted in a channel 35 feet in depth throughout, from the capes to the city, and 600 feet wide for the greater part of its length. To render these facilities thoroughly effective adequate lights must be provided. This has been done for the upper channels, except in the case of the channel between Fort Carroll and Baltimore Harbor, known as the Fort McHenry Channel. Since the obstruction of the Lazaretto Point Light a few years ago by the erection of buildings along the river front there is no guide to the harbor. The range lights of the Craighill Channel and those of the Brewerton Channel lead the incoming vessel as far as the Fort McHenry Channel, but there she is left without a guiding light to bring her through the fairway into port. This is a serious deficiency and to a considerable extent lessens the advantages accruing from the work done in the improvement of the waterways. Vessels bound to Baltimore arriving off Annapolis at night frequently come to anchor there, owing to the lack of a complete system of lights to lead them to the quarantine station, which is opposite the Fort McHenry Channel. The matter of lighting this channel has been agitated for a number of years, the proposition for range lights having been discussed even before the obscuration of the Lazaretto Point Light. As the best means of lighting it, it is recommended that a range be established with its front light at or near the intersection of the Brewerton and Fort McHenry Channels, which would serve also as a turning point for vessels coming into or going out of the harbor, and with its rear light on the shoal near Rock Point, west side of the Patapsco River. The location of one of the structures in the city of Baltimore is not considered advisable, as its light would be likely to be obscured when most needed by the smoke of the numerous factories and from other sources, and there would also be the liability of confusion with the lights of the city. The estimated cost of the two structures which will be required is $125,000, and the board recommends that an appropriation of that amount be made for the purpose specified."

2. As the part of the river to be lighted by the proposed range is known as the Fort McHenry Channel it is suggested that the sentence "on that part of the Craighill Channel not now lighted by range lights, lying between the mouth of the harbor of Baltimore at Fort McHenry and that portion of the channel already lighted by range lights" in lines 9, 10, 11, and 12, be omitted in the bill and the words "in the Fort McHenry Channel" be substituted therefor.

3. I therefore recommend that the bill, modified as suggested above, be passed.

Respectfully, BENJ. S. CABLE, Assistant Secretary.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

I want to read a few lines further from the lighthouse hearings of 1910:

Mr. STEVENS. I want Col. Craighill to state in the record anything that may be added to the report of the Lighthouse Board contained on page 66. That is rather complete, but is there anything additional that you want to say?

Col. CRAIGHILL. These are two range lights to mark the Fort McHenry division of the Baltimore Channel. This is the last part of the channel before you reach the city, and consequently is the one which has the most traffic in it.

Mr. STEVENS. Business is greatly congested there?

Col. CRAIGHILL. Yes.

Mr. STEVENS. It is difficult for vessels to pass?

Col. CRAIGHILL. A great many anchor in there, and it is very difficult for them to pass. The present mark which has been used for years is on the old Lazaretto Point. There have been some manufacturing plants built in front of it, so that at times it is impossible to see it, so that very little use can be made of it.

Mr. STEVENS. What is the estimated expense?

Col. CRAIGHILL. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars for two range lights.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know the document from which the gentleman has read, nor could I hear him very plainly, but he is offering an amendment to appropriate $125,000 for the construction of a channel range light in Chesapeake Bay. It is true the department estimated for that appropriation to be expended in the next fiscal year; it is also true, however, that the department has prepared no plans or specifications for the construction of these channel range lines, nor do they have any idea to-day what they will cost. This appropriation was estimated for upon estimates made by the former engineer of the Lighthouse Board, but any Member of this House who has had any experience with the judgment and testimony of the former engineer of the Lighthouse Board as to the Lighthouse Service would have done just exactly what the members of the Committee on Appropriations have done, knocked out this item until the present lighthouse organization has an opportunity of making an intelligent estimate, so that they will be able to state with some degree of accuracy what the probable cost of these lights will be. For that reason the committee did not feel justified in coming to the House with an appropriation of $125,000 with no more testimony than we had, both as to the necessity of the light and as to the amount of money necessary for the purpose of constructing it. That was the reason the Committee on Appropriations did not recommend the amount estimated by the department. We did not think we were justified in following the former engineer for the Lighthouse Service who made the estimates upon which this estimate is based, because it had so frequently happened in the past, where we have followed his recommendations and on his estimate recommended appropriation, that they have discovered after obtaining the appropriations that there was no necessity for them and the money was never used. We therefore concluded we would give the present organization an opportunity to make a careful and intelligent estimate of the cost before recommending any appropriation whatever.

I trust that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was embodied in the bill which was introduced by Mr. GILL of Maryland at this session of Congress, but which has not yet had a favorable report from the committee. Substantially the same matter was comprehended in the bill which was introduced by Mr. GILL at the last session of Congress, and was embodied in an omnibus bill providing for additional aids to navigation. Therefore it has been authorized by law, and as the distinguished occupant of the Chair has already held with regard to the item as to Bogue Sound, which was exactly in the same condition, is not subject to the point of order which was made as to the other item by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. Chairman, the mere fact that Mr. GILL, who introduced this bill covering this item, is too ill in Baltimore to be here does not justify the remaining members of the delegation from Maryland in neglecting an opportunity to protect the interests of Baltimore City, one of the greatest ports in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, the report which has been read here by my distinguished colleague from Maryland, representing one of the Baltimore districts, Mr. KRONMILLER, who has offered this amendment, develops the fact—a well-known fact ascertained and based upon investigation and proper inquiry—that the port of Baltimore has a commerce of over $100,000,000; over $77,000,000 of exports through that port and over $24,000,000 of imports.

But to say that the channel which has been improved and widened and deepened by appropriations of the Congress of the United States at Baltimore should not be properly lighted simply because it would cost $120,000, does not seem to me, sir, to comport with proper and cautious statesmanship. Why, Mr. Chairman, as I said before, Baltimore is one of the greatest ports in the United States. The gentleman objects because the new Lighthouse Board has found that this appropriation for range lights in order to light the way through the harbor and up to the harbor of Baltimore and up to the docks in the harbor of Baltimore is not necessary. What right has the distinguished chairman of the committee to say that the former engineer or the old lighthouse commissioner was not just as competent, just as painstaking, just as patriotic, just as honest, and just as diligent in maintaining proper economies in the performance of the duties of his office, one part of which consists in making estimates and recommendations with regard to the light of harbors and the protection of lighthouses and the providing of range lights, and so forth, in matters like this—what right has the distinguished chairman to animadvert against the former lighthouse commissioner and the former Lighthouse Board and the former lighthouse engineer, who were charged with this duty, and say, Mr. Chairman, that the recommendations of those gentlemen, under their obligations and as officials of the United States, should not be followed; and, forsooth, that the recommendations of other individuals who occupy exactly the same official position, charged with the same official responsibility, should be recognized and adopted by the House of Representatives.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEARRE. I can not yield.

Mr. GOULDEN. I just want to ask the gentleman the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. PEARRE. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars is the estimate, Mr. Chairman, $100,000 of which should be made available at once, in order that the work may be done, as the whole $125,000 could not be used within the year. But that does not alter the matter at all. Now, why ought the Government of the United States through its Congress go to the enormous expense in the development of this harbor, or improvement of it? We have now a channel, first 30 feet deep and then increased to 35 feet, through the recommendations of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, by its appropriations through this House, concurred in by the Senate committee, in bills which had the approval of the President of the United States. Mr. Chairman, we now have a channel of 600 feet wide, and, as this report shows, unless these range lights are constructed here, a great deal of the good which has arisen to the commerce of the people of the United States through the improvement of the harbor of Baltimore will be impaired, if not destroyed, unless these range lights shall be erected as recommended by the department, and therefore I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the amendment read, but I judge from the remarks of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE] that this is a project authorized, on a report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, for range lights in the harbor or the channel approaching Baltimore.

Mr. PEARRE. The gentleman is right.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have some knowledge of the situation there, Mr. Chairman, and I do not believe there is in the United States a more meritorious project than this [applause] or a more necessary aid to navigation, and I believe that every member of that great committee to which I belong will agree with me. I appreciate that pretenses at economy have been manifested by orders from the administration all down the line to cut down estimates and send small estimates to Congress in order that a good showing can be made, and I only regret that the practice has not been more frequent in the past and more sincere in its application. I know the great Committee on Appropriations of this House is just and true and faithful and industrious. I believe the gentleman from Minnesota and his associates are conscientious and are trying to do right by this House and by the country, but I protest against their claiming here, as a valid excuse and justification for omitting a small necessary thing like this, the failure of the department to estimate properly. The department did estimate for this properly, but probably failed to weigh the comparative merits of all the things considered. This is a small matter compared with other matters involving millions, but which are of no more importance relatively than this. The commerce of the city of Baltimore depends largely upon the easy and safe use of this channel. This channel without these lights can not be easily, safely, and profitably used.

Mr. TAWNEY. How long has it been used without these lights?

Mr. ADAMSON. It has been used to some extent, I will say to the gentleman; but I am talking about effectual and efficient use.

Mr. TAWNEY. How many lights are there now?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will frankly say that, not expecting this to be contested, and not expecting to have to remember, I did not count. It has been some time since I saw them, but I have looked at the entire course from one end to the other; I have looked at the difficulties in the way of navigation, and have had them explained to me by sailors, and I say to the gentleman this item ought to be allowed if any item in any bill ought to be allowed, and I hope the gentleman will consider efficiency as important in this particular instance as economy. Let us save somewhere else where it is not so important and where the lights are not so badly needed. We authorized the expenditure for these lights because we knew those lights were needed. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment to carry out the authorization made by Congress last year upon the bill reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for aids to navigation. Amongst the aids to navigation recommended by that committee and passed by this House and concurred in by the Senate was the one which is now offered for incorporation in this bill by the amendment presented by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KRONMILLER].

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GILL], who we all know is now absent on account of illness, appeared before the committee of which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is the honored chairman and of which I am a member, and demonstrated to that committee that, clearly, there was necessity for this aid to navigation and that committee, following the policy adopted, guided by the care and scrutiny which is given to these projects by the chairman of the committee and the members following that guide, recommended the sum now offered to be put into this bill by this amendment. It is error to assert that the Secretary of the Treasury did not recommend this appropriation for this aid to navigation, because in the estimate submitted to the House under authority of law by the Secretary of the Treasury, on page 329, we find these words:

> Works considered essential for the immediate needs of navigation and for the efficient equipment of the Lighthouse Service:
> Fort McHenry Channel Lighthouse, Maryland: For the establishment of range lights to properly mark the Fort McHenry Channel leading to Baltimore, Md., $125,000, as authorized by the act of June 17, 1910.

The Secretary of the Treasury in recommending this appropriation says that it is essential for the immediate needs of navigation, as the Fort McHenry Channel is the only channel from the Chesapeake Bay to Baltimore not adequately lighted. The Lazeretto Point Light is now obscured by the erection of high buildings.

Now, I have no criticism to make on the Committee on Appropriations for not including this in the bill, but I do not think they should single out this particular work, when it is said by the Secretary of the Treasury that the immediate needs of the service require the erection of these lights. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GILL], who was very earnest and insistent before our committee and who presented the claims of the city of Baltimore for this additional aid to navigation and upon whose presentation the committee recommended it, has not for the reason I have given been able to present it, and I join with his colleagues from Maryland in saying to the House that the evidence offered before the committee was such that we deemed it an essential aid to navigation, and under the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and the estimates which he submits and the reasons which he gives, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. From the statement made by the gentleman from Maryland I had supposed that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, in making this recommendation, had acted upon some professional and technical information, however bad it may have been demonstrated to have been. So little confidence was had in the recommendation of the former Lighthouse Board that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported a bill for the complete reorganization of that board and the placing of that service in control of an entirely different force. It seems from the statement of the gentleman from Georgia, however, that the gentleman from Maryland was mistaken. The committee did not rely upon professional or technical information. That information, however erroneous it might have been, might nevertheless have justified the committee in its action. But it seems they relied wholly upon the statement of a very distinguished Member of this House who has a very excellent standing at the bar of his community, but, as the Members of the House are aware, has no special knowledge which would justify him in posing as an expert upon the necessity of providing additional aids to navigation.

I have no doubt that the gentleman is accurate in the statement that the gentleman from Maryland was very earnest in advocating this proposed improvement. Those of us who have served upon committees realize that all Members of the House are very much in earnest when they advocate improvements for the localities which they represent.

The Lighthouse Service has been reorganized, and it is hoped that a great improvement in the administration of the service will result in consequence of that reorganization. The committee believed it to be desirable to permit this new service——

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In just a moment. The committee believed it to be desirable to permit this new service to have an opportunity to make an independent investigation and determine whether the two lights heretofore recommended would be adequate, and whether the estimate was proper and reasonable, and until that is done the committee believed that, since the present conditions have existed some time without any great detriment to the interests of navigation of the city of Baltimore, it was the part of wisdom to permit that situation to continue a while longer.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, when I requested the gentleman to permit an interruption, he had just referred to the fact that the lighthouse system had been reorganized. The gentleman from Minnesota had made the same reference—I suppose in explaining the omission to appropriate for this item. I want to ask the gentleman if in any way that reorganization could affect or undo any necessary authorizations for projects of this kind?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It might necessarily affect them and result in legislation that would undo them, because the chief cause, Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Georgia and the Chairman are well aware, of the reorganization of the Lighthouse Service was the conviction of everybody who had anything to do with that service, whether from the standpoint of expenditures or otherwise, that the service was not of the kind and character required by the necessities of the public service. The gentleman from Georgia performed a distinct public service when he was instrumental, in cooperation with others, in securing the reorganization of the service and the elimination of the old system, which had proved so inadequate.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will permit me right there, I was going to call attention to the fact that the same great committee reported both pieces of legislation, and we did not see any inconsistency and did not intend any inconsistency. We wanted a better board and a better system to carry out the work that had been begun.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course the committee would not have reported both bills if they had deemed them inconsistent, but after the House has had opportunity to see the effect of the reporting of both bills, it is apparent to others who did not participate in that work that there was a seeming inconsistency. If they recommeded the reorganization of the service because it was incompetent, it is reasonable to assume that the recommendations based upon the report and information furnished by an incompetent service might perhaps have been erroneous.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a moment.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman is mistaken if he undertakes to convey the idea that the present lighthouse commission and those who are now in the service under the reorganization do not think that this is a necessary work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. One moment; I was present at the hearing, and I know what Mr. Putnam said. Not only that, but I saw him. I saw the witness, and I know from the way that he testified that it would be to the advantage of the service to have a further investigation made as to the desirability of the location and as to the additional estimate for the work.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not know what his manner was, for I did not see him. All I can judge from is the report of his testimony, which I hold in my hand, which is printed and furnished by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have already called attention to the fact that the gentleman from Georgia based his support not upon any professional or technical information, but upon the fact that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GILL] had presented the case in such an admirable manner.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I am not mistaken.

Mr. ADAMSON. I went and examined the premises.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Georgia bases his support of this item upon the fact that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GILL] had made such an admirable showing before the committee, and had been so earnest in the committee that he had convinced the committee; and it confirms my opinion that since the former lighthouse board was not reliable and the committee based its recommendation upon the statements of men who did not have professional or technical information, but of those who are very much interested in the proposed item, that the committee had perhaps in this instance given a more careful consideration of this item than it required.

One other statement: The gentleman from Georgia asked why the committee singled out this item for elimination from the bill and did not eliminate other items recommended by the department.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The committee also put in this bill appropriations for a number of aids to navigation which were neither recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce or by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. And which would be subject to a point of order if it were made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But which, Mr. Chairman, have since been incorporated in a bill reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and passed by this House. If the committee that incorporated the items in an appropriation bill merely anticipated the action of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, it could hardly be criticized for the fact that perhaps it realized more quickly than that committee the propriety and necessity of these aids to navigation.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this item close in eight minutes and that the gentleman from Maryland have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I desire two minutes to reply, and if the gentleman will give it to me I will not object.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentlemen from Georgia have had two arguments in favor of the proposition and I thought that was sufficient. I will modify my request and make it 10 minutes and give the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] two minutes to reply to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the amendment shall be closed in 10 minutes, of which the gentleman from Georgia shall have two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, just one word. The Committee on Appropriations have recommended expenditures of three items which were not authorized by Congress, but which the Secretary of Commerce and Labor considered desirable that early provision should be made for.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Which items are they?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I will read them to you. I am not making this statement without knowing what I am talking about. Staten Island Depot, N. Y.; Livingstone Channel, Detroit River, aids to navigation, Detroit, Mich.; Brandywine Shoals Light, Del.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has not a bill since passed the House reported from the gentleman's committee with those items in it?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I think so; but the gentleman now passes items in an appropriation bill in anticipation of what our committee will do, and then refuses to carry out the purposes which our committee last session reported and which Congress passed into law.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. No; I have not the time.

What right have they to criticize the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, when they, in anticipation that the committee will pass legislation, put in the appropriation bills those projects that are not authorized, give priority to those not authorized, and refuse to include in those bills those that have already for a year been authorized? I have no interest in this matter. I am simply endeavoring to take care of an appropriation which was thought by the committee, by the Secretary of the Treasury, and by the Commissioner of Lighthouses in the testimony before the committee to be necessary, and for that reason I have undertaken to advocate this amendment because I think it ought to be adopted.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Chairman, the discussion on the pending amendment has drifted away from its real merits. I am not, however, concerned with any question of conflict of jurisdiction between the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the general matter of legislation concerning lighthouses. Moreover, I have no doubt that the members of the Committee on Appropriations, within the limited time they can necessarily give to individual items in department estimates, gave the estimate for the Fort McHenry Channel range lights the careful consideration they always do to appropriations of such character. An examination of the hearings on the item shows the lights proposed in the amendment to be greatly needed. I find from these hearings that Mr. Putnam, Commissioner of Lighthouses, notwithstanding the gentleman from New York, stated that these lights were to be a guide to the most important channel leading into the harbor of Baltimore, and he stated they were very necessary. The only instance where Mr. Putnam was not specific in his testimony was when he referred to the precise amount of money that might be expended in the construction of the lights during the fiscal year of 1912. He did state that there might be about $25,000 that would not be used during that fiscal year. That is the only matter about which he was indefinite.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the merits of this proposition, it does happen that I am familiar with the harbor of Baltimore. I come in frequent contact with the men who are engaged in its navigation, and I do know that the great steamboat captains who traverse the waters of Chesapeake Bay and into the Port of Baltimore are intimately concerned about the additional lights for the main channel of Baltimore Harbor. The erection of buildings around the city of Baltimore and its harbor in the last few years has tended to obscure the old lights. There has been opened up an additional main channel way as the result of recent appropriations for river and harbor improvements, and to-day navigation in the upper Patapsco River at Baltimore absolutely needs the appropriation provided for by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee in its authorization of one year ago for the lights now provided in the pending amendment.

I want also to call the attention of the House to one other significant situation. Assuming that the Committee on Appropriations gave to this item all of the consideration which time warranted, it is a fact that a committee from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce actualy visited Baltimore Harbor and examined into the necessity for these lights. The Chairman of this Committee of the Whole at the present time was of that committee, and after an inspection of the locality they returned and included the item in the authorization bill of last year. I therefore earnestly hope that this amendment, necessary to provide aids to the navigation of the great city of Baltimore, and especially necessary in order that the channel ways in the upper harbor of Baltimore shall have additional facilities for navigators, will not meet with further objection, but will be adopted by a decisive vote. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I think the House ought to be in possession of the information that the committee had when it declined to recommend the appropriation for this project. Members of the House are familiar with the passage of the bill reorganizing the Lighthouse Service. Members of the House know, as the Department of Commerce and Labor knows, that there were a great many items included and authorized in that bill that would not have been reported out of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce if it had not been deemed necessary in order to secure the passage of the reorganization bill. The reorganization of that service was regarded as of such importance that they were willing to carry in that bill authorizations for aids to navigation, not with any idea that they would be used and appropriated for in the next year or in the next two years, but that possibly in the future they might be necessary.

Let me say, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I say——

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I decline to yield; I have only three minutes. Let me say, further, every Member of this House knows that when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reports out a bill authorizing aids to navigation they do not report on one bill alone, but it is generally an omnibus bill, and it is for the purpose of supplying the needs of navigation not only for the next year but for the next 5 or 10 years, possibly, with the idea——

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman permit a question——

Mr. TAWNEY. I decline to yield—with the idea that the department shall determine the time and the immediate necessity for the establishment of these aids and then ask for an appropriation to make them. Now, this estimate here has been placed by the committee and the Department of Commerce and Labor in the second class. They put this item in the second class as not of any immediate necessity, and then, in addition to that, we were told when Mr. FITZGERALD asked the superintendent:

> Have you prepared estimates for the construction of these lights?
> Mr. PUTNAM. Yes, sir; general estimates have been prepared.
> Mr. FITZGERALD. I know; but you made the general estimate when you asked for the authorization. Now you are asking for the money. Have you not any more specific information?
> Mr. PUTNAM. No, sir; there has been no more detailed estimates made for the items authorized last June.

And before that he says that this estimate of $125,000 is based upon the estimate of the engineer who was the engineer under the old organization, which organization was so inefficient that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce brought in a bill here to abolish and reorganize that service, and now that committee is contending that because it authorized this project as one of the second class, estimated for by an organization they have repudiated, that the Committee on Appropriations is not justified in refusing to appropriate the money for a project thus estimated for by an organization that they themselves abolish because of its inefficiency.

Mr. COVINGTON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, whether as a matter of fact there are included here several items——

Mr. TAWNEY. There are several items included here for which a law is not yet passed authorizing them. Bills have been reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, however, authorizing them. Under the new organization they condemn many bills authorized in this general act as not having any necessity whatever for them, and have not asked for an appropriation, while they have also in their investigations discovered that there are projects required in aid of navigation that are of more importance than those that are included as of the first class, and they estimate upon those, and upon the testimony of the chief of that service we have recommended the appropriation. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired—all time has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have time to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. TAWNEY) there were—ayes 51, noes 35.

Mr. TAWNEY. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers [Mr. TAWNEY and Mr. KRONMILLER] reported that there were—ayes 60, noes 41.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Depot for the second lighthouse district: For establishing a lighthouse depot on the site belonging to the War Department on the south or southwesterly end of Castle Island, Boston Harbor, Mass., authority is hereby granted for the transfer of the site to the Department of Commerce and Labor, and the authority to establish a lighthouse depot on Governors Island, in Boston Harbor, is hereby repealed.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Salaries, Lighthouse Service: For salaries of 17 lighthouse inspectors and of clerks and other authorized permanent employees in the district offices and depots of the Lighthouse Service, exclusive of those regularly employed in the office of the Bureau of Lighthouses, Washington, D. C., $465,960.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend, on page 182, line 3, after "Columbia," by inserting: "Provided, That the salary of the lighthouse inspectors shall not exceed $3,600 for one inspector in the third district, and shall not exceed $3,000 each for the other inspectors: And provided further, That the total of the salaries of the 17 inspectors shall not exceed $46,800."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, under the act reorganizing the Lighthouse Service and to establish the Bureau of Lighthouses there were provided inspectors for 19 districts, 3 of which were to be served by members of the Army and Navy. This amendment does not increase the amount appropriated for the salary on account of inspectors for the Lighthouse Service. It is not proposed to increase it, because the proposed amendment will require time to secure competent men for these posts, and the whole authorized amount is not likely to be required for the first year. The act of June 17, 1910, reorganizing the Lighthouse Service, limited the salaries of lighthouse inspectors to $2,400, except in the Third Lighthouse District, where the salary of $2,600 was authorized.

In order to successfully carry out the plan of reorganization, it is believed the salary of $2,400 is inadequate in many of the districts. The effect of the proposed amendment would be to increase the average salary in the other districts to $2,700, and to permit the salaries to be graded from $2,400 to $3,000, according to the responsibility involved in the work of the districts, but not to increase the amount appropriated for salaries.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield? I think he inadvertently made a misstatement.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I will yield, of course.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The effect of this is to increase salaries?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I said the effect was not to increase the amount appropriated for salaries.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman made the statement that it would increase the salaries.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman misunderstood me, because I read it from the paper.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wanted it accurate in the RECORD anyway.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I was accurate, but the gentleman misunderstood me.

Now, the aggregate difference in salaries between the provision in the bill and those in the proposed amendment is $4,800. But this amendment limits, if you will read it, the amount in the second proviso, in that the total of the salaries of 17 inspectors shall not exceed $46,800, which is the amount appropriated under this bill for salaries. The purpose of this amendment is solely intended, if possible, to give to the Commissioner of Lighthouses and Deputy Commissioner of Lighthouses the right to grade these salaries—some of them $2,400.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. How are these men appointed?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. They are appointed by the Commissioner of Lighthouses.

Mr. TAWNEY. Under civil-service rules?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I think so, though I am not certain. But I do not know as I would undertake to say that. None of them have been appointed yet.

Mr. TAWNEY. They are civilian officers.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes, sir; civilian officers.

Mr. TAWNEY. And I do not think they are under the classified service.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I think not. Now, I call attention to the testimony of Mr. Putnam, the Commissioner of Lighthouses, in which he said this:

I should call your attention also to the fact that there is a slight increase in the salaries over the amount named in the act reorganizing the service, which provided that one inspector might be paid $3,600 and the other inspectors $2,400 a year. We believe it is too small an amount for many of the districts. There are six districts in which the annual expenditures exceed $400,000 in the district, and we think that a man to take charge of such a district and be the right kind of a technical man should receive a somewhat higher pay. We are asking that limit on the salary be $3,000 instead of $2,400. The inspectors should be men of high character and qualifications, including technical knowledge as to engineering and nautical affairs, and should have business ability.

In the organization of the Lighthouse Service a number of the superintendents of construction and of the masters of lighthouse tenders are paid $2,400 a year. If the salary of the lighthouse inspector——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. If the salary of the lighthouse inspector is restricted to $2,400, then an inspector would receive no higher compensation than the several of the employees under him, although he is charged with wider responsibility. The pay and allowances of Army and Navy officers assigned to lighthouse duty in the same district, under the former organization, and assuming that the former devoted one-third of their time to this work, was about $90,000. If we do not provide for this, the President can still, under the act of 1910, have the Army and Navy officers act as inspectors, and that service costs the Government $90,000. The salaries of the Army and Navy officers who discharge the duties of inspectors——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will my colleague yield to me for a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has this matter been presented to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at this session?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. No, sir; it has not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been presented to the Committee on Appropriations, but that committee did not, in view of the fact that this appropriation——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman is taking up my time. I will give him time in just a moment. It did, in fact, come before the Committee on Appropriations, and as I have just read, the statement of the Lighthouse Board before the committee shows that some of the lighthouse districts are so much more important and involve so much greater responsibility and expenditure of funds than others that it is not desirable that the inspectors of the districts should all receive the same salary. We recognized that fact, and in the New York district we provided that instead of the inspector having $2,400 salary he should receive $3,000.

The inspectors probably will be required to act as disbursing officers and give bonds, and will be put to the expense of obtaining bonds. The amount of funds handled in some of the districts will be very large. During the past year the disbursements in the various districts ranged from about $1,200,000 to $72,000. Under the reorganization the inspector is in immediate charge of the entire work of the district, a responsibility formerly divided between two officers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I know that this amendment is subject to a point of order, but nevertheless I have presented it in the hope that it will be accepted because it will benefit the service. I am satisfied it will benefit the Bureau of Lighthouses, and after consulting with the men who are in charge of this work and who are efficient and familiar with their duties, men who have had long experience in the service, I earnestly urge the adoption of this amendment.

I have no purpose in view except the good of the public service, because I live in an inland district where there is not a Government lighthouse anywhere within 200 miles of it, and I am not actuated by any motive except a desire to promote the efficiency of the service of this important bureau of the Government which we have recently established and reorganized. Because I am familiar with the history of its reorganization, because I took part in the legislation that reorganized the Lighthouse Service and established the Bureau of Lighthouses, and because I was on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and on the conference committee between the two Houses, whose action finally resulted in the establishment of this Bureau of Lighthouses, I have become deeply interested in its success; and I believe that the amendment which I have offered, based upon the facts which I have given as to why it should be adopted, furnished me by those who know, will aid in promoting that desirable object. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I present this amendment. I hope the gentleman will not make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota wish to discuss the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I wish just to speak for a moment concerning this amendment. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia was submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, with the estimates for service. The committee took into consideration the argument made in favor of this proposition, but we realized that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, in a law passed less than a year ago, had fixed these salaries at $2,400, with a salary to one inspector of $3,600, and, knowing the thoroughness with which the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce does its work, we did not feel justified in recommending to the House a change in its conclusions as to the salaries which these men ought to receive.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is another reason why I can not, after listening to the gentleman and thinking the matter over, accept the amendment, and that is the fact that inside of a very years all these inspectors—16 of them, or 17 of them—will be receiving the maximum salary.

It is true that they tried to grade the salaries, but the services of these men are almost identical. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce recognized the fact that their responsibility was practically equal, and therefore gave them a uniform salary, and for that reason I think the law, as the committee reported it and as Congress adopted it, ought to remain at least more than a year, or until the new organization had an opportunity to determine the necessity for changes in existing salaries. I therefore make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cape Vincent (N. Y.) Station: Superintendent, $1,500; skilled laborer, $720; machinist, $960; 2 firemen, at $720 each; 2 laborers, at $600 each; in all, $5,820.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 193, after line 5, insert a new paragraph:
"Wyoming Station, for land and buildings."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, to that I make a point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota reserve his point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. As I understand, this is to purchase the land and erect the buildings.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not authorized by law.

Mr. MONDELL. It will be if it is put in this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to get along with the bill as fast as possible. Can the gentleman get along with two minutes?

Mr. MONDELL. Two or three minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve my point of order for three minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, Wyoming is the crown of the continent. She has in her hundred thousand square miles of mountain and plain more beautiful trout streams than any like area on the face of the earth. Amid her mighty mountain masses arise the crystal springs which form the headwaters of every important stream in the United States west of the Alleghenies. From her great central ranges flow north, south, east, and west beautiful, purling, crystal, dashing, emerald, mountain streams whose waters finally mingle with the mighty billows of both the Atlantic and the Pacific. [Applause.] So favored are conditions in Wyoming to the growth of trout that in that magnificent Commonwealth they climb 10,000 feet above the billows of either ocean, and at this magnificent height, nearly 2 miles above the ocean level, they cross the continental divide and pass from the waters of the Atlantic into the waters of the Pacific. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not in accordance with sound public policy that these magnificent game trout should not be under Federal control and supervision in these days of conservation. Here is a magnificent food product, the finest brain food in the world, and millions of it not under Federal control, not being conserved, not being properly cared for, and I only propose an appropriation which means a dollar a mile for each mile of trout brook in Wyoming. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the persuasive eloquence of my friend from Wyoming, I must insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming concede the point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Wyoming, with great regret, concedes the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bozeman (Mont.) Station: Superintendent, $1,500; fish culturist, $900; 2 laborers, at $600 each; in all, $3,600.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the establishment of a fish-cultural station in Kentucky, including the purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, $25,000.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to rival the eloquence of the distinguished gentleman that recently spoke, but instead of eloquence I shall try to give a few facts to justify the creation of this hatchery.

There is an area of 300,000 square miles of which Kentucky is the center where there is no fish hatchery, and into which the Federal Fish Commission is shipping annually large quantities of spawn at considerable cost in the distribution. The territory itself is peculiarly adapted to the propagation of fish, and particularly the black bass, which is very difficult to propagate in hatcheries ordinarily, and for which there is great demand over the country. Three times there has been reported to this House by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries a bill for the establishment of a fish hatchery in the State of Kentucky. There has passed at this Congress, through the Senate, a bill for that purpose appropriating the sum of money named in the amendment, and that bill has now been reported by the House committee and is on the House Calendar.

The lateness of the year, coupled with my absence from Washington, has made it impossible to hope to get this bill acted upon through the usual channels. Therefore I appeal to my friend from Illinois to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I observe by the calendar that there are 21 bills now here to establish fish hatcheries, and in view of this fact I shall insist upon the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to know the ground of the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alaska Fisheries Service: For protecting the seal fisheries of Alaska, including the furnishing of food, fuel, and clothing and other necessities of life to the natives of the Pribilof Islands, Alaska, transportation of supplies to and from the islands, expenses of travel of agents and other employees, purchase, hire, and maintenance of vessels, including crews for same, and for all other expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the act of April 21, 1910, entitled "An act to protect the seal fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes; and for the protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska, including travel, hire of boats, employment of temporary labor, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith," $100,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 204, after line 24, insert: "That not more than $25,000 of the appropriations for the Bureau of Fisheries shall be used for land and buildings as a station in Wyoming."

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I doubt if the amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman questions it, I shall make it to please him. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky called attention to the fact that he had a bill for a State hatchery that had been reported four times. The bill for the Wyoming hatchery had been reported about eight times and has passed the Senate, if I recollect correctly, six or seven times. This amendment will prohibit the use of more than twenty-five thousand in money for a hatchery in Wyoming, and there is such great public necessity for such a hatchery in Wyoming that the commissioner might feel disposed to use more than that, except for that limitation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this the same proposition the gentleman propounded a short time ago in such eloquent language?

Mr. MONDELL. This prohibits the commissioner from using more than $25,000 for this hatchery.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The law prohibits them from spending any of it as it is now.

Mr. MONDELL. And we are strengthening that prohibition by providing that he can not use more than $25,000, even though he might think $50,000 was necessary.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If it means anything it means that he is authorized to spend $25,000, and it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. It simply prohibits the commissioner from spending more than $25,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $170,700.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. This is in connection with Ellis Island. While the committee has appropriated the items that have just been read, I note that Commissioner Williams further asks for a ferry steamer at $125,000, and to complete the construction of new buildings $365,000, some pipe tunnels, and heating apparatus in kitchen, and so forth.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, he asks for enough.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Which were not given him.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is true.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Inasmuch as the head tax produces an annual surplus of something in the nature of $1,000,000——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. When?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Every year.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, no. The gentleman is in error. Part of the time—most of the time.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Well, I do not remember any year when it did not produce a surplus.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is why we repealed it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman will find they changed their method of bookkeeping in the department. They used to charge against this appropriation in the same year the sums which were appropriated in full and the funds which were expended under appropriations, and then they changed that.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. They applied for a deficiency one year, and that is the reason the appropriation was refused.

Mr. BENNET of New York. But I understand the reason for creating the deficiency was the charging up to the sums which were appropriated and which had not yet been spent; for instance, in the Galveston matter.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Since the gentleman is reflecting so seriously upon the administration of this, he will perhaps understand why we are not willing to do all they ask.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is the reason. They were not allowed——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is one reason, but the reason, so far as this vessel is concerned, is that they have got one vessel. They have got all they need, except they think they ought to have a reserve. Of course, if we have to duplicate everything in the Government service, and are constantly asked to do it, we can not possibly meet the expenses of the Government. Every branch of the Government wants a duplicate set of everything as a reserve in case of an emergency.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will say to the gentleman I am not making this speech for the purpose of getting it in the RECORD——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I understand.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Now, as to the new building and the extension of the main island on the northern side.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It was the judgment of the committee, after hearings, that the chief desire for this new building was to balance the architecture of the island.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That does not appear from the hearings.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It appears from the hearings and what we know about the situation. There is no need of the building.

Mr. BENNET of New York. There have been pretty serious statements made to the effect that there is no room now for detention, and a very prominent Member of this House, whom I can see without turning my head very far, sent me a letter not long ago from a man in his city, who was a man of very high standing and a member of the common council of that city, protesting in the most vehement terms—and he is not a New York City man—in the interest of humanity against the crowding that is now going on at Ellis Island. I am not going to offer an amendment, because I bow to the better aggregate judgment of the members of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I thank the gentleman for not saying the separate better judgment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman realizes the difficulty one has to get anything from the committee.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will not be here next year, but I do hope the Members who remain here will not pass this over on any idea that it is for the purpose of balancing the architectural features of that island.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I suggest to the gentleman, in regard to the relief of the crowded condition at Ellis Island, that we get through some legislation which will restrict the undesirables coming into this country.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will leave that answer to my colleague, who will be here next year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are no undesirables coming into Ellis Island; if there were, they would be deported.

Mr. AUSTIN. There is no accounting for some people's taste.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMMIGRATION SERVICE.

Expenses of regulating immigration: For all expenses of the enforcement of the laws regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States, including the contract-labor laws; for the costs of the reports of decisions of the Federal courts, and digests thereof, for the use of the Commissioner General of Immigration; for salaries and expenses of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed to enforce said laws; for the enforcement of the provisions of the act of February 20, 1907, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States" and acts amendatory thereof; for expenses of necessary supplies, alterations, and repairs, and for all other expenses authorized by said act; also for preventing the unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States, by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto, and the expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expense of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation, and for the refunding of head tax upon presentation of evidence showing conclusively that collection was made through error of Government officers; all to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, $2,525,000: Provided, That from and after July 1, 1911, all moneys paid into the Treasury to reimburse the Immigration Service for expenses of detained aliens paid from the appropriation for expenses of regulating immigration, shall be credited to the appropriation for the expenses of regulating immigration for the fiscal year in which the expenses were incurred.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object to the paragraph. I believe the proviso is a new provision in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman when he understands will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is why I reserved the point of order, in order to ascertain the purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The steamship lines are required by law to pay all the expenses of detention of these aliens who are not permitted to enter, and we find it necessary to put these people frequently in hospitals and the like for care pending their deportation.

These hospitals and other institutions in which we have placed them refuse to look to the steampship companies, but require us to pay them for the service they are called on to do. We, in turn, receive that money from the steamship companies, but, having paid it out of the appropriation, in the absence of a provision of this kind, the money would be covered into the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury, and the immigration branch would lose that much of the appropriation for the expenditure of the service. Unless this provision is carried, we must largely increase the appropriation, and it is in order to keep this appropriation down as much as possible that this provision is inserted. If we increase the appropriation, it increases, at their discretion, the expenditure of money in the Immigration Service. Now, all this amounts to is this, that if they take a certain amount of money from this appropriation and pay the hospitals and then present the bills to the steamship companies and get the money, they can put it back into the appropriation and use it again, whereas if they are not allowed to do that we must have that much additional annual appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. As a part of this expense that is borne by the steamship companies, they bear that themselves direct, but, as to that which is borne by the Government, that part has to be made a claim against the steamship companies, and under the existing law is turned into the Treasury. And this is to obviate that necessity by using appropriations for that purpose?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Of appropriating a larger sum for that service.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I notice the committee has struck from this paragraph this language:

Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 of said sum may be expended, as provided in section 24 of the act of February 20, 1907, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States."

I also note that that is on the recommendation, I assume, of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. The committee, I presume, took his judgment—that with that proviso it would be well to continue to administer the contract-labor law the same way as he has.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. He was exceedingly anxious to avoid these subdivisions, because the same men enforce, in a measure, the contract-labor law and other provisions, and it is practically impossible to keep the expense separate and divide the men's salaries up as between this limited amount and the balance of the appropriation. If a man is employed a part of the time under the contract-labor law and part of the time in general work, it is practically impossible to arrange what should be a fair division of his salary. And the Secretary is anxious to avoid these subdivisions of appropriations as much as possible.

Mr. BENNET of New York. My personal judgment is, if he assumes to employ men as he has in the past, and it was the desire of Congress he should, by putting them on the rolls and bluebooks, where their names can be ascertained by the steamship companies, he will find difficulty with the Comptroller of the Treasury. But as he is the man who is administering the law the responsibility, I presume, is his.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It was his desire that this be done.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit some remarks on the subject on page 133 of the bill, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous expenses, Division of Naturalization: For compensation, to be fixed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, of examiners, interpreters, clerks, and stenographers, for the purpose of carrying on the work of the Division of Naturalization, Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, provided for by the act of Congress approved June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States," and for their actual necessary traveling expenses while absent from their official stations, including street-car fares on official business at official stations, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe; and for the actual necessary traveling expenses of the officers and employees of the Division of Naturalization in Washington while absent on official duty outside of the District of Columbia; for telegrams, verifications to legal papers, telephone service in offices outside of the District of Columbia; not to exceed $3,600 for rent of offices outside of the District of Columbia where suitable quarters can not be obtained in public buildings; and for the purpose of carrying into effect that part of section 13 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat., p. 896), which provides: "And in case the clerk of any court collects fees in excess of the sum of $6,000 in any one year, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may allow to such clerk from the money which the United States shall receive additional compensation for the employment of additional clerical assistance, but for no other purpose, if in the opinion of the said Secretary the business of such clerk warrants such allowance:" Provided, That the total compensation for the additional clerical assistants authorized by that portion of the said section quoted above to be employed by the clerks of courts shall in no case exceed one-half of the gross amount of fees collected by such clerks in naturalization cases during the fiscal year immediately preceding, and that the expenditures from this appropriation shall be in the manner and under such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may prescribe, $175,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am about to offer some amendments to the paragraph, and I suggest, by agreement, the amendments be offered and the section perfected, with the right reserved to make a point of order at that time.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That is satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] asks unanimous consent that this paragraph may be subject to amendment, with the reservation of points of order after the paragraph is through, if amended. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "that part of," at the first portion of line 8, page 208; to insert after the word "ninety-six," on same page, line 10, "as amended by the act approved June 25, 1910," and to strike out the balance of the paragraph down to and including the word "preceding," in line 32.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 208, line 8, strike out the words "that part of," after "ninety-six," in line 10, and insert "as amended by the act approved June 25, 1910;" strike out after "ninety-six" the remainder of line 10 and all down to and including the word "preceding," in line 23.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the text in the bill, in my judgment, should be adopted without modification, but it is undoubtedly subject to a point of order. Not only has the gentleman reserved a point of order on the section, but I have been notified by other gentlemen that they intend to make a point of order against the section in its present form. I am usually very much inclined to yield on reasonable amendments if I am about to lose on a point of order, and in order, as I think, to avoid this being subjected to a point of order, I offer those amendments.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I have any disposition to press the point of order, but——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Other gentlemen have conveyed intimations to me that they will press it——

Mr. COX of Indiana. My object in reserving the point of order was to elicit information. The information I desire to elicit is, What compensation would be paid to these additional clerks? They are to get one-half of the gross receipts paid into the clerks' offices as their salaries. How much would that amount to?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It varies vastly, as the gentleman will understand, in the different State courts.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What would it be in the larger places?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In the largest places it might amount to $7,000 or $8,000 a year. I concede that it can be stricken out on a point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa whether the word "that" should not come out on line 23?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is not the proposition of the gentlemen who are "negotiating" to make a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I have taken the amendment as they offered it. I think not; however, I think it ought to stay in.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNDER LEGISLATIVE.

Statement of appropriations: For preparation, under the direction of the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives, of the statements showing appropriations made, new offices created, offices the salaries of which have been omitted, increased, or reduced, indefinite appropriations, and contracts authorized, together with a chronological history of the regular appropriation bills passed during the third session of the Sixty-first Congress, as required by the act approved October 19, 1888, $4,000, to be paid to the persons designated by the chairmen of said committees to do said work.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I think it is new legislation, and I do not see much use of it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is not new legislation. On the contrary, it is ancient legislation, and very valuable.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I do not see why the men who are doing the work now can not simply make up the statement required. The clerks of the committees know all about the subject.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Well, Mr. Chairman, it is well understood that this is additional compensation to the clerks of the two committees, respectively, of the House and Senate. It is compensation well earned, and it has been allowed for a long time. It is not new at all. The work is specially required by law to be done.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I want to ask the gentleman if this is not an increase of their compensation without authority of law?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Oh, no. This has been done right along.

Mr. MACON. I ask the gentleman if there is any authority of law for it?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If the gentleman from Arkansas means in addition to their other compensation, I will say yes. The law requires this work to be done by the clerks of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations, respectively. This law appropriates $4,000 for this work, and requires that the work shall be done by the clerks of the Appropriation Committees.

Mr. MACON. When you designate somebody to do a particular work who is already in the service, and pay that somebody for doing the particular work, then you increase his compensation, do you not? Why can not these clerks do this work without extra compensation? They have nothing else to do at the time they do this work.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If you strike this out, it virtually reduces the appropriation for the salaries regularly paid to the clerks to the Committees on Appropriations of the House and Senate.

Mr. MACON. There are so many ways of getting around the law, many ways of twisting the law around in one direction and then in another, so as to increase compensation that it is hard to keep up with the many increases that are made upon appropriation bills. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For refrigerating apparatus for the House wing of the Capitol and House Office Building, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including the cooling of the air supplied to the Hall of the House, completion of the ice-water plant at the House Office Building, for labor, materials, and personal services, $36,100, to be immediately available, and together with the two following sums to be expended under the direction and supervision of the commission in control of the House Office Building appointed under the act approved March 4, 1907.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. Is this item based on existing law?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Measurably on existing law.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What does the gentleman mean by saying "measurably?"

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I mean that the existing law provides for the House Office Building, and one of the decent and necessary things to do would be to furnish drinking water there.

Mr. COX of Indiana. But the law authorizing the House Office Building does not provide for a cold-storage plant, does it?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This is for ice water to be consumed by the occupants of the House Office Building, or a plant to chill the water in connection with the House Office Building, and it also includes a part of the remodeling of this Chamber, which is now authorized by law. I think that explains my former answer as to "measurably."

Mr. COX of Indiana. The language in the paragraph under consideration is "including the air supplied to the Hall of the House." This appropriation is not devoted to that one thing?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is not. It is very largely, and I emphasize the word "very," to provide gentlemen with suitable drinking water in the House Office Building.

Mr. COX of Indiana. It is contemplated to use a part of this appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes; and for chilling this room. That is a very moderate part of it. It is to produce the ice, and it is a mere step from the ice to cool the water for the 400 rooms in the House Office Building. It is not to cool the rooms themselves.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has the gentleman's committee taken into consideration whether or not there can be any economy in the way of making the ice?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. A very great economy in the production of the ice.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. So far as I have learned, we have not been able to have any ice or ice water in our rooms in the House Office Building.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am well aware of it, and that is why we want to provide for it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. We have waited a long time expecting to be provided with it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But the gentleman will not be provided with it now if this appropriation does not go through.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I may not be here long enough to get it now.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman will get it next year if this appropriation goes through.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against it on the ground that it is new legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is not legislation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. It is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What part of it is not authorized by existing law?

Mr. COX of Indiana. The entire paragraph.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The remodeling of the Hall of the House is authorized by express statute.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. And appropriated for.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. No; there is an appropriation in here to provide the money.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Why was not this put in with it?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Because we are going to use one plant for the two buildings. The arranging and remodeling of this room is expressly authorized by law, and I trust it will include a ventilating system, and this is merely a ventilating system. I trust the gentleman from Indiana will not make the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not sure that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I must make the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the House Office Building there is a drinking-water apparatus as a part of the equipment of the building, and this is a proper device for the purpose of cooling the water to be furnished through that apparatus. Alterations and changes in the House have been authorized, and any device in connection with the conduct of the business of the House is a part of the work in progress and is in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has the gentleman the statute on which you propose to base this appropriation—the organic law itself, if there be any?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We do not need an organic law, because both buildings are in existence. It is a continuation of a work in progress. Repairs to a building are always in order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. The gentleman does not regard the items contemplated in this paragraph as being repairs to buildings?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Which part of it does the gentleman object to?

Mr. COX of Indiana. I object to the whole of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can not successfully do that.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I do not know whether I can or not, but I will unless there is a statute cited here to base it upon.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit me to suggest that, as he well knows, I have no further interest in the condition of the House Office Building. But it is the universal complaint that one can not obtain a decent drink of water in that great building.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes; most of us buy it for ourselves.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It seems to me that we ought not to economize by cutting off the drinking water from Members of Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX of Indiana. I think it is rather late. [Laughter.] I have occupied the House Office Building, and I never heard any objection to the water over there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman has not been on the commission to hear the complaints.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I have no complaint to make.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some gentlemen never have any use for drinking water. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I have frequently tried the water in the Office Building, and I found it not very pleasant to the taste.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide gratings for the area ways of the House Office Building, including labor and materials for same, $3,500, to be immediately available.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, it looks to me as though that might as well go out on a point of order. I reserve the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the situation in reference to that is very simple. The area ways are very deep over there. One boy fell down and was nearly killed and was in the hospital for weeks.

Mr. MACON. If there is any danger about it, I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to that paragraph, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. But there is nothing to reserve the point of order on. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 210, at the end of line 14, insert: "Together with the following sums to be expended under the direction and supervision of the commission in control of the House Office Building appointed under the act approved March 4, 1907."

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will explain the purpose of the amendment to the gentleman. There are two commissions. One was a commission to have control of the construction of the building and the other a commission in charge of the building. The construction of the building has practically been completed. The commission is ready to make its final report. It consists of the Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH], and Mr. Richardson, of Tennessee. Mr. Richardson is not a Member of the House. The gentleman from Iowa intends to resign from the commission, and it is to make certain that only Members of the House shall have control of the expenditure of the money.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is not this also one of the purposes of the gentleman's amendment, to get the benefit of the provisions contained in the preceding paragraph, which was stricken out on a point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all. The gentleman will understand there were three items here providing appropriations in connection with the House Office Building. In the first a provision was inserted so that there would be no misunderstanding under what control the appropriations would be. That item has gone out of the bill. Now I offer the language to the item which has remained in the bill, and it will only cover whatever items remain in it. It is not in the bill at all now. We want to make it clear and unquestionable that somebody will have authority over the expenditures.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide suitable transportation for freight and other purposes in the subway leading from the Capitol to the House Office Building and in the subbasement corridors of the House Office Building, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including temporary operation, $18,237.20.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order. I will make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Arkansas on the point of order.

Mr. MACON. It is legislation upon an appropriation bill. This provides for suitable transportation for freight and other purposes. I suppose "other purposes" means automobiles to take Members from here to the House Office Building in the subway, and that being the case, I am opposed to it. It might mean the building of a street car in the subway. So far as carrying freight over is concerned, they seem to have facilities for doing that now, for I have seen them rolling it over there time after time since the subway was constructed. It is legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair, and the Chair hopes he is not in any way biased about it, that to provide for suitable transportation for freight and other purposes in the subway is like providing for any other of the ordinary things about a building which are necessary—the same as providing for a carpet or repairs in the Hall of the House. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 20, page 210, insert:
"Provided, That no part of such appropriation shall be used for the purchase, rent, or operation of automobiles for the conveyance of persons."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to prevent the use of any part of the appropriation for the establishment of a line of automobiles in the subway between the Capitol and the House Office Building for the transportation of Members of the House and their clerks, employees, and so forth, back and forth between the House Office Building and the Capitol.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Does it say that?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It does not, but it covers it. The attempt was made, I remember, when the sundry civil bill was up last year to provide for a line of automobiles between the House Office Building and the Capitol.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion? I suggest that the gentleman amend his amendment so that it will read "automobiles or mules."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; I do not think this Congress ought to make the amendment so broad and comprehensive as to prescribe what mode of transportation may be established in the next Congress.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. They will have mules then.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But, in all seriousness, I do not believe that the commission or the managers of the House Office Building ought to establish a line of automobiles between the Capitol and the House Office Building for the accommodation of Members.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Why not?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Because Members can walk back and forth between the Capitol and that building. We might as well provide automobiles to convey Members from the Capitol to their homes or hotels. It would be better and more convenient and would save the Members carfare at the expense of the Government. Occasionally, if a Member should not be able to come here without artificial means of transportation, we would have every right to provide for bringing him here; but to establish a line of automobiles for the convenience of Members generally in going back and forth between the Capitol and the House Office Building, to my mind, is objectionable, and therefore I propose this amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Of course, Members can walk if they want to anyway, and many would probably prefer to walk; but there are a number of committee rooms over there and Members are required to be there for the purpose of transacting their business and in attendance upon committees; and while they are over there the bell rings and they are required to be here to vote, and it takes in the neighborhood of 5 or 10 minutes' time to walk over here. I believe it would expedite the public business.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That would accentuate the embarrassment we are laboring under year after year regarding the absence of a quorum. It does not make any difference how a Member gets here, after a call of the House has been ordered, which occupies from 30 to 50 minutes' time. There is no Member who can not get here before the call is concluded. He has an abundance of time; but the idea of appropriating out of the public money for automobiles to convey Members of the House these few yards between the Capitol and the House Office Building I think is going a little beyond the limit of propriety.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit me a suggestion?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. GARRETT. The suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio is not practicable, because when the call comes every one over there is in a hurry, and you could not have an automobile big enough to carry the Members.

A MEMBER. They might have a line of them.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Nobody has contemplated or dreamed of the idea of automobiles I was going to say for the purpose of enlightening the gentleman.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If nobody has dreamed of starting automobiles, this amendment will not disturb anybody, and it is a safeguard against the purchase of automobiles for the purposes which I have described.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Would the gentleman have elevators in public buildings?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Of course I would have elevators in public buildings.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There men have to go up two or three flights of stairs, and according to the gentleman's idea we ought not to appropriate a lot of money to make it possible to help people up and down.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Elevators and chimneys and ventilators and windows and doors have come to be necessary parts of public buildings generally, but where is there outside of the National Capital, in any State capital or elsewhere, provision to haul by automobiles the members of the State senate and house of representatives to and from their hotels or an office building? None.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the State of North Dakota owns and operates a railroad between the State capitol and the city where the capitol is located.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then I suppose the gentleman from South Dakota hopes this amendment will not go through, while the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] tells us there is no probability of it; that it is not contemplated to establish automobiles.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I did not tell the gentleman what was to be done, but if the gentleman will listen, I will be glad to tell him what is in contemplation.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman will have opportunity when the sand runs out at the end of the five-minute "hour-glass" that belongs to me. Then the gentleman will have a turn at the wheel of oratory, and he can explain fully.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. After the gentleman has spent five minutes in fighting a man of straw.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is harmless, then. It is utterly innocuous; but I want the amendment in the bill as a matter of safety.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think it is only fair to the House to state just what is contemplated. It is not to put what are commonly called automobiles into this passageway, but to run cars upon a track with a single rail, narrow cars, which will be supported in an upright position by that which will take the place of an ordinary trolley. They will be operated by electric power, and they will complete the circuit around the lower halls of the Office Building. The gentleman knows that after you enter the Office Building it is two blocks, and very long blocks at that, to the offices at the southeast corner, and I think his office is in that portion of the building.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. As far as it is possible to get away from the Capitol.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. So that the distance from the Capitol to offices in the southeast corner would be in the neighborhood of three blocks or more. Frequently the delay in men getting here from the House Building on the call of the House or on calling the yeas and nays compels the reading clerks to call the roll slowly, in order to assemble the necessary majority here, and delay takes place in the House itself. It is proposed to have these little electric cars, furnished with power from the existing plant, going to and from the Office Building and completing the circuit of the corridors in the basement. It will so expedite the business of the House as to more than compensate for the expense. It is due to the older Members of this House, and they are found in every House. But we are not going to put in any automobiles in the ordinary acceptation of that term—not gasoline wagons, as the gentleman facetiously said as he rose—but we are proposing to put in these cars.

Now, whether the gentleman's prohibition of investment in automobiles will interfere with the construction of the railroad to which I have referred is gravely doubtful. Not knowing what was proposed, and the gentleman assuming that they would be automobiles, as they are in the Senate, therefore he so drew his amendment. It is only fair to him to tell him it is not proposed to put anything in there in the nature of an automobile.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will he inform me as to the proper legislative language that will describe the thing they propose to put in?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know how to frame an amendment to cover that new railway system, but I do believe that unless it runs on a rubber rail, with a rubber——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is a steel rail.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. With a steel rail it will make such noise and din that nobody can walk in the subway when it is running without risk of losing his hearing.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I have told the true plan in order that the gentleman might know what is doing and the House might know what is doing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think it is only proper to make another statement in connection with the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

When the rooms were distributed in the House Office Building the gentleman now occupying the chair made the statement to the House that means of transportation would be furnished between the House and the Office Building, and upon that statement a number of the committees which had rooms in the Capitol voluntarily agreed to go to the House Office Building.

There are a number of Members somewhat along in years, some men, unfortunately, who are suffering from physical disabilities, and it is a considerable inconvenience and at times a great injustice to compel them to make the trip from the farther part of the House Office Building to the Capitol on some emergency when their presence is required here. The Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds has submitted a tentative plan which will provide some method of conveyance, not only from the Capitol to the House Office Building, but around the building on the lower floor; and if at any time,

Mr. Chairman, some one should devise a system by which the personal responses in the calling of the roll could be eliminated and Members enabled to vote by a mechanical system, it would be absolutely essential that some method should be provided to come from the House Office Building to the Capitol more quickly than it can be done by Members walking. Fortunately I am not afflicted in any way that prevents me from walking to and fro between the House Office Building and the Capitol, and I hope that I shall not have an office in the House Office Building in the next Congress, but one in the Capitol.

I know that it does take considerable time for men walking hurriedly from where my office is located in the Office Building to this House. If plans were drawn and successfully carried out for the installation of a system by which the Members could be conveyed quickly, it would be very desirable to do so. I recall that at the time the House Office Building was first occupied it was through the understanding that some such system would be installed that many Members of the House were induced to give up their offices in the Capitol Building and go over there to the House Office Building. The original plans should be carried out as a matter of convenience and necessity.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. The gentleman does not mean that there should be machines over there like that one that was tried a year or two ago, by which the proceedings of the House would be communicated automatically to all of the rooms in the House Office Building, so that Members would know what is going on in the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. It has been suggested, though, and seriously considered, that there can be devised some mechanical apparatus by which Members could vote from their places in the House without wasting 30 minutes or 45 minutes in calling the roll. I have no doubt, if this House continues to enlarge from time to time, that some such method as that will be found imperative if the public business is to be transacted, and knowing the conditions under which many Members of the House labor and knowing the great injustice, and in some instances the pain, occasioned by the trip over and back, I believe this system should be installed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. It is first necessary to perfect the paragraph.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Then I wish to speak to that question. I do not think there is any need whatever for this appropriation. The only excuse for it is that some sort of a monorail vehicle will be placed in the tunnel for the accommodation of Members of the House in going to and coming from the House Office Building and this Chamber.

Now, I am getting to be along in years myself, older than the average Member of this House, and I certainly do not need any sort of a vehicle to bring me here or take me back, and I do not expect I shall need it for several years to come. It is better for every Member here, because the mortality has been great and is now great, to take a little exercise, physical exercise, and if a Member will not take it in any other way it is better that it should be forced upon him. It would be beneficial for the Members if they were obliged to walk back and forth from the northwest to this Capitol every day. Every Member would feel the better for it. It is better for the Members to walk above ground and get the fresh air than to ride or to walk in the subway.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is not a question of what is best for the Members, but it is a question of what is best for the administration and conduct of business in the House.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. What is best for the Members here is best for the conduct of the House, because unless the Members have good health and have good vitality they will not be able to do good business. Besides, we ought not here, in the closing days of this term, grab this little amount for our own luxury and accommodation. It looks as though we were determined to get all the luxuries and comforts for ourselves when other employees of the Government do not get the same consideration.

Besides, the roll is called twice on every roll call for the yeas and nays. By the time you reach the second roll call every man, even if he is a cripple and has to come over on crutches, can get here from the House Office Building. So what is saved? There are always a few absentees, and therefore the roll will always have to be called a second time, and by the time the first roll is called every man can be here to answer on the second call, and therefore I say that the whole paragraph should be eliminated. This appropriation is not relatively large, but by striking it out we show our good faith and our disposition not to impose on the taxpayers a heavier burden than is necessary.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, this is essentially a business proposition, and I am astonished to see any Member of this House oppose the recommendation of the bill. You might as well advocate a plan to eliminate all of the elevators in the public buildings, and in the hotels, on the theory that our health would be better if we were obliged to climb the stairs. The gentleman from New York refers to the time that is consumed in the first and second roll calls. If we could come over more expeditiously from the Office Building there would be fewer Members absent from the first roll call. Hence the second roll call would consume less time, and on the whole the roll would be called more expeditiously. There are many occasions when a man who is located, or engaged at a remote point of the Office Building, does not care to consume the time involved in walking to and fro through the subway. He wishes to come over and return in the least possible time, so as to get back to his work, just as a man on the first floor of one of these public buildings does not care to walk to the third or fourth, or fifth floor, as the case may be. He goes up by the elevator. The provision of the bill simply makes us, who are the servants of the public, more efficient, by enabling us to get to and from our work with the least possible expenditure of time.

Mr. CULLOP. Does not the gentleman think that a method of this kind would result in having more roll calls and preventing attendance here?

Mr. SAUNDERS. How in the world, Mr. Chairman, a gentleman can work out such a result from the scheme proposed, I can not see. We have a system like the proposed in operation in the subway leading from the Senate Chamber to the Senate Office Building. It works perfectly, works satisfactorily, for the movement of property, and the transportation of the Senators, and of the public. There has never been any criticism of that system on the part of any living soul that I am aware of.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Has not our method of walking to and fro through the subway worked well?

Mr. SAUNDERS. There is no compulsion in this matter, the gentleman from New York can walk if he pleases. We will not compel him to ride. He can take all the exercise he wants. [Laughter.]

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I want to make the rest of the gentlemen walk for their health.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not want to be compelled to walk, when it is to the prejudice of the public service. The cars will be used by the officials—and the public—as well as by the Members. By far the larger use will be by others than Members.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate close in five minutes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. But, Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. There might be no objection to this matter if it is a practicable proposition. One or two cars, such as they have at the Senate end, would not answer for the purposes for which this is designed. One or two cars with the same capacity as those that they have at the Senate end would not be sufficient. In a busy time when several committees are sitting in the House Office Building there may be 50 men over there, and in addition to committees others in their offices engaged in necessary work. The bells will ring and there will be a rush for these cars, and they will quickly be overcrowded. May I ask the gentleman if he can tell us whether these cars would be large enough to give reasonable accommodation?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that the plan the Superintendent of the Capitol has in mind—the system of rail transportation—will reasonably accommodate all of the Members of the House in the House Office Building within a reasonable time. If it requires three cars or four cars, that number which is required will be in use there. It will be a regular belt line, and Members who are occupying offices in the farthermost parts of the House Office Building will have access to that belt line as it comes around. They will be able to come over to the Capitol Building, and it will be operated in a sort of continuous round—something on the order of a moving sidewalk. Members will get on and come over as fast as they can, and they will be able to get away as quickly as they can. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman has no doubt that it will be a thoroughly practicable proposition?

Mr. TAWNEY. The cars which the superintendent has in contemplation will accommodate from 12 to 14 Members, and they will have as many of these cars as the necessities of the service require.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question. Is it contemplated that these cars will be perpetually in motion?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; not at night, when the House is not in session.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I mean when Congress is in session.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; when it is in session.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Then they will begin at 12 o'clock and run until the House adjourns.

Mr. TAWNEY. They will probably begin before the House starts. That is a matter of detail which will be worked out as the necessity of the service demands.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Does the gentleman believe that will facilitate and make more certain the attendance of Members?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Would it not tend to cause confusion and induce everybody to wait for a car rather than walk from the Office Building, and hence cause greater delay in securing attendance?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, they would not have to wait.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Another question——

Mr. TAWNEY. Any man can walk over if he wants to.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I am fully in sympathy with the gentleman from New York, who believes that walking is beneficial to the Members.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to say this: The necessity for some means of transportation, I think, must be recognized by every Member of the House who attends sessions of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when we are considering appropriation bills. It is seldom that we have more than 100 men on the floor of this House, and between the two sides of the House those 100 men are very often greatly disproportionate.

Now, when we have a vote by tellers, it is impossible for Members of the House to get over here to vote by tellers. Of course it is impossible for them to get here in time to vote on a rising vote, and tellers are frequently demanded merely for the purpose of affording Members in the Office Building an opportunity to get here. If we had some system of transportation that would enable them to come here in a shorter time than five to eight minutes, they could come here and participate in the votes in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. Within the last few days I have been elsewhere than in this Chamber, and I have heard a suggestion of no quorum made when it was stated that only seven or eight Members were present, and I have seen Members summoned to their place of duty, and when they answered to the roll call they would immediately leave again. Now, if we had railroad facilities running all the way around the building, would it not tend to cultivate a habit here that exists in some other place, namely, that of Members coming in, answering to their names or walking between tellers, and then immediately going out to take a ride on this new-fangled train contemplated by the provision under consideration?

Mr. TAWNEY. The case the gentleman cites is not parallel. The case he has in mind is where a gentleman was speaking and the men entitled to seats on the floor do not care to listen to him.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I grant that.

Mr. TAWNEY. And as soon as they went into the Chamber and answered to their names they went into the cloakroom again and enjoyed their cigars. I am talking about the transaction of the public business; I am not talking about entertainments or speeches.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Oh, yes, I understand; but gentlemen who want to participate in the transaction of public business know when the House convenes and they will remain here unless you and the other gentlemen who are supporting this item make it so easy for them to leave as to invite them to do so.

Mr. TAWNEY. Unfortunately, if they do know when the House convenes and is conducting public business, yet they are not here.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. They might not come if you give them an opportunity to ride.

Mr. TAWNEY. Of course, it is entirely within the control of the House, and if it should transpire that this should keep Members away from the floor, they could tear up the railroad track at any time.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I for one am not willing to advertise that the membership of the House is so decrepit that we can not walk to the Office Building and back to the Capitol in the discharge of duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Beginning at line 15, page 210, strike out down to and including 20.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL) there were—ayes 31, noes 68.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York demands tellers. As many as are in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Fourteen gentlemen; not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that this paragraph endeavors to perpetuate the present commission controlling the House Office Building, and it adds to that commission Mr. CHAMP CLARK.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken; it is not the House Office Building Commission.

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes; I think so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; under the law providing the alteration of this Chamber another commission was appointed.

A MEMBER. Who were they?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It consists of the Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], and that commission had authority to make a contract. I wish the gentleman to have these facts, and then he can go on with his statement. The commission have authority to make a contract for the alteration of this Hall. Before attempting to enter into any contract the commission reported to the Committee on Appropriations that it preferred that the House should have an opportunity to pass upon this question, and that if the alterations were to be made they felt that the gentleman who has already practically been selected as Speaker in the next House should be in a position to have something to do with the work. It is not, however, the House Office Commission.

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, I thank the gentleman for that explanation, and I desire to ask now if I am correct in stating that the personnel of this commission will be entirely Republican, except Mr. CHAMP CLARK——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It continues Mr. HOWARD.

Mr. CLAYTON. But Mr. HOWARD is not a Member elect to the next House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true, but unless he should resign, under some previous rulings he would continue to be a member of that commission.

Mr. CARLIN. But Mr. HOWARD would not want to continue—he is not drawing any salary—and that would leave us with only one Democratic representative on the commission.

Mr. MCCALL. This commission was provided for before it was known the gentleman from Georgia would not be a Member of the next House, and I think everybody will agree with me that no more competent gentleman could be selected for that work. He was a member of the commission which had authority under the statute, which I think the gentleman from Alabama assisted in having passed, to make a contract for this work. Now, the gentleman from Georgia is perfectly willing to retire. It seems to me that as he has been with the commission up to the present time it would assist very much and it would be very advantageous to the House to have him continue in the position, and he was willing to do that. But it also seemed to me the next Speaker of the House should be added to the commission. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that I shall be very willing to have any other Member added here that his side of the House desires, so that with the gentleman from Georgia that side will have at least three Members. I would say that the plans have been practically perfected in regard to this work, and I should dislike not to have the gentleman from Georgia be a member of the commission.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask—has the contract been let——

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor, and I desire to have some small part in the colloquy. [Laughter.] I may say, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that I quite concur in his desire which he has expressed to have the House avail itself of the services and the experience of Mr. HOWARD of Georgia, but I think, Mr. Chairman, it is not fair to a Democratic House to have a commission that is going to provide for the expenditure of such a sum—I believe $350,000 is the amount it is going to cost—with only one Democratic Member on that commission. It hardly seems fair, and I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that while he is adding Mr. CLARK, and while he wants to retain Mr. HOWARD, why not add, say, two other Democrats to it?

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I should be very glad, and I suppose it is in order now to move to add other Members to the commission—to make the motion at the proper time for two gentlemen to be added from that side of the House.

Mr. CLAYTON. And I would be quite content.

Mr. McCALL. The gentleman from Alabama had some part in this work two years ago, and he or some gentleman, like the gentleman from Kentucky or the gentleman from New York, of the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the gentleman will make some such suggestion at the proper time. But I would prefer that the gentleman permit me in that connection to say that I think it would be better for him to add some Member from the Appropriations Committee, somebody else rather than the "gentleman from Alabama." I am not seeking any more work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, is it in order for us to perfect the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. McCALL. I will move to add the names of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "CLARK," in line 16, page 211, insert: "Representative JOHN J. FITZGERALD and Representative SWAGAR SHERLEY."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.
